The Prime Minister: Mr. Wallace and Mr. Holroyd have made a number of allegations in relation to Northern Ireland, some of which have been raised in the House and in correspondence by the hon. Gentleman and others. In the course of dealing with this parliamentary business, Departments have examined relevant matters on numerous occasions.

Article 100A

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if she will raise at the next meeting of the European Council the use by the Commission of article 100A of the treaty for the purpose of directives.

The Prime Minister: I do not plan to do so.

Whales

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make representations to the Japanese Prime Minister about the slaughter of minke whales by Japanese whalers in the Antarctic.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 12 January 1990]: The Japanese Government are well aware of our strong views on this matter, as was evident from my discussions with Prime Minister Kaifu.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Accountancy Firms

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many outside accountancy firms are employed by his Department; whether such employment is subject to guidelines; and whether he takes steps before employing an accountancy firm to discover whether that firm has been censured by Department of Trade and Industry inspectors in their inquiries under the Companies Act.

Mr. Cope: Forty-three outside accountancy firms are employed; such firms are invited to tender for the provision of advisory services on the basis of their suitability to provide the relevant advice. In making such appointments inquiries are carried out as necessary and, where appropriate, in the light of advice given by Her Majesty's Treasury on the appointment of consultants.

RUC Reserve

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the average length of service of all full-time Royal Ulster Constabulary reserve officers presently serving in the force.

Mr. Cope: The average length of service of all full-time reserve officers presently serving in the Royal Ulster Constabulary is six years.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the estimated cost to the Exchequer, taking into account all factors including their position in respect of the police pension fund, of employing (a) a full-time Royal Ulster Constabulary reserve officer and (b) a regular Royal Ulster Constabulary officer.

Mr. Cope: The annual cost to the Police Authority of employing a full-time Royal Ulster Constabulary reserve constable or a Royal Ulster Constabulary constable varies according to the age of the officer and his length of service. The estimated annual average cost of employing an 18-year-old constable in the full-time Royal Ulster Constabulary reserve is £18,624 and £18,068 for a constable in the Royal Ulster Constabulary. The corresponding figures for officers with six years' service are £23,592 for the reserve constable and £23,837 for the regular officer. The difference in cost is accounted for by higher employer's national insurance contributions payable in respect of the full-time reserve constable who is not in a contracted-out pension scheme; and the fact that his salary increases at a slower rate than that of a regular constable. These costs represent basic salary, Royal Ulster Constabulary allowance, flat rate rent allowance, average overtime and employer's national insurance contributions and, in the case of the Royal Ulster Constabulary reserve officer with six years' service, the gratuity payable on completion of his second contract.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the longest period of service of any full-time Royal Ulster Constabulary reserve officer; how many Royal Ulster Constabulary reserve officers have served for more than 12 years; how many between nine and 12 years; and how many between six and nine years.

Mr. Cope: The longest period of service of any full-time Royal Ulster Constabulary reserve officer is 17 years nine months: 256 full-time reserve officers have served for more than 12 years; 947 have service between nine and 12 years; and 685 have served between six and nine years.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the total number of full-time Royal Ulster Constabulary reserve officers; and if he will express this as a percentage of all Royal Ulster Constabulary constables who normally carry out their duties in uniform.

Mr. Cope: At 31 December 1989 the total number of full-time Royal Ulster Constabulary reserve officers was 3,018. This represents approximately 28 per cent. of all constables in the Royal Ulster Constabulary and Royal Ulster Constabulary full and part-time reserve.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans the Government have (a) to provide access for full-time Royal Ulster Constabulary reserve officers to the police pension fund and (b) to approve the payment of an employers' contribution to a private pension scheme for full-time Royal Ulster Constabulary reserve officers.

Mr. Cope: None.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans the Government have to incorporate full-time Royal Ulster Constabulary reserve officers into the regular force after a specific period of service.

Mr. Cope: None.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what system of negotiation, conciliation or arbitration exists for full-time Royal Ulster Constabulary reserve officers; and what are the rules under which this system operates.

Mr. Cope: There is no formal system of negotiation, conciliation or arbitration but before the Secretary of State makes regulations about pay and conditions of service for the RUC reserve he consults the Police Authority, the Chief Constable and the Police Association.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether full-time Royal Ulster Constabulary reserve officers are (a) precluded from negotiating their conditions of employment, pay, pension, etc. under the normal terms of industrial relations legislation and (b) excluded from the joint police negotiating board of England, Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland.

Mr. Cope: RUC reserve officers, like their fellow officers in the regular force, do not come within the terms of industrial relations legislation. The RUC reserve is not included within the remit of the police negotiating board for the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the Government have any plans to replace or modify the present short-term contract system of employment for full-time Royal Ulster Constabulary reserve officers.

Mr. Cope: No.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the Government intend to replace or amend the system of negotiation, conciliation or arbitration for Royal Ulster Constabulary reserve officers.

Mr. Cope: No.

Anglo-Irish Agreement

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the future of the Anglo-Irish Agreement.

Mr. Brooke: The Government are committed to the Anglo-Irish Agreement and to the principles it embodies. As recorded in paragraph 29 of the report of the review of the working of the conference:

> "If in the future it were to appear that the objectives of the Agreement could be more effectively served by changes in the scope and nature of the working of the Conference, consistent with the basic provisions and spirit of the Agreement, the two Governments would be ready in principle to consider such changes".

Captain Fred Holroyd

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will acquire for the library of the Northern Ireland Office a copy of the book "War Without Honour" by Fred Holroyd.

Mr. Brooke: The Northern Ireland Office already possesses copies of Mr. Holroyd's book.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will now allow independent inspection on Privy Councillor terms of the records of his office relating to contacts with Fred Holroyd.

Mr. Brooke: No.

Minister's Car (Theft)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether any Government papers were included in the recent theft from the motor car being used by the hon. Member for Peterborough (Dr. Mawhinney); and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: None.

ENERGY

Energy Exploration, Doncaster and Rotherham

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the sites in the Doncaster and Rotherham areas that are due to be drilled by geologists seeking oil and gas.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Proposals to drill for oil and gas are subject to approval by my right hon. Friend. No such proposals have been submitted to him by current holders of petroleum licences in the Doncaster and Rotherham areas.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will name the 30 companies that have been granted Government licences to explore in the Doncaster and Rotherham areas for oil and gas.

Mr. Peter Morrison: There are 19 companies with interests in petroleum licences within a radius of five miles from Doncaster and Rotherham.

These are as follows:

Exploration Licence EXL 050
Fina Petroleum Development Ltd*, Blackland Exploration Ltd, Eaglestone Petroleum Ltd
EXL 100
Clyde Expro plc*, Phillips Petroleum Co UK Ltd
EXL 138
Sovereign Oil & Gas plc*, Coalite Group plc, LASMO (TNS) Ltd, Union Texas Petroleum Ltd
EXL 182
Teredo Petroleum plc*, East Midland Oil & Gas Ltd, Croft Exploration Ltd
EXL 183
Pentex Oil Ltd*
Production Licence PL 161
Kelt UK Ltd*, Candecca Resources plc, Elf Oil & Gas (UK) Ltd, James Finlay plc, Marinex Exploration Ltd, Pict Petroleum plc
* denotes operator

Of these, EXL 182 and EXL 183 were awarded in the third onshore licensing round, announced on 14 December 1989.

Condensate Boilers

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what estimates he has made of the reduction of carbon dioxide from condensate boilers.

Mr. Peter Morrison: It is very difficult to give a precise figure as performance of gas condensing boilers used in space heating applications varies according to specific circumstances. However the average efficiency of a new non-condensing boiler in the domestic sector can be taken as 70 per cent. and that of a condensing boilef as 85 per cent. leading to a reduction of the CO_2 emitted of 18 per cent.

Renewable Energy

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what plans he has to re-evaluate the role of (a) renewable energy technologies and (b) combined heat and power and biomass energy production in the context of environmental damage from fossil fuels.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Energy paper No. 55 laid out proposals for the development of renewable energy technologies and these are reviewed annually. An initial assessment of the contribution to reducing the impact of greenhouse emissions from a range of energy technologies, including CHP and biomass, was included in the United Kingdom study for the inter-governmental panel on climate change. This report "An Evaluation of Energy-Related Greenhouse Gas Emissions and Measures to Ameliorate Them" was lodged in the Library of the House last November and will be published shortly as a Department of Energy paper. Further re-evaluation may be required as more information on greenhouse emissions becomes available.

Plutonium

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what action he is taking to assess the current location of all plutonium created in United Kingdom electricity board magnox reactors since the nuclear programme began.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Member to the details of plutonium produced at Britain's civil nuclear power stations which were published by my Department on 5 December 1989. Copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

Mining Subsidence

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he has any proposals to change the present arrangements for appeals against decisions by British Coal on claims concerning the effects of mining subsidence brought by individuals and organisations against that company;

(2) if he will set up local arbitration panels to resolve all claims concerning mining subsidence in respect of private dwellings, and up to £50,000, index-linked, in respect of other property.

Mr. Baldry: In line with the recommendations of the Waddilove report, the Government, in the White Paper "The Repair and Compensation System for Coal Mining Subsidence Damage", Cm. 235, undertook to review in November 1990 the procedures for resolving disputes over subsidence damage. In view of the Government's intention to legislate at the earliest practicable opportunity, this review has been brought forward and is presently under way.

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the number of mining subsidence claims, by coalfield or British Coal administrative region, currently being processed by British Coal.

Mr. Baldry: Details of British Coal's subsidence claims for 1987-88 are contained in an annual report to the Secretary of State for Energy, copies of which have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses. I hope that the annual report for 1988-89 will be available shortly.

Gas-fired Power Stations

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy further to his answer to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras of 8 January, Official Report, column 475, if he will give the output capacity of each of the gas-fired projects listed together with the likely annual gas consumption in each case.

Mr. Wakeham: The applications from the CEGB for section 2 consent under the Electric Lighting Act 1909 are for gas-fired stations, of the following proposed capacities:

	Megawatt
Killingholme A	1000
Little Barford	700
Killingholme (PowerGen)	700-1000
Rye House	700

The capacities of the stations proposed by independent generators are matters for them.

The projects are at early planning or development stages and gas contracts are in most cases not yet in place.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) how many applications for consent to build gas-fired power stations have been received but not yet granted;

(2) whether he has refused any applications for consent to build a gas-fired power station.

Mr. Wakeham: I have received four applications from the CEGB for my consent to construct combined cycle gas turbine power stations. I shall announce my decisions on these applications in due course.

Electricity Supply

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what representations he has received about the absence of any obligation to supply electricity once electricity supply is privatised.

Mr. Wakeham: The area boards will continue to have an obligation to offer terms for a supply. Every customer will be able to find a supplier and regulations will continue to prescribe the quality and safety of supplies. Licence conditions on all suppliers will ensure current standards of security. I regularly receive correspondence and hold meetings with individuals, trade associations and other interested bodies on all aspects of the workings of our proposals for the privatised electricity market.

Gas Leaks

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what are current levels of natural gas leakages; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I would refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce) on 26 October last.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what research his Department has commissioned or proposes into the incidence of natural gas leakages; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: My Department has already published estimates of United Kingdom methane emissions, including those from natural gas leakage. Discussions on further work with interested parties are in hand.

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what steps are being taken to reduce overall levels of carbon dioxide emissions within the natural gas industry in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The natural gas industry itself is responsible for only a small proportion of total carbon dioxide emissions. British Gas puts a substantial engineering and R&D effort into technologies to improve the efficiency with which gas is used, thereby helping to reduce the carbon dioxide emissions of its customers.

Natural Gas

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how much natural gas he estimates will be used for the production of electricity in the United Kingdom in 1995 and 2000.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The amount of gas used for the production of electricity in the United Kingdom in 1995 and 2000 will depend on many factors. The attractions of gas to power generators together with the availability of competitive UKCS gas supplies seeking new markets suggest that gas burn in electricity generation will increase in the 1990s.

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the average cost of producing natural gas from the United Kingdom continental shelf; and what information he has as to the cost of the most economic method so far recorded of gasifying coal.

Mr. Peter Morrison: To date some £12 billion has been spent in developing our natural gas resources on the continental shelf and some 260 billion therms of gas have been produced. This gives a simple average cost over the past two decades, excluding exploration costs and a return on capital, of some 5·0 pence per therm.

The Watt committee report number 20, published last year with financial support from my Department, provides a comprehensive assessment of the costs of coal gasification. The production costs of the cheapest method are about twice the cost of the coal feedstock used. The average price of coal purchased by large United Kingdom industrial consumers in the third quarter of 1989 was 15 pence per therm.

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he is prepared to authorise connection with the European gas grid to supplement gas supplies from the United Kingdom continental shelf.

Mr. Peter Morrison: It is for the private sector to bring forward proposals for the financing and construction of a connection with the European gas grid. Known reserves of natural gas in the UKCS are, as presently assessed, capable of meeting the needs of the United Kingdom gas market competitively for the foreseeable future. The Government will give full consideration to any proposal to build a marine pipeline link to the European gas grid on the merits of the case.

Underground Miners

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many men were working underground in mines operated by British Coal in 1978-79 and each succeeding year.

Mr. Wakeham: The numbers of underground wage earners on British Coal's colliery books at the end of the following years were:

1978-79	185·1
1979-80	185·8
1980-81	181·0
1981-82	171·9
1982-83	164·4
1983-84	147·5
1984-85	139·2
1985-86	113·7
1986-87	91·1
1987-88	74·6
1988-89	68·7

HOME DEPARTMENT

Traffic Wardens

63. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will outline the main role of traffic wardens.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The main role of traffic wardens is to assist the police in the enforcement of parking regulations.

Fixed Penalties

64. Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his plans to alter the fixed penalty level for illegal parking.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I would refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Hertfordshire, West (Mr. Jones) on 20 December 1989 at column 275.

Centrally Funded Information

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish details of centrally funded information prepared by his Department, or by the Central Office of Information on his Department's behalf, supplied to police forces in England and Wales, in each year since 1983; and if he will indicate the languages of publication for this material.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Following is a list of the publications produced by the Home office public relations branch since 1 April 1986 for issue to police forces in England and Wales. Where the publication was produced in other languages, as well as English, this is shown. Details of publications for earlier years and of those which were produced without the assistance of the public relations branch are not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Disclosure of Information

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received concerning the disclosure of information from the electoral register without the consent or knowledge of the voter; whether he has any plans to introduce regulations to allow voters to consent to the sale of their name and address; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: During 1989 we received two letters from members of the public and one from an hon. Member about disclosure of information from the electoral register without the elector's consent. We have no plans to introduce regulations to require the consent of electors to the sale of their names and addresses. The operation of the electoral registration system requires that all the information in the register should be freely available to the public. The provisions of the Representation of the People Regulations 1986 governing the publication and supply of the register reflect this fact and the conclusion that its use by commercial organisations could not effectively be prevented.

Police Assaults (Wales)

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the figures, on a force by force basis, of police officers who suffered violent assaults over the recent Christmas and new year period in Wales.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand from the chief constables concerned that, during the period from 22 December 1989 up to and including 1 January 1990, the numbers of police officers in Wales who were physically attacked were as follows:

	Number
Gwent	8
Dyfed Powys	5
North Wales	19
South Wales	33

Cigarette Sales

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action the Government propose to take to enforce the law on the prohibition of selling cigarettes to children under the age of 16 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The enforcement of the law is a matter for trading standards officers and the police. However, we are concerned that the prohibition on sales of tobacco to children should be effective and are currently considering what steps might be taken to strengthen the law in this area.

Birmingham Six

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what conclusion he has reached as a result of the meeting he had this week with the Irish Minister for Foreign Affairs about the Birmingham Six.

Mr. Waddington: I explained to Mr. Collins when I met him on 8 January that I was giving very careful consideration to further material which had been submitted to me on behalf of the Birmingham Six. I will decide as soon as possible whether that further material justifies any intervention on my part.

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he next expects to meet members of the European Parliament Committee set up to consider the soundness of the conviction of the Birmingham Six.

Mr. Waddington: As I said in my reply to a question from my hon. Friend on 30 November 1989, I understand that the Legal Affairs Committee of the European Parliament has not yet decided whether to conduct an inquiry into the case of the Birmingham Six, and if so, what its terms of reference should be. We believe that it would be inappropriate for the European Parliament to inquire into the convictions of the Birmingham Six, which we regard as a matter wholly outside the Parliament's competence.

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has now had an opportunity of considering fresh evidence presented to him before Christmas by lawyers representing the Birmingham Six; and if he has reached a conclusion.

Mr. Waddington: I am considering very carefully the further material which has been presented to me by a solicitor on behalf of the Birmingham Six, and will decide as soon as possible whether it justifies any intervention on my part.

Mr. Albert Baker

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is yet able to make a further statement as to the case of Mr. Albert Baker and his request for a transfer to a prison in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Mellor: Mr. Baker was informed in a petition reply dated 24 November 1989 that, because of the risk to his own safety if transferred to Northern Ireland, it had been decided to refuse his latest request.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent petitions have been received from Mr. Albert Baker, Her Majesty's prison Full Sutton, No. 241254.

Mr. Mellor: Mr. Baker last petitioned on 12 September 1989, when he wrote about the withdrawal of his special category status in 1973 following his transfer from a prison in Northern Ireland. A reply was sent on 22 November.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what dates, and for what reasons, Mr. Albert Baker, Her Majesty's prison Full Sutton, No. 241254, was held in a punishment unit.

Mr. Mellor: Mr. Baker was removed from normal association under the terms of prison rule 43 when, on reception at Full Sutton prison on 23 November 1989, he refused to wear prison clothing. When he agreed to do so on 2 December, he was placed on ordinary location.

Mr. Colin Wallace

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what date he intends to reply to the correspondence sent to him by the hon. Member for Brent, East and from Mr. Colin Wallace in August 1989 concerning the case of Mr. Colin Wallace; and if he will make a statement as to the reason for the delay in replying.

Mr. John Patten: I hope to be able to reply shortly to the hon. Member for Brent, East (Mr. Livingstone) and to Mr. Colin Wallace. It has not been possible to send earlier substantive replies pending completion of our consideration of relevant material contained in Mr. Paul Foot's book, "Who Framed Colin Wallace".

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has concluded his consideration of the conviction of Mr. Colin Wallace for manslaughter in the light of evidence of a conspiracy to pervert the course of justice set out in the book entitled, "Who Framed Colin Wallace", by Paul Foot, referred to in his written reply of 15 May 1989, Official Report, column 96; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. and learned Friend hopes shortly to complete his consideration of the material contained in Mr. Foot's book.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will institute an inquiry into the conduct of the Sussex police force when investigating the murder charge against Mr. Colin Wallace in the light of allegations of conspiracy to pervert the course of justice made in the book, "Who Framed Colin Wallace", by Mr. Paul Foot and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I will shortly write to the hon. Member.

Replies to Correspondence

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average time taken to reply to correspondence sent from (a) hon. Members and (b) the public.

Mr. Waddington: The average time taken in my Department during the fourth quarter of 1989 to reply to letters to Ministers and to the Secretary to the Immigration and Nationality Board, the great majority of which were from hon. Members, was 37 days. Information is not held centrally on the time taken to reply to letters from members of the public.

Prison Diets

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many of Her Majesty's prisons in the United Kingdom supply diets in accordance with religious belief on a regular basis; and what preparations are being made by prisons to supply such diets, on request, on a regular basis;

(2) if he will issue instructions to the governors of Her Majesty's prisons to make necessary arrangements to enable prisoners who wish on religious grounds to eat particular diets, to be able to receive such diets on a regular basis; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what representations he has received over the past year, including from those detained in prison, about difficulties in obtaining halal and kosher food on a regular basis.

Mr. Mellor: Other than the annual census of religious registration in prisons each February, details are not recorded centrally of inmates who belong to religious faiths or of their location. In total about 144,000 meals are served daily to inmates in prison service establishments in England and Wales, of which about 6,500 (5 per cent.) are estimated to be variations from the normal dietary on account of religious belief.

All meals are prepared according to centrally determined dietary scales designed to meet published nutritional standards. Each establishment prepared special meals and also varies its standard menus to take into account recognised food preferences.

The number of meals served each day to certain minority faiths is estimated as follows:

4,700 for Muslims
1,000 for Jews
400 for Sikhs
300 for Hindus
160 for Buddhists

Halal meat may be purchased locally on an occasional basis in recognition of those Muslims who do not wish to eat non-halal meat. Substitutes for bacon and pork are provided and vegetarian margarine is issued. Alternatively, Muslims may apply either for a vegetarian diet or a vegan diet which excludes all animal and dairy products.

A kosher diet is not provided in prison service establishments in England and Wales. The arrangements are that substitutes for bacon and pork are issued in their place and kosher margarine is issued in lieu of the ordinary margarine. Orthodox Jews may apply for a vegan diet if this is considered preferable.

The Home Office is engaged in ongoing discussions with the Muslim and Jewish authorities as part of the continuous review of the facilities which are offered to prisoners belonging to these faiths.

Mr. Rupert Taylor

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police for the Metropolis on the disciplinary proceedings taken against the Metropolitan police constable, found by a High Court jury on 5 December 1989, to have planted cannabis on Mr. Rupert Taylor.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No. I understand that following the award to Mr. Taylor an investigation into the circumstances of his case is being carried out by an officer from the Thames Valley police under the supervision of the Police Complaints Authority. No decision has yet been taken as to whether any officer connected with the case will face disciplinary proceedings.

In order for an officer to be found guilty at a disciplinary hearing the offence must be proved beyond reasonable doubt and not, as in civil proceedings, on the balance of probabilities.

Detective Superintendent John Moore

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the West Midlands as to when Detective Superintendent John Moore retired; and what his age and length of service were at the time of retirement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No.

West Midlands Police

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the West Midlands as to where and in what capacity (a) Detective Superintendent Alan Watson, (b) Detective Sergeant Michael French, (c) Detective Constable John Brand, (d) Detective Constable Thomas Sutcliffe, (e) Police Constable George Cole, (f) Detective Sergeant David Millichamp, (g) Detective Constable Terence Woodwiss, (h) Detective Constable Douglas Bell, (i) Detective Sergeant Richard Bryant, (j) Detective Constable Colin Morris, (k) Detective Constable Frederick Jennings, and (l) Police Constable William Coltey are still serving.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No.

Detective Superintendent David Palmer-Hall

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if during his service with the Metropolitan police, Detective Superintendent David Palmer-Hall was seconded for work with the Jordanian Government.

Mr. Waddington: No.

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the Metropolitan police as to how long and in what capacities Mr. David Palmer-Hall was employed by the Metropolitan police.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Mr. Palmer-Hall joined the Metropolitan police in 1950 and retired in 1980. He served in Special Branch from 1952 until his retirement.

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for reports from the chief constables of Surrey and Hampshire on the progress of their investigations into the disappearance over 24 hours of former Detective Superintendent David Palmer-Hall.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand from the chief constable of Surrey, whose force was in charge of the inquiry into the disappearance, that the police have completed their investigation and it has not revealed any criminal activity relating to former Detective Superintendent Palmer-Hall's brief absence from home.

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what employment Mr. David Palmer-Hall has had with Her Majesty's Government since 1982.

Mr. Waddington: There is no record that Mr. Palmer-Hall was employed by the Home Office during the relevant period. My Department does not maintain records of employment in other Departments.

Sikh Priests

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement setting out his policy in respect of priests of the Sikh religion applying to enter the United Kingdom for the purposes of carrying out religious duties for a specific period; and whether the policy has been discussed with the Government of India.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The provisions in the immigration rules (HC. 388) for the admission of ministers of religion apply to all religions.

Civil Emergency Centres

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what account he has taken of developments in East-West relations in reviewing his policy on the building of civil emergency centres by county and district councils.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 12 January 1990]: The Government keep under review their civil defence planning assumptions in the light of the possible threat of hostilities. Such assumptions must take into account military capabilities as well as likely intentions and the climate of relations between East and West. In the present rapidly changing situation it would be premature and irresponsible to reduce our basic preparedness for ensuring the protection of the population and the continuity of government in war.

Concessionary Television Licences

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many outstanding applications from local authorities over television concessionary licences are currently being considered by the National Television Licensing Records Office in Bristol and how many of these were submitted (a) six months ago and over, and (b) three months ago and over;

(2) what is the average time the National Television Licensing Records Office in Bristol aims to deal with applications from local authorities for concessionary television licences on behalf of their residents.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 12 January 1990]: Of the 33,000 schemes submitted since the regulations were changed in 1988 25,000 have been dealt with, a further 4,000 will shortly receive their licences and 4,000 remain unresolved pending further information which has been requested from the local authorities concerned. Statistics of waiting times are not readily available, but many original applications took a long time because of their number and the need for further detailed inquiries. NTVLRO now aims to resolve new applications within three weeks of receiving all the necessary information from the local authority concerned.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many representations have been received from local authorities in the past 18 months regarding difficulties over concessionary television licences being granted to those living in old-age pension accommodation;

(2) if he, or any Minister in his Department, will receive a deputation from the Walsall metropolitan borough council over the difficulties it is having in obtaining television concessionary licences for residents living in old-age pension designated accommodation.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 12 January 1990]: Between the change in the regulations in May 1988 and the end of December 1989 we received 83 letters from local authorities, 68 forwarded by hon. Members, about the concessionary television licence scheme. Ministers also received two delegations from local authorities.

I would be happy to consider any letter from, or on behalf of Walsall metropolitan borough council, setting out why a meeting would be useful.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate of the annual cost of granting the concessionary television licence available to sheltered housing residents to every pensioner in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 12 January 1990]: Reduction of the annual licence fee for all pensioner households to the £5 concessionary rate would cause a revenue loss estimated at £365 million a year. To make up the shortfall the fee for all other colour licence payers would have to increase from £66 to £98.

Vehicle Smoke Tests

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police prosecutions, under the Road Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations, of vehicles producing excessive smoke, have taken place in each of the last five years.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 12 January 1990]: The available information is given in the table for 1985 and 1986. The emission of smoke proceedings were brought under the Motor Vehicle (Construction and Use) Regulations 1978.

Proceedings at Magistrates courts in England and Wales.

Emission of smoke etc. causing danger	286	338
Other emission of smoke offences	389	309

Sources: Offences relating to motor vehicles England and Wales 1985, 1986 Supplementary tables. Published by the Home Office.

Since 1987, the statistics collected no longer separately identify offences of emission of smoke. Since October 1986, vehicles defect offences can also be dealt with by the use of fixed penalties, but emission of smoke offences are not shown separately in these statistics.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Official Duties

48. Mr. Winnick: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list his official duties for 15 January.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: This morning I had meetings with the Prime Minister and other colleagues, and with Duchy of Lancaster officials. This afternoon I shall spend time attending to Duchy business.

Bolton

49. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he next intends to visit Bolton.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I last visited Bolton in November 1988. I have no plans to visit again in the immediate future, but I am always willing to come and support my hon. Friend.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Order Paper

58. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Lord President of the Council what measures he is considering to reduce the amount of material printed on the Order Paper.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: A significant reduction in the average size of the daily Vote bundle has already been achieved as a result of the new arrangements introduced last April for printing early-day motions. That is expected to result in at least 4,000 fewer pages being printed each year, and in savings in production costs of at least £300,000 a year. I have now also initiated a general examination of the form of the Vote bundle, including the Order Paper, and if my hon. Friend has any specific suggestions for reducing further the amount of material printed, I hope that he will not hesitate to put them to the Accommodation and Administration Sub-Committee.

Prime Minister's Press Secretary

59. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will establish facilities in the House for the Prime Minister's press secretary.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I have no plans to do so.

Public Accounts Committee

60. Mr. Butler: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he has any plans to relieve overcrowding in the Committee Room Corridor prior to and during sittings of the Public Accounts Committee.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I am aware of the great interest that both the press and the public have shown in sittings of the Public Accounts Committee. I have asked the authorities of the House to ensure that those waiting for admittance to the Committee do not impede access along the Committee Corridor.

Souvenir Kiosk

61. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Lord President of the Council what were the takings at the House of Commons kiosk in (a) the four weeks to Christmas 1989 and (b) the year to 31 December; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: Kiosk takings for the four-week period to Christmas 1989 were £207,647 and the figure for the 12-month period to Christmas was £645,325. Both amounts include VAT.

Parking (Disabled)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will make more car parking facilities available in the precincts of the House for those who are disabled including staff employed by right hon. and hon. Members.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: As I advised the hon. Member on 26 October, column 524, the parking arrangements for disabled drivers were confirmed by the Accommodation and Administration Sub-Committee in January 1988. At that time it was found that the spaces available were sufficient to meet the requirement, but if the hon. Member will let me have details of any specific difficulties being experienced, I shall invite the Sub-Committee to consider them.

TRANSPORT

British Rail

11. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he proposes to make any changes in the level of financial support given to the provision of British Rail local services.

Mr. Portillo: The Government show their firm commitment to maintaining essential local services by paying substantial subsidies to British Rail, amounting to some £500 million in the current financial year. By 1993 Network SouthEast should no longer require revenue subsidy, but we shall still be paying well over £300 million per year in today's prices to subsidise provincial rail services.

16. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next plans to meet the chairman of British Rail; and what matters will be discussed.

Mr. Parkinson: I plan to meet the chairman of British Rail on 17 January when we will discuss a variety of railway matters.

33. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next plans to meet the chairman of British Rail to discuss matters of safety.

Mr. Portillo: We expect to receive next month the chairman's first report on the implementation of Sir Anthony Hidden's recommendations following the Clapham junction accident. My right hon. Friend hopes to discuss this report with the chairman soon afterwards.

Channel Tunnel

12. Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a further statement on plans for the high-speed railway line to the Channel tunnel.

Mr. Parkinson: British Rail is now negotiating a detailed agreement with its joint venture partners and developing its plans for the Channel tunnel rail link. It aims to introduce a Bill for the new line later this year.

19. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures are being taken to improve transport links between Yorkshire and the Channel tunnel.

Mr. Portillo: Improvements to the M1, A1(M) and A1 will upgrade links to the Channel tunnel from Yorkshire and the north-east via the M25 and M20. British Rail published its proposals on 14 December, and a copy has been sent to all hon. Members.

29. Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has met the chairman of British Rail to discuss plans for international rail services through the Channel tunnel.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend has discussed a wide range of issues at his meetings with the chairman of British Rail. These have included the board's plans for international rail services through the Channel tunnel.

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a further statement on plans for the high-speed rail link to the Channel tunnel.

Mr. Portillo: British Rail is now negotiating a detailed agreement with its joint venture partners and developing its plans for the Channel tunnel rail link. It aims to introduce a Bill for the new line later this year.

Rural Transport

13. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent representations he has received about rural transport.

Mr. Portillo: I have received very few recent representations about rural transport services. Bus mileage in country areas has increased since bus deregulation. The investment in British Rail's provincial sector is such that we shall shortly be in the position where four fifths of the rolling stock has been renewed.

14. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the present state of rural transport.

Mr. Portillo: Bus mileage outside London and the metropolitan areas has increased by some 21 per cent. since bus deregulation, with some 83 per cent. run commercially. The investment in British Rail's provincial sector is such that we shall shortly be in the position where four fifths of the rolling stock has been renewed.

Urban Transport

15. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures his Department is taking to assist inner urban areas.

Mr. Parkinson: Our measures to assist inner urban areas include financing local road schemes through transport supplementary grant; constructing trunk roads where appropriate; providing grant under section 56 of the Transport Act 1968 for public transport; and consolidating the regeneration of London's docklands with the approval of the Jubilee line extension.

Urban Traffic

17. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent representations he has received about traffic congestion in urban areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: I receive regular representations on the problem of congestion in urban areas, particularly in London where it is most acute. I have recently published a discussion document "Traffic in London" inviting comments on my proposed initiatives for tackling congestion in London. The proposals aim to improve the quality and capacity of the capital's transport network to benefit public and private transport users, residents and businesses.

Electronic Road Pricing

18. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what studies have been undertaken by his Department as to the feasibility of introducing electronic road pricing in the United Kingdom's major cities.

Mr. Parkinson: My Department monitors a wide range of measures for dealing with traffic congestion, including road pricing, and has undertaken some preliminary background work into the possible implications of introducing electronic road pricing in London.

35. Mr. Waller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether his Department has arranged any surveys of public attitudes towards road pricing; and whether he has any plans to do so.

Mr. Atkins: No.

Bridge Operation

20. Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on his Department's one-man bridge operation at night project.

Mr. McLoughlin: The first phase of the project has been completed and a second phase is being considered.

Coastguard Service

21. Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will seek additional means to improve the efficiency of the coastguards and other search and rescue services along the north Devon coast and the Bristol channel.

Mr. McLoughlin: Following the closure of the coastguard centre at Hartland in December 1988, a number of measures have been taken in order to ensure that there is adequate provision of resources for maritime search and rescue in the area. The facilities available to Her Majesty's coastguard as the co-ordinating authority are equal to those in other areas of the United Kingdom coastline. The enhanced watch levels at Swansea have been maintained since the closure of the Hartland centre. Swansea now has a greater staff level than some centres which handle a larger number of incidents per annum.

London Regional Transport

22. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next plans to meet the chairman of London Regional Transport; and if he will discuss matters of safety.

Mr. Parkinson: I frequently meet the chairman of London Regional Transport and discuss various matters including safety.

32. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met the chairman of London Regional Transport; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend last met the chairman of London Regional Transport on 21 December. A range of issues was discussed.

London Buses

23. Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on plans for the deregulation of buses in London.

Mr. Portillo: We are committed to the deregulation of bus services in London in the 1990s.

Marchioness

24. Miss Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a further statement regarding progress of the inquiry into the collision involving the Marchioness and Bow Belle dredger on the River Thames.

Mr. McLoughlin: The inquiry into the collision involving the Marchioness and the Bow Belle has reached an advanced stage. It is expected that the inspector leading the inquiry will be in a position to submit his findings to the chief inspector of marine accidents very soon. The report of the chief inspector will then be published at the earliest practicable date.

Tyneside

25. Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to visit Tyneside.

Mr. Atkins: My right hon. Friend visited Tyneside on 24 November 1989. I last visited it on 26 October 1989. We have no plans for further visits in the near future.

Motorway Delays

26. Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how his Department measures the finiancial cost of delays on motorways; and what is the figure for the latest year.

Mr. Atkins: There is no way of making accurate estimates of the overall cost of delays on motorways. The Department does, however, use computer programs to assess the cost of traffic delays on particular stretches of motorway under specific conditions.

Underground Services (South-East London)

27. Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement concerning future plans for new underground railways serving south-east London.

Mr. Portillo: The Jubilee extension to docklands will improve accessibility to Southwark and Bermondsey. London Regional Transport is also considering further the case for extensions of the East London line and the docklands light railway to parts of south-east London.

Thames Riverbus

28. Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the reduction in the Riverbus service on the Thames and on the levels of Government subsidy offered for this service.

Mr. Portillo: The Government have made a grant of £500,000 available to the consortium responsible for the riverbus service. The revisions to the service, which come into operation today, are intended, in the light of operating experience, to tailor the service more closely to demand. I am pleased that the plans are for a fast, frequent and reliable riverbus service on the River Thames.

Railway Stations

30. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a special grant to enable British Rail to staff rail stations that are currently unstaffed.

Mr. Portillo: No. Decisions on the staffing of individual stations are management matters for the board in the light of the overall objectives set by the Government and local requirements. Decisions on staffing levels at stations in the metropolitan counties are a matter for the local passenger transport executives. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport has written to the hon. Member on this matter.

Traffic (London)

31. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has any proposals to relieve traffic congestion in London.

Mr. Atkins: I refer the hon. Member to the statement my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State made to the House on 14 December 1989.

39. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on consultation to date following publication of the London assessment studies proposals in December 1989.

Mr. Atkins: Full public consultation is currently under way. The deadline for comments is 28 February 1990.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has sent copies of the London road assessment studies to the leaders of local community road action groups, as promised by him when he met the London Labour group of hon. Members; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Copies of the consultants' reports have been supplied free of charge, to all representative local organisations which so far have been identified by hon. Members as being based within their constituencies.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his policy on sending an official from his Department to meetings called by a borough council or a local community roads action group to explain his road option preferences; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The Department has informed each borough council that officials are able to attend one local authority-controlled meeting in their area and has asked them to nominate the venue. That programme is now being firmed up with the local authorities concerned.

Transport Supplementary Grant

34. Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many local authority road schemes will be started next year with a transport supplementary grant.

Mr. Atkins: Local highways authorities have indicated that construction work on 74 major road schemes (each costing £1 million or more) which have been accepted for transport supplementary grant support will start in the financial year 1990-91.

A1

36. Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the road safety benefits which could arise from dualling of the A1 throughout its length.

Mr. Atkins: Current traffic flows on the single carriageway sections of the A1 do not justify dualling throughout.

Road safety benefits are part of the criteria taken into account in the cost benefit analysis when decisions are made on which schemes to undertake. The safety and accident situation on the A1 in Northumberland, as with all trunk roads, is monitored continuously and checked.

M1 (Junction 21)

37. Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received concerning the disruption at junction 21 of the M1.

Mr. Atkins: I refer the hon. and learned Member to the answer I gave on 28 November 1989 at column 186. The Department has since received two further representations.

East London Assessment Study

38. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what responses he has received to the east London assessment study stage 2 consultants' report.

Mr. Atkins: Comments are being received from a variety of sources, including right hon. and hon. Members, local authorities, interested groups, national organisations, and members of the public.

European Community Model Driving Licences

40. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the new-style European Community model driving licences will be introduced in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Atkins: The new-style European Community model driving licence will be issued from early April 1990 to drivers with a full ordinary driving entitlement due to come into force on or after 1 June 1990.

Existing driving licences will remain valid after that date—there will be no need for drivers to exchange them for the new-style licences.

Learner Drivers

41. Mr. Samberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received concerning changing the law governing the supervision of learner drivers.

Mr. Atkins: Over 200 representations have been received. These were taken into account in formulating the proposals contained in the consultation document to which I referred in my answer to a question from my hon. Friend on 20 December (Official Report, Volume 164, column 278).

Road and Bridge Maintenance

42. Mr. Irvine: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport by how much spending on roads and bridge maintenance will increase in each of the next three years.

Mr. Atkins: For national roads, planned expenditure on the maintenance of roads and bridges for the current year and for each of the next three years is as follows:

	Capital maintenance £ million	Current maintenance £ million
1989-90	[1]337	[1]99
1990-91	412	120
1991-92	444	127
1992-93	448	135

[1] Forecast outturn.

The Government no longer make plans for local expenditure on highway maintenance. However, the standard spending assessment for local highway maintenance for 1990-91 will be £1,578 million, compared with the needs assessment of £1,478 million used in the 1989-90 rate support grant settlement.

Investment

43. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much will be invested in road and rail over the next three years.

Mr. Portillo: The figures requested are as follows:

	1990-91	1991-92	1992-93	Total
National roads[1] [2]	1·7	1·8	1·8	5·3
Rail[1] [3]	1·6	2·1	2·3	6·0

[1] Local authorities also invest in road and rail, including expenditure on structural maintenance of local roads which falls within authorities' current expenditure budgets. The level of investment undertaken is a matter for the authorities concerned. For 1990-91 estimates of probable investment in local roads and non-BR rail systems are over £950 million and over £60 million respectively.
[2] Including structural maintenance.
[3] British Rail and London Regional Transport. Future investment by London Regional Transport has not yet been allocated between rail and non-rail expenditure (which is currently running at £50 million per annum).

Priority Routes

44. Mr. Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what restrictions he proposes to apply to his proposed red routes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The basis of our proposal is that there should be no stopping on the red routes during peak periods. Stopping, loading and unloading may be permitted at certain times at some strictly limited and clearly marked places where the flow of traffic would not be impeded. Consideration will be given to legitimate interests of frontages, and to the case for exemptions, which will need to be minimised. Final decisions will be taken in the light of consultation and a pilot scheme starting in summer 1990.

45. Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many road miles will be involved in the priority route network announced in December.

Mr. Atkins: The network proposed in the "Traffic in London" discussion document covers approximately 300 miles of roads.

Airports

Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the percentage growth in passengers in the two years 1988 and 1989 in each United Kingdom airport handling more than 3 million passengers.

Mr. McLoughlin: The following is the information:

Millions of terminal passengers

	1987	1988	Percentage increase
Heathrow	34·743	37·510	8·0
Gatwick	19·381	20·744	7·0
Manchester	8·609	9·504	10·4
Glasgow	3·365	3·634	8·0

Millions of terminal passengers

	1988 (January-October)	1989[1] (January-October)	Percentage increase
Heathrow	31·763	33·472	5·4
Gatwick	18·452	18·763	1·7
Manchester	8·527	9·127	7·0
Glasgow	3·166	3·369	6·4

[1] Full year figures not yet available. 1988 period adjusted for comparison.

Hydrography

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the payments made to the hydrographers' department for charts for the last five years by his Department: and if he will list the number of charts ordered by his Department for the last five years.

Mr. McLoughlin: This information can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Vehicle Inspectorate Agency

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what specific financial, efficiency and quality of service targets he has approved for the vehicle inspectorate agency for the current year and for the longer term.

Mr. Atkins: When the Vehicle Inspectorate became an executive agency on 1 August 1988 it was set a key performance target to improve the cost efficiency of its main activities by 3·7 per cent. over a two-year period from 1 April 1989. Full details of the inspectorate's 1989-90 financial performance and service targets are given in its business plan, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House. The targets for 1990-91 will be included in the next business plan, which should be available shortly. A copy of that plan will also be lodged with the Library.

London Assessment Studies

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many invitations to speak at public meetings on the London assessment studies have been received by his Department; and how many he has (a) accepted and (b) refused.

Mr. Atkins: The Department has informed each borough council that officials are able to attend one local authority-controlled meeting in their area and has asked them to nominate the venue. This programme is now being firmed up with the local authorities concerned. Groups asking for officials to attend other meetings are being referred to the local authorities concerned.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport to which voluntary organisations his Department has sent free copies of the appropriate London assessment studies.

Mr. Atkins: Copies of the consultants' stage 2 reports have been supplied free of charge, to all representative local organisations that have been identified by Members as being based within their constituencies. Further requests for free copies submitted in that way will be actioned as they are received.

"The Road User and the Law"

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures are being taken to implement the recommendations of the Government's White Paper "The Road User and the Law"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Responsible road user behaviour is fostered by effective and fair traffic laws. We are currently consulting on detailed aspects of the White Paper proposals with a view to introducing legislation as soon as time is available.

BBC Travel Information

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with the British Broadcasting Corporation regarding the setting up and introduction of a national travel information service; what action he intends to take; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: I plan to visit the BBC travel unit next month. My predecessor and officials from the Department have had several discussions with the BBC and with others involved in the provision of travel information about ways of improving the co-ordination and dissemination of information. Our aim is to facilitate more economical and efficient road travel by improving the quality of information available to drivers both while planning journeys and while on the road.

Satellite Communications

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what storm warnings, distress warnings, urgency messages or other broadcasts on satellite communication in the Indian INMARSAT coverage area were received before, during and after Typhoon Gay in the Gulf of Thailand; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The promulgation of storm warnings is by coast radio stations. INMARSAT satellities are at present not used for such broadcasts. If INMARSAT was used for distress and urgency messages, they would not have been monitored by the United Kingdom Rescue Co-ordinating Centre.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what studies are being undertaken into the incidence of satellite communication failure; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The question of communication failure is an operational matter for INMARSAT.

Oil Discharges (Liberian Ships)

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what response has been received from the authorities in Liberia to three cases of possible illegal discharges of oil from Liberian ships in 1986 and 1988.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Liberian authorities have submitted a copy of their interim investigative report on one incident but the final outcome is not yet known. In the other two cases, we are advised that investigations have not yet been completed.

Greater Manchester Relief Road

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will arrange for public consultation for the Worsley section of the schematic route of the Greater Manchester western and northern relief road to be undertaken in advance of consultants having finalised any route options.

Mr. Atkins: We expect to consult the public next year. We shall need to indicate broad options. Detailed design would only follow the formal announcement of a preferred route.

Driver Licensing

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received over the EEC directive on driver licensing harmonisation from people providing community transport in rural areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Twenty-eight bodies interested in community transport responded to the consultation paper on the future strategy on minibuses published in August 1989. Since then representations on minibuses have also been received from 62 hon. Members some of which were concerned with the implications for community transport. The views expressed will be taken into account in the negotiations in the Council of the second directive on the driving licence.

Rumble Strips

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his policy with respect to laying down of rumble strips on trunk roads to curb excessive traffic speed; and what advice he gives to local authorities.

Mr. Atkins: The Department seeks to facilitate the safe and free flow of traffic on trunk roads. At places with a history of accidents caused by excessive speeds, rumble strips can be an effective measure, used either on their own or in combination with other measures. In or near built-up areas, the increased traffic noise which rumble strips generate has to be taken into account in devising appropriate measures.

Similar considerations apply to local authority roads. Advice to local authorities is published in "Roads and Traffic in Urban Areas" (HMSO) and DTp circular Roads 17/78, together with departmental standard TD 6/79, dealing with transverse yellow bar markings at roundabouts.

Chester Road, Manchester

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what specific issues concerning traffic management on the A56 Chester road, Manchester between Longford bridge and Great Stone road have been raised with his Department by Trafford borough council; and what was the response.

Mr. Atkins: The council's agents asked for our agreement to modify the timings at the pelican crossing here, and to set back the stop lines, instal overhead signal poles and increase the zig zag markings. We have already agreed to all those measures: formal authoritisations will be issued in the next few days. We have not agreed to the council's suggestion that the light source at this and other such crossings should be changed.

Yellow Lines

Mr. Couchman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any proposals to remove yellow parking lines in London.

Mr. Atkins: Responsibility for providing yellow lines rests with the local authorities on local roads and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on trunk roads. In "Traffic in London", published on 14 December 1989, the Government propose new marking and signing arrangements for a priority route network for London, which will comprise trunk roads and certain major local roads. We also propose that the local authorities in London review the provision of yellow lines on their other local roads in accordance with guidelines to be set by my right hon. Friend and the results of a study by the Department of Transport into more positive systems for designating kerbspace.

Channel Tunnel Safety Authority

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the Channel Tunnel Safety Authority will publish its first annual report.

Mr. Portillo: I understand that the Channel Tunnel Safety Authority has today published its first annual report, covering the period 1 April 1988 to 31 March 1989, and has arranged for copies to be placed in the Library.

Vehicle Smoke Checks

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of (a) buses and (b) heavy goods vehicles, tested by his Department's Vehicles Inspectorate failed the visual smoke check (i) in the annual test and (ii) in roadside checks in the 1988-89 period; and what is his estimate of the total number of vehicles producing excessive smoke in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 12 January 1990]: In 1988-89 1·42 per cent. of PSVs and 1·057 per cent. of HGVs failed the visual smoke check in the annual test. Information concerning vehicles found emitting excessive smoke at roadside spot checks is not available. A random survey of heavy goods vehicles carried out in May 1988 showed 3·6 per cent. were emitting excess smoke. If that were reflected in the vehicle fleet as a whole, approximately 20,000 heavy goods vehicles might be producing excessive smoke in Great Britain. The Department has no figures for Northern Ireland.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many vehicles were (a) banned and (b) received vehicle rectification notices as a result of visual smoke checks in the 1988-89 period.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 12 January 1990]: Following is the information:

(a) Information is not available to identify the number of vehicles banned for smoke defects.

(b) The vehicle defect rectification scheme is administered by the police. The Department has no data on this.

Cyclists

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has in regard to the number of people who cycle to work in London and as to what proportion of the total number of commuters this constitutes.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 11 January 1990]: The 1981 Greater London transportation survey of London residents indicated that some 155,000 work journeys were made by pedal cycle. That represented about 3 per cent. of all work journeys by London residents; estimates from the Department's 1985-86 national travel survey suggest that there has been little change in that proportion.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Manufacturing Industry (Competitiveness)

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will place in the Library the results of any studies his Department has conducted into the competitiveness of British manufacturing industry as against other OECD countries.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In 1989 my Department commissioned a study by the PA Consulting Group entitled "Manufacturing into the late 90's". A copy is available in the Library.

Sub-Post Offices

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list by location for the counties of Yorkshire and Humberside, any proposed closure of small rural sub-post offices due to take place during the coming year.

Mr. Forth: This is a matter for the Post Office, but I understand that it has no plans to close any rural post offices. Post Office Counters Ltd. is committed to maintaining the rural network and only when it is impossible to find a sub-postmaster, even working reduced hours, does a rural office close.

Companies House

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what specific financial, efficiency and quality of service targets he has approved for the Companies House agency for the current year and for the longer term.

Mr. Redwood: Targets for Companies House covering the two-year period to 1990-91 were announced by the Secretary of State in March 1989. These are:

(i) A 10 per cent. reduction in the proportion of companies which have not filed all the accounts and annual returns required by the Companies Act, so that by June 1991 the compliance rate will be increased to 83 per cent.;

(ii) A 20 per cent. reduction in the time taken to process documents, so that by April 1991 documents are on average available to the public within 18 working days of being delivered to Companies House;

(iii) A 12 per cent. increase in output per member of staff;

(iv) A 7 per cent. decrease in unit costs in real terms.

Companies House's targets are currently being reviewed in the context of the agency's 1990 corporate plan.

National Weights and Measures Laboratory

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what specific financial, efficiency and quality of service targets he has approved for the National Weights and Measures Laboratory agency for the current year and for the longer term.

Mr. Forth: In May 1989, Lord Young, the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, approved the corporate plan of the National Weights and Measures Laboratory executive agency. This plan, copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House, contains specific targets for the current year. Targets for the longer term will be approved by the Secretary of State in subsequent corporate plans.

Warren Spring Laboratory

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what specific financial, efficiency and quality of service targets he has approved for the Warren Spring Laboratory agency for the current year and for the longer term.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry will be announcing the performance measure targets for the Warren Spring Laboratory agency before the beginning of the next financial year.

Government Chemist

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what specific financial, efficiency and quality of service targets he has approved for the laboratory of the Government chemist for the current year and for the longer term.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I expect to announce targets for the laboratory of the Government chemist before the beginning of the next financial year.

Maluku Islands

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement about United Kingdom trade links with the Maluku Islands, Indonesia.

Mr. Redwood: My Department has no knowledge of any specific United Kingdom trade links with the Maluku Islands, Indonesia. United Kingdom firms usually tend to adopt a comprehensive marketing policy towards Indonesia, largely through agents in Jakarta, Surabaya and Medan.

Disabled People

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to monitor employers' compliance with the requirement in section 235 of the Companies Act 1985 that firms with more than 250 employees must include a statement in their annual report and accounts, outlining their policy on the employment of disabled people.

Mr. Redwood: Responsibility for the content of accounts and directors' reports rests with the directors, with auditors required to state whether the accounts meet the statutory requirements. Companies House staff carry out certain checks on annual accounts, but do not arrange for the contents to be scrutinised in detail except in response to specific complaints.

Rain Forests

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what requests he has received from ASEAN countries for an agreement of trade in rain forest timber, along the lines of that negotiated with New Zealand; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: No such requests have been received.

Smoke Detectors

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to introduce safety regulations covering smoke detectors containing radioactive Americum 241.

Mr. Forth: These products will be subject to the proposed Radioactive Products (Safety) Regulations which I propose to take in March 1990. They will come into force in September 1990. These products are at present subject to the general safety requirement of the Consumer Protection Act 1987.

West Germany (Trade)

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the current balance of trade in manufactured goods with West Germany.

Mr. Redwood: In the first 11 months of 1989 imports of manufactures from the Federal Republic of Germany exceeded United Kingdom exports to that country by £9 billion.

Merger Controls

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the adoption of the European Community merger control regulation.

Mr. Redwood: I welcome the adoption of this regulation which followed major progress over past months on a number of issues during which the United Kingdom played a constructive role throughout. The adoption of this regulation provides a welcome clarification of powers, giving business greater certainty about which jurisdiction will be exercised and how it will be exercised.

As from 21 September 1990 mergers with a Community dimension involving large companies—broadly those mergers with a combined worldwide turnover of more than 5 billion ecu (around £3·7 billion) and with a Community turnover in excess of 500 million ecu (around £370 million)—will be subject to examination by the European Commission. We expect this to include about a dozen United Kingdom mergers per year. Mergers which primarily concern one member state in that more than two thirds of the turnover of each company concerned is in one and the same member state remain subject to national control.

The United Kingdom was successful in ensuring that the criteria for the assessment of mergers are strongly competition based. Mergers which create or enhance a dominant position and significantly impede competition must be prohibited. Technical and economic progress can be taken into account so long as they do not pose a barrier to competition.

The United Kingdom's objective that there should be a clear separation of the roles of the Commission and member state authorities has also been substantially achieved. Normally the Commission will have exclusive competence over those mergers with a Community dimension as described above. The United Kingdom was successful in limiting the scope for member states to intervene on competition grounds in such mergers. A member state may intervene only where it demonstrates to the Commission that a dominant position significantly impeding competition exists in a distinct market in its territory and the Commission is satisfied that the market cannot be adequately protected under the regulation.

A tight line has been drawn round the grounds other than competition on which a member state can intervene in mergers. Only public security, prudential controls and media diversity are recognised as legitimate national interests allowing intervention.

Outside the thresholds mentioned above, the Commission can intervene under the regulation only at the specific request of a member state and then only to remedy competition defects in that member state. The merger regulation disapplies regulation 17, thereby restricting the Commission's powers to intervene under treaty articles 85 and 86. This should reduce the uncertainty which currently exists and which is an unwelcome hazard to business.

Internal Market Council

Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the Internal Market Council held on 21 and 22 December 1989.

Mr. Redwood: The Council made important progress on almost all items on a long agenda. Agreement was reached on the EC merger control regulation, to deal with mergers with a Community dimension. Political agreements were also reached on the second life insurance services directive, three directives on rights of residence for non-economically advice persons, and on testing and certification. Common positions were agreed on measures concerning package travel, active implantable medical devices, nutritional labelling of foodstuffs and permitted residues of veterinary medicinal products.

The Council agreed to consider further the Commission's analysis of barriers to takeovers once the Commission's programme of specific recommendations is published at the end of March. A helpful statement on implementation of single market measures was also agreed.

The proposed directive on public purchasing (excluded sectors) was discussed. Although agreement was not reached, useful progress was made. It may be possible to agree the directive during the Irish Presidency.

The Council also discussed the proposed European company statute, transEuropean infrastructure, the "social economy" (the co-operative, mutual and non-profit making sector), legal protection of computer programmes, irradiation of foodstuffs and mutual recognition of professional qualifications.

Knitwear and Textiles

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give further details of the collaborative ventures to which the Minister for Industry referred on 12 December, Official Report, column 984, in which the Government are prepared to play a part to assist the knitwear and textile industries.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Support is available to the knitwear and textile industries for pre-competitive collaborative research under the four main schemes covered by the research and technology initiative.

The schemes are:

LINK, which encourages firms to collaborate with universities and polytechnics in pre-competitive research

EUREKA, which encourages firms to enter collaborative ventures with firms in other European countries

Advanced technology programme (ATP), which assists companies to collaborate in selected fields of new technology

General industrial collaborative programmes, which provide support for projects at research and technology organisations and for other collaborative projects not covered under the above headings

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the total sum allotted in each of the next three financial years referred to by the Minister for Industry on 12 December, Official Report, column 984, as available for collaborative ventures between the Government and the knitwear and textile industries.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No specific sum is allocated to collaborative research ventures by the garment and the knitwear and the textile industries. Proposals put forward, either by companies in these industries or by the research and technology organisations serving them, are judged on their merits and given appropriate support under the terms of the research and technology initiative.

Merchant Shipping

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the future of British merchant shipbuilding capacity.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow (Dr. Godman) on 9 January, Official Report, column 598.

Albania

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on United Kingdom trade with Albania.

Mr. Redwood: Over the last three years United Kingdom trade with Albania has totalled between £2·5 million and £4 million a year. My Department gives advice to British companies interested in the market, but the assistance we can give is limited by the absence of diplomatic relations and the scarcity of market information. The London chamber of commerce organised a trade mission to Albania in 1988 and hopes to develop closer links with the Albanian chamber.

Romania

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on United Kingdom trade with Romania.

Mr. Redwood: Her Majesty's Government of course warmly endorse the political changes which have recently taken place in Romania. We hope and expect that these changes will lead to a strengthening of our relations, particularly in trade. Between 1982 and 1989 (up to and including October) our exports to Romania declined from £115 million to £30 million. Significant improvements to this figure will depend, inter alia, on the availability of hard currency, but we note and welcome Romania's intention to aim for a better-balanced trade with the United Kingdom. We share that intention and will do our best to help. We are also investigating ways of facilitating United Kingdom investment in the economies of eastern Europe, including Romania.

Immediate Romanian requirements include food, fertilisers, pesticides, animal foodstuffs, seeds, agricultural equipment and some consumer goods. There is also likely to be a demand for photocopiers, typewriters, TV studio equipment and film material. My Department is in touch with potential British suppliers. In the longer term we would hope for improvement in the aviation sector where the Romanians are building civil aircraft under licence from British firms.

China

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on United Kingdom trade with the People's Republic of China.

Mr. Redwood: Normal commercial business relations with China continue, although the United Kingdom and the rest of the European Community have suspended bilateral ministerial and high-level exchanges, trade in arms and concessional finance for new projects, following events in Peking in June last year.

In the first 11 months of 1989 the value of United Kingdom exports to China was £363 million.

Foreign Shareholdings

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on what occasions he or his predecessors have used their powers under the Industry Act 1975 to restrict the size of foreign shareholdings in British companies.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 12 January 1990]: The powers under section 13 of the Industry Act 1975 have never been used.

Industrial Decline

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what factors account for the decline in output of the textile, footwear, metal goods, motor vehicle and mechancial engineering industries since 1979; and in which other countries there has been a comparable decline.

Mr. Redwood: The period 1979-88 has witnessed rapid structural change both in the United Kingdom and elsewhere. Some industries have experienced a rise in output while in others output has fallen. The changes reflect the shifting pattern of demand, the changing nature of international competition, and the ability of individual countries to respond to these developments. Such structural change is an integral part of the process by which economies develop and grow.

The pattern of structural change has not been very different in the United Kingdom from that in other major industrial countries. Thus, according to published OECD data, output of textiles, footwear and metal products all fell in at least several of the major seven OECD countries over the period 1979-88 and in no case did the United Kingdom suffer the greatest reduction. The OECD includes mechanical engineering in the wider category of non-electrical machinery, United Kingdom output of which rose at a rate broadly comparable with that of the other major European countries. Only in motor vehicles was United Kingdom output growth over the period 1979-88 significantly below that of all the other major OECD countries. However, the decline in United Kingdom motor vehicles output was reversed in the mid-1980s and prospects for further recovery are excellent.

Accounting Policy

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) how, and in consultation with what bodies, he formulates the accounting policy for the corporate sector;

(2) if he will list the non-Government bodies, committees or institutes which are permitted to make the accounting policy for the corporate sector in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Redwood: Company accounts are regulated in Great Britain by provisions in the Companies Act 1985 (to be amended by the Companies Act 1989), which reflect both European Community obligations and certain domestic considerations. Significant proposed changes to this legislative framework are usually the subject of wide consultation. In addition, accounting standards are promulgated by the members of the consultative committee of accountancy bodies, on the basis of proposals developed by its accounting standards committee. The professional accountancy bodies also issue technical guidance to their members.

Barlow Clowes

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether any disciplinary action has been taken within his Department against officials involved in handling any aspect of the Barlow Clowes case.

Mr. Ridley: The question of any disciplinary action against individual civil servants is one for my Permanent Secretary. The House was informed last year that the then Permanent Secretary had considered whether the facts set out in Sir Godfray Le Quesne's report would give rise to a case for disciplinary action, and had decided that they did not. The matter was reviewed in the light of the PCA's report and my Permanent Secretary decided that there was no case for disciplinary action, a decision with which I concur.

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether any of his Department's officials or former officials have been told that they may be asked to give evidence in any legal proceedings initiated by the Department against third parties in respect of Barlow Clowes.

Mr. Ridley: No, because it is not yet clear which officials or former officials, if any, will be required to give evidence in any actions which are brought.

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether any of the officials consulted by Sir Godfray Le Quesne, QC for his report into Barlow Clowes have been promoted or have retired prematurely since the time they were responsible for the Barlow Clowes case.

Mr. Ridley: Three officials have been promoted and one has taken early retirement.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

China

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will estimate the number of former members of the Shanghai municipal council still alive who have lodged claims under the Foreign Compensation (People's Republic of China) Order; and how many of these claims result from loss suffered through detention in Japanese prisoner-of-war camps.

Mr. Sainsbury: Twenty-four living former employees of the Shanghai municipal council have lodged claims with the foreign compensation commission under the Foreign Compensation (People's Republic of China) Order 1987 in respect of either pay or pensions. The United Kingdom/China claims agreement under which the order was issued does not extend to claims arising from detention in Japanese prisoner-of-war or civilian internment camps.

Know-How Fund

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will extend the know-how fund to include Czechoslovakia;

(2) if he will extend the know-how fund to include Romania.

Mr. Waldegrave: The extension of the know-how fund for Poland and Hungary to other reforming eastern European countries is under consideration.

Human Rights

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether, and to what extent, the human rights situation in a foreign country is taken into account in evaluating licences for the export of military or police equipment to that country.

Mr. Sainsbury: This is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, who will reply as soon as possible.

Eastern Europe

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the allocation of Government aid to research and combat the causes and effects of environmental pollution in the newly emerging democracies of eastern Europe.

Mr. Waldegrave: We are fully committed to improving the environment in the whole of Europe. We believe that environmental problems are best tackled through international co-operation, and we are working within the EC to establish how best we can help in eastern Europe. The European Communities' £210 million assistance budget for 1990 to Poland and Hungary includes the environment as a priority area. The G24 countries, which are co-ordinating their assistance for eastern Europe, are also looking at ways to help in this area.

Dolphins

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations are being made to the Governments of Japan, Peru and Sri Lanka to reduce their annual kill of dolphins, porpoises and other cetaceans.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Japanese Government have told us that they are concerned to conserve the Dall's porpoise, the main species caught in Japan. They estimate that new regulations introduced at the beginning of 1989 will have reduced the annual catch by more than 20 per cent. and from this year the regulations will be further strengthened and consideration given to a further reduction in the numbers caught. We have asked the Governments of Peru and Sri Lanka for further information and I shall write to the hon. Member shortly.

Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what research is being done or has been commissioned by his Department in respect of initiatives to be taken at the fourth review conference of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Waldegrave: As a depositary power of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty, the United Kingdom is naturally keen to work for the success of the review conference. To this end, a considerable amount of research has been undertaken by the Department into matters covered by the treaty, and there have been a number of discussions with the other depositary powers, and with other parties to the treaty.

NATO

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the answer of 8 January, Official Report, column 511, what factors account for the discrepancy between the official North Atlantic Treaty Organisation figure for North Atlantic Treaty Organisation combat-capable aircraft of 6,700 and the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation total of 6,600 provided in his answer.

Mr. Waldegrave: The 6,600 figure is a misprint. The correct figure is 6,700.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the answer of 8 January, Official Report, column 511, whether he will list those versions and variants of types of combat aircraft listed in footnote 1, page 27 of "Conventional Forces in Europe: The Facts" that are in addition to those aircraft included in footnotes 1, 4 and 5.

Mr. Waldegrave: A list of the types of combat aircraft included in the NATO CFE proposal of 13 July is being placed in the Library of the House.

All the types of aircraft included in the publication "Conventional Arms Control: The Facts" are covered in the footnotes on page 27.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will list the types of aircraft that have been added to the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation total of combat-capable trainers in addition to those included in footnote 5, page 27 of "Conventional Forces in Europe: The Facts".

Mr. Waldegrave: A list of the types of combat aircraft included in the NATO CFE proposal of 13 July is being placed in the Library of the House.

All the types of aircraft included in the publication "Conventional Arms Control: The Facts" are covered in the footnotes on page 27.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the current North Atlantic Treaty Organisation arms control proposals for reductions in the number of combat aircraft include any sub-ceilings according to (a) member country and (b) type of combat aircraft.

Mr. Waldegrave: No.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the Nimrod is a version or variant of one of the aircraft types listed in footnote 1, page 27 of "Conventional Forces in Europe: The Facts".

Mr. Waldegrave: No.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the Nimrod is included in the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation total of combat-capable aircraft.

Mr. Waldegrave: Yes.

Missile Technology Control Regime

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information his Department has concerning the policy of (a) the Soviet Union and (b) the People's Republic of China towards the missile technology control regime; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We are not aware of any policy statements by the Soviet Union or the People's Republic of China on the missile technology control regime. However, we believe that all potential supplier countries are increasingly concerned by the problem of missile proliferation. We have called on all states to tighten their policies in this area, and have said that we would welcome their adherence to the missile technology control regime guidelines in the interest of international peace and security.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the imposition of sanctions upon countries and companies that transgress the terms and conditions of the missile technology control regime.

Mr. Waldegrave: Export controls in the United Kingdom are designed to ensure that companies do not act in contravention of our international commitments, including those under the missile technology control regime. Appropriate legal action is taken against any company which is found to infringe these controls. It is not our policy to seek to impose sanctions on any other countries or foreign companies which might be thought to have transgressed the terms and conditions of the regime. Controls under the regime remain the national responsibility of each participating country.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the terms of the missile technology control regime have constrained any United Kingdom companies from exporting certain technologies or components.

Mr. Waldegrave: A number of export licence applications have been refused by the Department of Trade and Industry as a result of our commitments under the missile technology control regime.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which Government Departments are involved in ensuring the implementation of the terms of the missile technology control regime.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Department of Trade and Industry is responsible for the issuing of export licences under the Export of Goods (Control) Order, in consultation with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, the Ministry of Defence and other Government Departments as appropriate.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what means of control are exercised by his Department upon United Kingdom companies in reference to the implementation of the terms of the missile technology control regime.

Mr. Waldegrave: Such control is exercised by means of export licences under the Export of Goods (Control) Order, which are determined by the Department of Trade and Industry. Export licence applications for equipment and technology to which the missile technology control regime applies are referred to this Department by the Department of Trade and Industry before a decision is taken on whether to issue a licence.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government policy towards the retention, by any other country, of a minimum offensive chemical weapon capability in the aftermath of a chemical weapon convention being concluded.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his Department's assessment as to the implications for the chemical weapon convention talks of the United States' policy to retain a limited stockpile of chemical weapons after a chemical weapon convention has been signed.

Mr. Waldegrave: It is envisaged in the negotiations in Geneva for a chemical weapons convention that there will be a transition period following the entry into force of the treaty. During this period any chemical weapons stocks possessed by states parties will be destroyed. President Bush's proposal at the United Nations General Assembly for retention of a small stockpile until all CW-capable states are party to the convention is not inconsistent with this.

Middle East

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his Department's assessment as to the implications for regional security of the deployment of (a) ballistic missiles and (b) anti-tactical ballistic missiles in the middle east; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: As a founder member of the missile technology control regime, we are naturally concerned about the proliferation of ballistic missiles in regions of tension. We also question the wisdom of deploying anti-tactical ballistic missiles in response to such proliferation.

Iraq

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his Department's assessment as to whether Iraq has developed the capability to deliver an inter-continental ballistic missile; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Iraqi Government announced on 7 December that they had launched a rocket capable of carrying satellites into space. Reports have also suggested that Iraq is developing a military missile with a range of 2,000 km. There is no further information that I can give to the hon. Gentleman. However, we are concerned about the destabilising effect that such a programme, if it exists, could have on the middle east region.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his Department's latest assessment as to Iraq's anti-tactical ballistic missile capability; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: Iraq has claimed to be developing an anti-tactical ballistic missile. We have no reason to doubt this claim.

Romania

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will propose to his European Community counterparts the lifting of regulations on the export of powdered milk and rice and other food aid to Romania on humanitarian grounds as a matter of urgency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: Since the revolution in Romania, the European Community has responded speedily to requests for emergency food and medical aid. On 29 December the Commission announced and began deliveries of emergency food aid. So far £4·6 million has been allocated by the Commission for food and medical aid. The Commission is urgently considering a request by the Romanian Government for a large quantity of food aid and is expected to make a proposal after Vice-President Andriessen has visited Bucharest. There are no regulations which prevent the export of powdered milk, rice and other food supplies to Romania.

Ukraine

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has made representations to the USSR about contravention of human rights pursuant to the Helsinki and Vienna accords in the Soviet Republic of Ukraine.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have regularly and frequently pressed the Soviet Union to comply fully with its CSCE obligations. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs raised our continuing concerns about human rights in the Soviet Union with Mr. Shevardnadze when he was in London on 19 December. A senior official, Mr. David Ratford, visited the Soviet Union from 8 to 11 January for a full exchange with the Soviet authorities on all aspects of human rights issues.

Kai Tak Refugee Camp

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the conditions in which the 50 Vietnamese held in the special camp outside Kai Tak refugee camp are held; how long they have been held in these conditions; and what plans there are for their future.

Mr. Maude: The 52 Vietnamese held in the camp at Kai Tak are people who had left Vietnam to settle in China, but who had subsequently entered Hong Kong illegally. Such people are normally returned to China; but in the case of this group, who are ethnic Vietnamese, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees is exceptionally arranging for them to be resettled overseas. The conditions under which they are held is similar to those of other Vietnamese illegal immigrants from China. The group of 52 have been in Hong Kong for over three years.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Refugees

51. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, as representing the Church Commissioners, what funds the Church Commissioners devote to helping (a) refugees and (b) other immigrants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alison: None, because the Commissioners' funds are not by law available for those purposes. Their primary duty is the support of the full-time parochial ministry of the Church of England and the bulk of their income is used for that purpose.

EMPLOYMENT

Wages Council Inspectors

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to increase the number of wages councils inspectors.

Mr. Nicholls: None.

Local Offices, Doncaster and Mexborough

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many claimants signed on each week of 1989 at (a) Doncaster and (b) Mexborough unemployment benefit offices; what delays there were in interviewing them; what requests have been received for additional staff; and what has been his response.

Mr. Eggar: Information about the number of claimants who signed on at these offices each week during 1989 is not available.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the current establishment at each grade at the unemployment benefit offices at (a) Doncaster and (b) Mexborough; how many deal directly with interviewing of new claimants; and what representations he has received concerning the lack of staff to deal with claimants.

Mr. Nicholls: A graded breakdown of the staff employed at Doncaster and Mexborough unemployment benefit offices is given in table 1.

New claimants are normally interviewed by an executive officer (new client adviser). In each of the Doncaster unemployment benefit offices four executive officers are directly involved with interviewing and counselling new claimants. In Mexborough unemployment benefit office three executive officers interview and counsel new clients.

Additionally in each office two clerical staff provide support services for the new client advisers, which includes making appointments for unemployed people to make their claims.

No formal representations have been made to local management about staffing levels in these offices.

Local Offices

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list (a) the jobcentres and (b) unemployment benefit offices that are (i) to be closed and (ii) transferred to agencies.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Boothferry (Mr. Davis) on 1 December 1989 (Official Report, col. 461-62). It is the intention that the employment service (ES) should be launched as an executive agency in April 1990. It will establish a new network of offices, bringing together the full range of employment service activities in single locations wherever possible.

Plans are being developed for this new network and when decisions have been taken the hon. Member for the constituency concerned will be informed.

Job Interview Guarantee Scheme

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what progress has been made on the job interview guarantee scheme; how many claimants and employers have become involved; how many claimants and employers have participated in the work trials on offer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The job interview guarantee was formally launched in 20 pilot areas in November 1989. The latest available information is that 1,088 individuals and 258 employers have participated in the initiative. So far, two employers have signed agreements to participate in work trials, although many employers have indicated their interest in taking part, and two individuals are currently participating in them.

The progress of the pilots has been encouraging. So far, 473 people have been placed in jobs. Almost 60 per cent. of participants in job preparation courses have found employment.

Employment Training

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether there are any restrictions on where trainees in employment training can take their holiday entitlement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: There are no restrictions on where trainees in employment training can take their holiday entitlement.

Ex-Trainees

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether the Training Agency has taken any action to recover payments made to ex-trainees who have, for whatever reason, failed to sign on at the end of their training and have continued to receive their benefit and training premium; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The Training Agency has in appropriate cases taken steps to recover payments of ET training allowances paid to people no longer entitled to them.

Health and Safety Executive

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 29 November, Official Report, column 271, in what ways a preventive inspection visit is different from a basic inspection visit.

Mr. Nicholls: The term "preventive" is synonymous with "basic" in describing inspection visits made to assess employers' compliance with the requirements of health and safety legislation and to provide advice about the various ways in which employers can monitor, maintain and improve health and safety standards.

Industrial Training

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish the most recent available extracts of the average expenditure per employee on industrial training by each nation of the European Community, split by major industry group and by source of funds.

Mr. Nicholls: The table shows employers' expenditure on training for 1984, and is derived from the Eurostat publication "Labour Costs 1984, Volume 1 Principal Results", a copy of which is in the Library. These estimates are of limited value since they exclude the major costs of training, in particular wages and salaries of instructors and all but full-time trainees.

Employment Provision (Disabled)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he expects to announce the conclusions of the ministerial review of employment provision for disabled people.

Mr. Eggar: I have nothing to add to the reply I gave to the hon. Member on 13 November (Official Report, column 58). The review is at an advanced stage. The consultative document which will follow the review will be published as soon as possible.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether his Department's current review of services for people with disabilities will consider the need for legislation to outlaw unjustifiable discrimination on the grounds of disability.

Mr. Eggar: Successive Governments have judged that education and persuasion of employers is the most effective approach to improving employment opportunities for people with disabilities. The role of legislation is being considered in the review of services to people with disabilities which this Department is currently undertaking.

A consultative document covering the conclusions of the review will be published soon.

Employees' Rights

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proposals he has for compliance with the European social charter of fundamental rights of employees in respect of the aspects covered by his Department.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister made it quite clear at the European Council meeting in December in Strasbourg that the Government could not endorse the proposed charter of fundamental social rights of workers. The question of compliance does not, therefore, arise.

Action for Jobs

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much of the total expenditure on the Action for Jobs campaign in 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88 was attributed to printed material in each year; how much was attributed to television advertising in each year; and how much was attributed to other expenditure in each year.

Mr. Eggar: Expenditure on Action for Jobs television advertising in 1985-86 was nil; in 1986-87, £9·3 million; and 1987-88, £3 million. Expenditure on producing, printing and distributing the Action for Jobs booklet in 1985-86 was nil; in 1986-87, £1·2 million; and in 1987-88, £0·5 million. Other expenditure relating to the Action for Jobs campaign in 1985-86 was £40,000; in 1986-87, £3·4 million; and in 1987-88, £4·5 million.

Employment Statistics

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the current rate of employment in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) the rest of the European Economic Community and (c) the countries covered by the European Free Trade Association.

Mr. Nicholls: The latest available information is shown in the table:

Health and Safety Inspectorate

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many factory inspectors are currently employed by the health and safety inspectorate; and how many were employed in the same month of 1979.

Mr. Nicholls: On 1 January 1990, 624·5 factory inspectors were in post in the Health and Safety Executive. On 1 January 1979 the total was 709·5.

Private Licensed Coal Mines

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the private licensed coal mines known to the mines and quarries inspectorate, giving the numbers employed below ground in each case.

Mr. Nicholls: Following is a list of private licensed mines held by Her Majesty's inspectorate. Figures for persons employed at individual mines are not readily available.

SCOTLAND

Shotts Prison

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has had about his plans for Shotts prison.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In October 1988 we published a discussion paper, "Assessment and Control", on the management of violent and disruptive prisoners, which included proposals for a new facility at Shotts prison. Responses were received from 34 organisations and individuals. My right hon. and learned Friend and I are still considering the responses received and last month I met a delegation from the Shotts local community to hear their views.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the number of inmates presently in Shotts prison; and if he will make a statement on the numbers planned for the next 10 years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: At the end of December 1989, there were 455 places available at Shotts prison and 442 prisoners. A further 12 places will become available in a new unit to be opened in April 1990. Plans for a new maximum security complex, providing a further 60 places, were discussed in the consultation paper "Assessment and Control", published in October 1988. My right hon. and learned Friend and I are still considering the responses to the discussion paper,and no decision has yet been reached on further developments at Shotts.

Native Pinewood

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what is his most recent estimate of the area of genuinely native pinewood in Scotland that is owned by the Forestry Commission; and how this has changed since the definitive survey by Steven and Carlisle, published in 1959;

(2) what is his most recent estimate of the area of genuinely native pinewood in Scotland; how this has changed since the definitive survey by Steven and Carlisle, published in 1959; and what were the principal causes of these changes.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There are some 12,500 hectares of native pinewood in Scotland, of which the Forestry Commission manages about 2,500 hectares. It is not possible to say how this has changed since 1959 as the survey by Steven and Carlisle was not undertaken in a way which enabled areas to be measured.

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) when the Forestry Commission expects to complete its first register of native pinewoods;

(2) what plans the Forestry Commission has to monitor the extent and nature of changes to the native pinewoods in Scotland following the announcement of the new grants arrangements; and what plans it has to monitor the progress of this part of the woodland grant scheme.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Forestry Commission's register of native pinewoods will be an open one to which qualifying pinewoods will be added as further evidence becomes available. The commission anticipates that the main areas of native pinewoods will be registered in the next six months.

Entries on the register will be reviewed periodically which will enable the extent and nature of any changes to be determined. The commission collects detailed information on all proposals made under the woodland grant scheme, and this includes any applications for grants for native pinewoods.

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans the Forestry Commission has to restore and regenerate native pinewoods in its ownership; whether the commission has set an area target and timescale for this work; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Forestry Commission will follow its recently published "Guidelines for the Management of Native Pinewoods" in managing its own native pinewoods. Management is a continuous process and the commission has not therefore considered it appropriate to commit itself to target areas or timescales.

Forestry Commission

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of every piece of land and buildings, owned by the Forestry Commission in Scotland, which has been sold in the last 10 years; and if he will give such details by district location.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answers given to the hon. Member for Caerphilly (Mr. Davies) on 6 November 1989 at columns 486-87 and on 3 February 1989 at column 415, to the hon. Member for Falkirk, West (Mr. Canavan) on 5 December 1984 at columns 139-50 and to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith) on 25 July 1984 at columns 665-83. These gave lists of all the forest areas sold between 27 July 1981, the date the Forestry Act 1981 came into force, and 31 March 1989.

A list of all the other areas of land and buildings sold by the Forestry Commission over the last 10 years could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Blind Persons' Privilege Tickets

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress has been made in securing the continuation of blind persons' privilege tickets from those companies which will succeed the Scottish Bus Group following privatisation.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This matter is currently under consideration but I hope that it will be possible to reach a conclusion shortly.

Redundant Mineworkers Payments Scheme

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the numbers and percentages of unemployed persons removed from unemployment registers as a result of changes that took effect in August 1989 in the redundant mineworkers payments scheme, by region.

Mr. Lang: The latest estimates, which are subject to revision as later data become available, suggest that the unemployment figures for Scotland have been reduced by some 1,200 as a result of mineworkers taking advantage of changes in the redundant mineworkers payments scheme. This is equivalent to 0·5 per cent. of those unemployed in Scotland at August 1989.

Figures for local authority regions within Scotland are not available.

Local Government Finance

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what information he has on the cost of the collection of debts arising out of the non-payment of rates in the 12-month period prior to the introduction of the community charge;

(2) what are the (a) current and (b) projected costs for the collection of poll tax debts.

Mr. Rifkind: Although local authorities make returns to my Department of the administrative cost of collecting the community charge and previously made similar returns in respect of rates, the returns do not show separately the cost of collecting debts.

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether all local authorities in Scotland have offered the facility of single payment by one member of the household on their community charge payment forms; and what the response to this facility has been.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In order to increase the accountability of local authorities to their electorates, the community charge legislation requires every person who is liable to pay the personal community charge to be sent a demand notice. Where more than one person in a household receives a demand notice it is a matter for members of that household to decide whether each individual should pay his or her own bill or whether to adopt some other arrangement.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what guidance his Department has issued to Scottish local authorities on use of the debt recovery mechanisms outlined in the Abolition of Domestic Rates Etc. (Scotland) Act 1987 and the application of the provisions of the Debtors (Scotland) Act 1987 in relation to the recovery of poll tax payments from those who have defaulted on such payments; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 12 January 1990]: None. It is for local authorities to consider the most effective method of recovering debt, including community charge arrears.

Mentally Ill People

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many beds for mentally ill patients have been taken out of service over the last 10 years, showing the closed beds by health board area in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is not centrally available in the form requested. Figures given in the table show the change over the last 10 years in the available staffed beds in psychiatric specialties in Scotland:

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the change in the number of sight tests carried out in Scotland after the introduction of charges for the latest period for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The results of a survey on the total number of sight tests in the first quarter of 1990 compared with earlier periods should be available after Easter.

RENAVAL Programme

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the areas which meet the criteria qualifying them for European regional development fund assistance under the terms of the RENAVAL programme; what applications he has submitted for any of these areas; which have been successful; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: Bids to establish eligibility for Strathclyde and Fife under RENAVAL were submitted to the European Commission in May 1989. We still await a response. Providing a favourable decision is reached, detailed programmes of measures will be drawn up by Government in consultation with the relevant local authorities and other public agencies.

Correspondence

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow can expect to receive a substantive reply to his letter of 30 November 1989, which was addressed to the Minister for Home Affairs and the Environment, concerning Mr. A. Renaud, 2 Shaw place, Greenock.

Mr. Rifkind: I replied to the hon. Member on 11 January.

Environment

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what specific research projects and studies regarding (a) environmental pollution, (b) climate changes and their effect on (i) the health of the people and (ii) wildlife in Scotland his Department is funding or sponsoring.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 13 December 1989]: The main sources of funds for research in the broad areas of environmental pollution and climate change are United Kingdom Departments and research councils. Scottish Departments, however, have funded a range of projects in the areas in which the hon. Gentleman has expressed an interest and these reflect their own policy and programme responsibilities.

Research funded by the Scottish Development Department deals with issues particular to Scotland and is designed to be complementary to that sponsored through United Kingdom Departments. Annex A shows projects related to environmental pollution currently being funded by SDD.

The broad objectives of the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland are to ensure that the work undertaken makes a significant contribution to and, where appropriate, leads the agricultural R and D effort in the United Kingdom, while including work of special relevance to the soils, crops and livestock of northern Britain. Some of this research is concerned with aspects of environmental pollution—for example, how soil processes affect nutrient availability particularly as regards element cycling and flows; the effect of pollutants from the atmosphere entering the soil-plant-animal system; and how soil water is affected by fertilisers and pesticides. Annex B lists currently funded agricultural and related research concerned with environmental pollution.

Research on fisheries and the aquatic environment is undertaken by DAFS as part of a Great Britain programme co-ordinated with the main stocks of fish and shellfish in Scottish waters, and also investigates the impact of natural and manmade changes on those stocks and on the environment which supports them.

The marine research programme involves study of the hydrography, chemistry and biological productivity of the sea, and includes examination of the effects of pollution from disposal in the sea of materials such as oil compounds, dredge spoils, industrial waste, materials from marine fish farms, and sewage. DAFS also commissions work on seals and fish-eating birds.

On the freshwater side, where the DAFS interest is primarily in salmonid fish, research is commissioned into the impact of environmental stresses generated by surface water acidification, coniferous afforestation, fish farming, and land use change upon both freshwater fisheries and the freshwater environment.

The Scottish Home and Health Department, through its chief scientific office, aims to identify, encourage, promote and support good quality research relevant to the improvement of health and the National Health Service in Scotland. One project related to environmental pollution is currently funded by SHHD—"A study of neuropsychological function in children exposed to low levels of lead in the environment".

At present, Scottish Departments are not funding work directly related to climate changes and their effect on (i) the health of the people and (ii) wildlife in Scotland where given the global nature of such changes lead responsibility rests with other United Kingdom Departments.

Annex A

The Scottish Development Department is currently funding the following research projects in the environmental pollution arena.

Trace Element Toxicity in the River Don
Acidification of Inland Waters
Environmental Effects of Fish Farming
Monitoring of Phosphorus, Chlorophyll and Water Clarity on Loch Leven Effect of Afforestation on Catchment Yields
Radionuclide Transfer in Heather-Dominant Ecosystems

Extracts of Convictions

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he proposes to take to make mandatory the availability of extracts of convictions in the Scottish courts, including the district courts, at reasonable cost to members of the public and their advisers who can demonstrate a legitimate interest therein.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 11 January 1990]: Extracts of conviction are already available to those with a legitimate interest in them. Problems which have arisen in respect of records stored on computer are at present under consideration.

Random Breath Tests

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will now introduce a system of random breath tests for drivers in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 12 January 1990]: Earlier last year the Government embarked on a public consultation exercise on whether police breath testing powers should be extended. A considerable number of representations was received proposing a variety of measures including support for the introduction of random breath testing. The Government are still considering the important issues which would be involved in giving the police increased powers in this area.

Warrant Sales

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many warrant sales were carried out on behalf of regional councils against those defaulting on domestic rate payments in each year since 1979 until the most recent year for which figures are available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 12 January 1990]: This information is not available.

HEALTH

Hypothermia

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the number of cases where hypothermia was mentioned on the death certificate for each of the last 10 years for which figures are available; and how many of each annual total were people aged (a) 65 years and over (b) 80 years and over.

Mr. Freeman: The number of deaths with mention of hypothermia on the death certificate for persons of (a) all ages (b) 65 years and over, (c) 80 years and over, in England and Wales, 1979—1988 were:

Year	All ages	65 years and over	80 years and over

Fostering, Doncaster

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by age the number of children currently in foster care in the Doncaster area; and what the figures were (a) 10 years ago and (b) five years ago.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The most recent data available relates to 31 March 1988; 1981 is the earliest that such data is available. The number of children in the care of Doncaster district council, boarded with foster parents is given in the table showing those children boarded out in the Doncaster district area and in other areas. Information is not available about the numbers of children in the care of other local authorities who are boarded out in the Doncaster area.

Resource Management Initiative

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the six pilot sites of the Government's resource management initiative scheme; and if he will list for all sites the number of times they have been updated and the dates.

Mr. Freeman: The six acute hospital pilot sites for the resource management initiative (RMI) are:

Arrowe Park Hospital (Wirral)
Freeman Hospital (Newcastle)
Guy's Hospital (Lewisham and North Southwark)
Huddersfield Royal Infirmary (Huddersfield)
Pilgrim Hospital, Boston (South Lincolnshire)
Royal Hampshire County Hospital (Winchester)

During the early part of 1988 Clatterbridge hospital (Wirral), originally a pilot site, withdrew from the RMI but work resumed as a result of a merger with Arrowe Park hospital in the summer of 1989. The Pilgrim hospital, Boston, was adopted as a pilot site in April 1988. On 20 March 1989 I announced the extension of resource management and the names of 50 hospitals to prepare for it in this financial year. On 14 December 1989 I announced the names of 20 hospitals, from the list of 50, which will implement the main resource management process in 1989-90.

Psycho-geriatric Provision, Doncaster

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the numbers of psycho-geriatric and geriatric beds in each hospital within the Doncaster area health authority on 1 January 1980, 1 January 1985, 1 January 1989 and at 1 January 1990.

Mr. Freeman: The available information is given in the table:

Average daily number of available beds, Geriatric and Psycho-geriatric specialties

Food Hygiene (Military Aircraft)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what food hygiene regulations apply to military aircraft operated by (a) the Royal Air Force and (b) foreign air forces operating out of the United Kingdom that are equipped for carrying passengers.

Mr. Freeman: None. The Food Safety Bill proposes the removal of immunity from food safety law from most Crown premises from 1 April 1992. Ground-based military catering establishments (but not the aircraft themselves) will then be within the scope of the food hygiene regulations.

The Bill also seeks powers to enable Ministers to make an order extending the definition of premises to include aircraft of any specific description for the purposes specified in the order. The Government have no plans at present to make such an order in respect of military aircraft.

Social Factor Questions

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he has taken to ensure confidentiality, after general practitioners have asked social factor questions of new patients from April 1990, when they are passed on to the local family practitioner committee.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Many general practitioners, in accordance with their training, already seek and record information about their patients concerning social and lifestyle factors relevant to their health, for example housing circumstances, diet, exercise, use of tobacco and consumption of alcohol.

General practitioners will be obliged to record from April 1990 the history and findings arising from a health check-up to ensure that a full medical record is maintained. However there is no requirement that specific information about social factors should be passed on to family practitioner committees.

General practitioners have always been obliged to return patients' records to the family practitioner committee so that they can be forwarded to a new doctor. Both general practitioners and family practitioner committees have a duty to maintain confidentiality and there is no suggestion that the arrangements to be introduced from April 1990 will result in a greater likelihood of breaches of confidentiality.

1991 Census

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the various issues of the Census Newsletter, in respect of the 1991 census of Great Britain, are freely available to members of the public; and where they can be obtained.

Mr. Freeman: Yes. Copies of the Census Newsletter can be obtained from Census Division (Room 823), Office of Population Censuses and Surveys, St. Catherine's house, 10 Kingsway, London WC2B 6JP or Customer Services, General Register Office, Ladywell house, Ladywell road, Edinburgh EH12 7TF.

Migrants

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many inquiries have been received by his Department regarding migrants and the Child Migrants Trust.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department has received 22 inquiries since 1987 about child migrants and the Child Migrants Trust.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what financial contribution his Department is making to the costs incurred by Nottinghamshire county council in seconding Margaret Humphries from her normal duties to work connected with migrants and the Child Migrants Trust.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department is making no financial contribution.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when his Department first received the request for grant funding from the Child Migrants Trust.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department received an initial inquiry from the Child Migrants Trust about financial assistance on 16 June 1988. A formal grant application was received on 26 January 1989.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when his Department first requested additional information on the grant funding of the Child Migrants Trust.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Officials from the Department requested additional information from representatives of the Child Migrants Trust at a meeting to discuss the grant application on 29 August 1989. This information was received by the Department on Thursday 11 January 1990.

Tobacco Products

Mr. Aspinwall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information his Department has received about the amounts spent by the tobacco industry as part of its campaign to encourage retailers to support the law prohibiting the sale of cigarettes to children under 16 years; and if he will give the amounts spent for the years 1986-87, 1987-88 and 1988-89.

Mr. Freeman: Information on this campaign is contained in the first and second reports of the Committee for Monitoring Agreements on Tobacco Advertising and Sponsorship.

These reports, copies of which are held in the Library, show that approximately £1 million was spent in each of the years, 1986-87 and 1987-88.

Details of expenditure in 1988-89 are not yet available but will be included in the committee's third report.

West Midlands RHA

Mr. Archer: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has any plans to meet the chairman of the West Midlands regional health authority to discuss the budget for the forthcoming year.

Mr. Freeman: No.

Sir James Ackers

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will dismiss Sir James Ackers from his position as chair of the West Midlands regional health authority.

Mr. Freeman: No.

Income Support Exemptions

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will issue guidance to local authorities that people on income support or an equivalent level of income should be exempt from charges for services such as home help.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have no plans to do so. Anyone who feels unable to afford local authority charges for domiciliary care can make representations to the authority which may reduce the charge to the amount it considers reasonable for him or her to pay.

Community Care

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to ensure that standards of community care are of a national minimum quality.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The need to secure and safeguard the necessary quality of community care is integral to the proposals set out in the White Paper "Caring for People". A wide range of measures will be taken. Some are provided for in the National Health Service and Community Care Bill. In particular we are seeking powers to require local authorities to draw up and publish plans for community care services, and to assess the needs of people requiring social care.

In drawing up contracts for service provision from independent suppliers, local authorities will need to specify the quality and standards expected. Authorities will also be required to set up independent inspection units charged with inspecting and reporting on local authority residential care homes, as well as registering and inspecting independent residential care homes.

The Department proposes to issue guidance on the establishment of these units and the assessment of quality of provision.

These arrangements will be monitored by the Department's social services inspectorate whose advisory and supervisory functions will be strengthened.

Disabled Persons

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to promote and encourage independent advocacy schemes for disabled people.

Mr. Freeman: The Department has approved a grant under section 64 of the Health and Public Services Act 1968 in 1989-90 towards the administrative costs of national citizen advocacy, which aims to promote the development of high quality citizen advocacy for mentally handicapped people in the United Kingdom. We are also contributing towards the cost of a project run by "one to one", an organisation which recruits and trains volunteers to act as friends, enablers and advocates of mentally handicapped people. We have no plans for formal independent advocacy schemes for other groups of disabled people.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will take steps to ensure that local authorities are authorised to make payments to disabled people for the purchase of care or personal assistance services.

Mr. Freeman: Local authorities are not authorised to make such payments and we have no plans further to do so. Nevertheless the White Paper "Caring for People" proposes that local authorities should set up systems for assessing the care needs of disabled people and arranging packages of care to meet them. Disabled people and their carers should be fully involved in this process.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security has just published a Command Paper, "The Way Ahead: Benefits for Disabled People" containing proposals for improvements in the structure of social security help for disabled people. These improvements, which will increase social security spending in 1993-94 by some £300 million as announced last week, reflect the Government's aim of ensuring a better life for Britain's disabled people.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether his Department is funding any independent case management schemes for disabled people.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Exeter (Mr. Hannam) on 20 December at column 339.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what date he now intends to implement section 3 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the right hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Exeter on 19 December 1989 at column 170.

NHS Staff

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many health authorities have now decided to take local action to fund increases for NHS clerical and administrative staff who were previously paid above the maximum of their former grade and who have assimilated to the minimum of their new grade;

(2) how many health authorities must now decide to take local action to fund increases for NHS clerical and administrative staff who were formerly paid on the maximum point of their salary scale and who have assimilated to the penultimate point of their new salary scale;

(3) if he will now consider issuing a variation order to the regrading structure national agreement relating to NHS clerical and administrative staff;

(4) what representations he has received from local health authorities regarding the need to issue a variation order to the regrading structure national agreement relating to NHS clerical administrative staff.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Such information is not held centrally. We have received no representations from health authorities about the need to issue orders varying the agreement reached last year in the administrative and clerical staffs Whitley council and have no plans to do so.

Sight Tests

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the change in the number of sight tests carried out after the introduction of charges for the latest period for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Figures on the number of NHS sight tests carried out between 1 April and 30 September 1989 will shortly be available. The results of a survey on the total number of sight tests in the first quarter of 1990 compared with earlier periods should be available after Easter.

Births

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for the years 1987 and 1988 the estimated percentage of women delivering in (a) England and (b) England and Wales whose deliveries were (i) spontaneous, including abnormal presentation of head and breech spontaneous, (ii) instrumental, including forceps vacuum and breech extractions, (iii) caesarean section and (iv) other and unspecified means.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information is not available for the years requested nor for England and Wales. The information for the latest year available, 1985, is given in the following table:

Deliveries
Percentage of deliveries by method of delivery: 1985
England

Mode of delivery	Percentage of all deliveries
Spontaneous delivery (including breech spontaneous and abnormal presentation of head)	78·8
Instrumental delivery (including forceps, vacuum and breech extraction)	10·7
Caesarean section	10·5
Other and unspecified means	0·1

Note: Percentages do not total 100 because of rounding.
Source: Hospital In-Patient Enquiry 1985.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for the years 1987 and 1988 the estimated percentages of women delivering in (a) England and (b) England and Wales (i) whose labours were induced, (ii) whose labours were of spontaneous onset and (iii) who had elective caesarean sections.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information is not available for the years requested nor for England and Wales. The information for the latest year available, 1985, is given in the following table:

Deliveries
Percentage of deliveries by method of delivery: 1985
England

Mode of delivery	Percentage of all deliveries
Induced labour	17·5
Spontaneous onset	65·5
Elective caesarean section	4·9
Accelerated labour	12·1

NHS Working Party

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will state (a) the members of the working party on National Health Service costing and their expertise, (b) the terms of reference of this working party, (c) when the working party expects to report and (d) whether he will place its conclusions in the Library.

Mr. Freeman: The working party is made up of a number of health authority directors of finance and departmental officers, including accountants and an economist.

Its remit is:

(i) to assist the NHS Management Executive in developing the principles for costing and pricing hospital services; and

(ii) to provide guidance to the NHS on the application of these principles.

The NHSME will shortly issue a discussion draft on the cost allocation principles for contract pricing. More detailed guidance will follow later in the year.

When the guidance exists in final form it will be placed in the Library.

Working for Patients

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assistance (a) for computerisation and information technology and (b) otherwise, he proposes to offer to general practitioners of medicine to carry out additional duties arising from the implementation of his White Paper, "Working for Patients"; and, in each case, what is his estimate of the cost of such assistance.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Hastings and Rye (Mr. Warren) on 28 November 1989 at columns 228-231. Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary legislation, in recognition of the additional work which practices will need to undertake in 1990-91 to prepare for fund-holding, costs incurred on these tasks will be reimbursed up to a maximum of £16,000. Practices which join the fund-holding scheme will be eligible for an annual management allowance of up to £32,000. The cost will depend on the number of fund-holders.

Prescription Pricing Authority

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what additional capital and revenue provision he has made in 1989-90 and succeeding years in the budget of the Prescription Pricing Authority for England; and what proportion of this is accounted for by the additional work for the authority arising from the White Paper "Working for Patients".

Mr. Freeman: The revenue allocation for the Prescription Pricing Authority for 1989-90 is £2·64 million higher than for 1988-89. The capital allocation is £0·9 million lower. Allocations for future years, including sums for work which the Prescription Pricing Authority is undertaking in respect of White Paper initiatives, have not yet been finalised.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he and his predecessors have taken since 1984 to identify alleged false prescriptions or overprescriptions; and what action has been taken as a result.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Arrangements exist for the Prescription Pricing Authority to forward to family practitioner committees, for their consideration, investigation and appropriate action, prescriptions where some irregularity is suspected. No central record is kept of the action taken by family practitioner committees in these cases, or in others which may come to their attention. Since 1984 doctors of the Department's regional medical service have visited over 2,800 practices whose prescribing costs overall were significantly above the local average. This has led to an estimated saving of around £15,000 per practice in a full year in 1989-90.

Census

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to amend procedures relating to the disclosure of information from the next census to take into account access to (i) the electoral register, (ii) the extract of the poll tax register and (iii) anonymous poll tax data; whether access to any of these could undermine the confidentiality of the census; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: As in past censuses, no information on identified individual people or households will be passed to anyone other than employees of the registrars general. Thus current procedures already prevent such information being passed to electoral registration officers or community charge registration officers. Furthermore, stringent measures already exist to guard against possible indirect disclosure of information on individual people or households through the published statistics and no incidents of such disclosure have been reported from the 1981 census. It is planned to strengthen these measures further for the 1991 census by doubling the minimum thresholds, below which no statistics, other than a simple total of people and households will be released for any area, to 16 households and 50 people.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to reassure individuals who complete the census that they will not be identified from the information subsequently disclosed by his Department; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Reassurance on confidentiality will be given on the front page of the census forms in the message addressed to heads of households and others responsible for completing the forms. It will also be reinforced in publicity material issued before the census.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will describe the uses of census data that specifically require the collection of the date of birth rather than the age of a person; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The question on date of birth is asked primarily because it has been found to give more accurate statistics than can be obtained by a question simply on age. As the census is taken in April the information on date of birth is used to produce the mid-year population estimates by age as at 30 June. Also, four dates of birth have been used to select the OPCS longitudinal study sample from the 1971 and 1981 censuses. OPCS plans to include in this study the appropriate sample of records from the 1991 census.

Birmingham Health Resources

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assurances have been given to the West Midlands regional health authority about the availability of the resources which will be required to implement the latest proposals entitled "Building a Healthy Birmingham."

Mr. Freeman: The overall level of resources available for the Health Service is determined each year in the public expenditure round. All RHAs are then told what resources they will be allocated in the next financial year. No Secretary of State could give any RHA assurances beyond this period because this is dependent upon the outcome of subsequent expenditure surveys.

999 Calls

Mr. Caborn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the average response time for the 999 calls for December 1989 in each of the health authorities covering south Yorkshire.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Details for activation and response times are not held centrally for December 1989. I suggest the hon. Member contacts the chairman of Trent regional health authority for the information he seeks.

Eye Tests

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research has been carried out on the impact on the number of people seeking eye tests of the introduction of a charge.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have recently commissioned a survey of the volume of sight tests. The survey will collect information on the numbers carried out during the first quarter of 1990 and the results compared with demand in earlier periods.

The findings should be available after Easter when we would expect to provide a summary for the Library.

Mentally Ill

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a further statement on the provision of community care for the mentally ill.

Mr. Freeman: In addition to the initiatives referred to in "Caring for People" (Cm 849), we have recently announced the establishment of a National Health Service loans fund, which we hope will enable the early provision of community facilities for people with a mental illness or handicap.

Hospital Capital Spending

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on future hospital capital spending.

Mr. Freeman: Exchequer provision for health authority capital spending for the next three years was announced in the Chancellor's Autumn Statement. Government spending on capital in the NHS will amount to some £1,086 million next year, a real terms increase of 12·4 per cent. over 1989-90. In addition health authorities will continue to benefit from receipts from land and property sales.

The Government attach the highest priority to improving and modernising health buildings and throughout England over 500 schemes each costing over £1 million with a total value of over £5 billion are at various stages of planning, design and construction.

Family Practitioner Committees

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the estimated cost of printing stationery changes involved in changing the name of family practitioner committees in the first year of implementation.

Mr. Freeman: It is not possible to make a reliable estimate of the cost of this proposal. The amount involved is likely to be very small as FPCs will be able to run down existing stocks in advance of the change and, where appropriate, use existing stocks until they are exhausted.

Perinatal Deaths

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action his Department proposes to take to reduce the perinatal death rate in those health authority areas where that death rate is higher than the national average.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the Government reply to the First Report from the Social Services Committee, Session 1988-89 on Perinatal, Neonatal and Infant Mortality (CM 741), a copy of which is available in the Library.

Air Ambulances

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for how long he has committed Government resources to the London Air Ambulance.

Mr. Freeman: The Department has committed resources for three years from January 1989.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much the Government are contributing to the financing of (a) the Cornwall First Air Ambulance and (b) the London Air Ambulance.

Mr. Freeman: The Department is contributing from central funds £673,000 (revenue) and £1,349,000 (capital) to the London Air Ambulance.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on how many occasions (a) the London Air Ambulance and (b) the Cornwall First Air Ambulance have been called out.

Mr. Freeman: This information is not held centrally by the Department.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what provision there is for carrying journalists or photographers on (a) the London Air Ambulance and (b) the Cornwall First Air Ambulance.

Mr. Freeman: There is no provision for carrying journalists or photographers on either of these services.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he, or one of his Ministers, has met representatives from (a) the Cornwall First Air Ambulance and (b) the London Air Ambulance, or has plans to do so.

Mr. Freeman: I have met representatives of the Cornwall First Air Ambulance Service operating company. I have no plans at present to meet other representatives.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he, or one of his Ministers, has visited or plans to visit (a) London Air Ambulance and (b) the Cornwall First Air Ambulance.

Mr. Freeman: Neither I nor my colleagues have visited either of these services and there are currently no arrangements to do so.

Personal Stereos

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has any evidence to suggest that the use of personal stereos causes a hearing loss; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: We are aware of the recent report by the National Deaf Children's Society which warns that personal stereos may be causing damage to the hearing of children and young people. However, we have not yet seen a copy of this report. There is evidence that prolonged exposure to loud noise may constitute a risk to hearing.

Unregistered Homes

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people currently live in unregistered homes, with fewer than four occupants.

Mr. Freeman: This information is not collected centrally.

Registered Homes Tribunals

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many tribunal cases there have been where it has come to light that the proprietor of a registered home has previous criminal convictions which would have made him unsuitable or ineligible to run a home.

Mr. Freeman: As at 31 December 1989 there have been six tribunal decisions confirming an authority's decision either to cancel or to refuse an application for registration because the appellant is not considered to be a fit person to be running a home in the light of a previous criminal conviction.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consideration he gives to the decisions of the registered homes tribunals and whether he has accepted any of their recommendations.

Mr. Freeman: The registered homes tribunals are independent statutory bodies. They are mainly concerned with appeals against the decisions of district health authorities and local authorities which are the registering authorities for nursing homes and most independent residential care homes respectively.

The Secretary of State is the registering authority only for voluntary children's homes and no appeal against his decisions has been made to the registered homes tribunal.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health where the decisions of the registered homes tribunal are circulated.

Mr. Freeman: Distribution of decisions of the registered homes tribunal includes the following:

Directors of Social Services Local Authorities England
General Managers District Health Authorities England
Association of County Councils
Association of Metropolitan Authorities
British Federation of Care Home Proprietors
Council on Tribunals
MIND (National Association for Mental Health)
National Care Homes Association
National Council for Voluntary Organisations
Social Care Association
Welsh Office
Libraries of the Houses of Parliament

Residential Care

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what figures he has for 1984-85 and for the latest available year of the average annual cost per client in residential care for the elderly in (a) Somerset, (b) Devon, (c) Dorset and (d) Wiltshire.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 18 December 1989]: The annual gross cost per client/place (excluding capital charges) for the elderly accommodated in the residential care homes operated by each of the local authorities in question is:

Somerset	5,138	7,564
Devon	4,837	7,263
Dorset	5,477	6,460
Wiltshire	4,662	6,724

The figures for 1989-90 are estimates only and are the costs per place filled, whereas the 1984-85 figures are the actual cost per resident.

The figures are taken from the "Personal Social Services Statistics" publications of the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy, copies of which are available in the Library.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what figures he has, for 1984-85 and for the latest available year, of the average annual cost per client in residential care for children in (a) Somerset, (b) Devon, (c) Dorset and (d) Wiltshire.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 18 December 1989]: The annual gross cost per client/place (excluding capital charges) for children accommodated in community homes operated by each of the local authorities in question is:

Somerset	14,862	22,323
Devon	14,990	21,387
Dorset	15,557	15,654
Wiltshire	13,667	17,477

The figures for 1989-90 are estimates only and are the costs per place filled, whereas the 1984-85 figures are the actual costs per resident child.

This and other information on the unit costs of children in residential care can be found in the "Personal Social Services Statistics" publications of the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy, copies of which are available in the Library.

Health Targets

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has adopted targets for the reduction in consumption of (a) saturated fats, (b) sugar, (c) sodium chloride and (d) alcohol; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 21 December 1989]: The Chief Medical Officer's Committee on the Medical Aspects of Food Policy (COMA) has considered the consumption of saturated fatty acids and sodium chloride in relation to cardiovascular disease and dietary sugars in relation to general health and made the following recommendations which we have accepted:

(a) saturated fatty acids—the maximum intake for saturated plus trans fatty acids should be 15 per cent. of total food energy. (COMA Report "Diet and Cardiovascular Disease")

(b) sugars—as sugars are the most important dietary factor in the cause of dental caries everyone should reduce the amount and frequency with which they take sugars. COMA did not, however, recommend a specific target. (COMA Report "Dietary Sugars and Human Disease")

(c) sodium chloride—as the dietary intake of salt is needlessly high there should be no further increase in consumption and ways of decreasing current levels should be sought. COMA did not, however, recommend a specific target. (COMA Report "Diet and Cardiovascular Disease")

The COMA panel on recommended daily amounts is currently considering setting benchmark figures for intakes by the population of saturated fatty acids, sugars and salt.

As far as alcohol is concerned we have accepted the views of three medical Royal Colleges that 21 units of alcohol per week for men and 14 units per week for women are sensible limits for the consumption of alcohol.

We are committed to ensuring that the best possible information about sensible eating and drinking is made available so that individuals can make informed choices.

Cancer Screening

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Easington (Mr. Cummings) on 13 December, Official Report, columns 677-79, he will extend the information provided about rates of cancer of the breast and cervix, and in similar form, for women aged 55 to 59 years, 60 to 64 years, 65 to 69 years and 70 plus years in the Northern and Yorkshire health regions and for the United Kingdom as a whole.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 8 January 1990]: The information is shown in the following tables:

Newly diagnosed cases of cancer, rates (per 100,000 population) for female breast[1] and the cervix uteri[2] by age group for Northern regional health authority, Yorkshire regional health authority and United Kingdom, 1980-84

Potassium Iodate

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many of the potassium iodate tablets held to counter possible ionising radiation have been held in stock for more than 10, five, two and one years, respectively; and how many are presently in stock altogether;

(2) what is his estimate for the shelf life of potassium iodate tablets.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 9 January 1990]: Arrangements for the stocking and issue of potassium iodate tablets form part of the contingency plans for both civil and defence nuclear installations. It should be noted that iodine tablets are a counter-measure for any long-term adverse health effects of radio-iodine only.

Contingency planning for civil nuclear accidents is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy (in respect of England and Wales) and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland, advised by the nuclear installations inspectorate of the Health and Safety Executive.

Contingency planning for defence nuclear accidents is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence.

The Central Electricity Generating Board has advised that it holds half a million tablets of potassium iodate centrally and another half million tablets distributed to the nuclear generating sites, all stock being batched in September 1989.

The Ministry of Defence has advised that it holds 2 million tablets of potassium iodate batched in 1986, and 2 million tablets batched in 1980-82 which have been examined and are still in good contition. Shelf life cannot be accurately predicted but stock quality and requirements are continually being reviewed and revised if necessary.

A further stock of tablets is also held by operators of sites such as British Nuclear Fuels plc and Atomic Energy Authority Technology.

In addition small stocks of potassium iodate and potassium iodide are held for other medical purposes by some manufacturers, pharmacists and hospitals.

Chernobyl

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what studies have been made of the amount of radiation recorded in Britain arising from the Chernobyl incident; and what assessment has been made of the implications of the amount of radiation recorded for the future incidence of radiation-induced congenital abnormalities and incidence of radiation-induced cancers over the next 30 years.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 9 January 1990]: There have been many studies of the occurrence and behaviour in Britain of radionuclides from the Chernobyl reactor accident.

Early measurements of dose rates, radionuclide concentrations in air, deposition, environmental materials and foods were collated by the National Radiological Protection Board. More detailed studies of the deposition on grass and soil have been carried out, and aerial surveys have been conducted in some areas. Extensive monitoring of radionuclides in foods has been carried out in England and Wales and in Scotland, and of radionuclides in surface and coastal waters of the British Isles. Studies of the levels in people have also been made. Numerous other studies have also been reported in the scientific literature.

The radiological impact of the Chernobyl accident has been assessed by OECD for many European countries. Estimates have been made of both the maximum levels of individual exposure and the typical levels of individual exposure for the United Kingdom together with the collective exposure of the entire United Kingdom population. Using the most recent risk estimates the theoretical number of fatal cancers arising in the United Kingdom from Chernobyl is estimated to be about 100 and the corresponding number of non-fatal cancers as 60. The majority of these would be expected to occur within 30 years. These figures can be compared with the annual mortality from cancer in the United Kingdom of around 100,000 to 150,000. The number of heriditary effects arising in the United Kingdom population over all time from the Chernobyl accident is estimated to be a few tens.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health who holds stocks of iodine tablets; and how many tablets are in stock per head of population and per head of population under the age of 18 years.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 9 January 1990]: Stocks of potassium iodate tablets are held at all CEGB nuclear installations and at some nearby sites, chiefly police stations and hospitals. These are specifically for issue to staff and people living in the vicinity of a nuclear installation should an accident occur in which radioactive iodine is released.

These supplies are in excess of those needed for a reference accident and supplies would be ample for an extended distribution if needed in the event of a more severe accident. In addition stocks held elsewhere could be made available within hours depending on the location of the accident.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Inheritance Tax

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the cost to the Exchequer if inheritance tax liabilities in respect of shares in closely held unquoted trading companies were rolled over until the shares were realised as cash or marketable securities.

Mr. Lilley: Information on which to base an estimate of cost is not available.

Gains

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the estimated cost to the Exchequer if all gains pre-1985 were to be exempted from tax instead of gains pre-1982.

Mr. Lilley: I regret that a reliable estimate could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

British Rail Investment

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what will be the cost to the Exchequer of British Rail's investment programme of £3·75 billion over the next three years.

Mr. Norman Lamont: British Rail's investment programme of £3·75 billion over the next three years will be financed from its own internally generated cash flow, which does not constitute public expenditure, and from external finance, which does. The Government's public expenditure plans for the next three years provide for a total of £2·2 billion of external finance for British Rail, of which grants account for £1·25 billion.

HMSO

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what specific financial, efficiency and quality of service targets he has approved for Her Majesty's Stationery Office Agency for the current year and for the longer term.

Mr. Ryder: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Stevenage (Mr. Wood) on 21 December 1989 (Official Report, col. 372) in respect of the financial target of £2·9 million for 1990.

Other performance targets I have agreed for 1990 are as follows:

Value for money	2 per cent. improvement in 1990 on 1989 for purchases of stationery and paper; office machinery and printing and binding.
Service and Quality	Print orders delivered to time	Vital 100 per cent. Overall 95 per cent.
	Print orders delivered without fault	100 per cent.
	Print production jobs delivered to time	Basic: 100 per cent. Overall: 95 per cent.
	Print production jobs delivered without fault	: 100 per cent.
Stock catalogue items		90 per cent. of customers orders despatched within five days of receipt.
		95 per cent. of all items and 97 per cent. of priority items despatched "first time" from stocks
	Publications—80 per cent. of customer orders and telephone orders from Publications Centre despatched within four days and 90 per cent. within five days of receipt.

In the longer term these targets should, where appropriate, become progressively more demanding.

Construction Company Earnings

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the average annual increase in the net earnings of construction companies between 1974 and 1979; and what has been the average annual increase since 1979.

Mr. Major: Based on figures extracted from published accounts, the average annual increase in net income of large construction companies was 12·5 per cent. between accounting years 1974 and 1979 and 11·6 per cent. between accounting years 1979 and 1988. Net income is defined as gross trading profit plus other revenue income less depreciation. The underlying figures are published in the MA3 series of business monitors "Company Finance".

Inflation

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the Government's target for inflation for the last quarter of 1991.

Mr. Ryder: The Government do not set specific targets for the rate of inflation. Tight monetary policy, supported by a firm fiscal position, will ensure that inflation moderates from its current level.

Nature Conservancy Council

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions have taken place between the Treasury and the National Audit Office concerning the Government's proposal to reorganise the Nature Conservancy Council.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 12 January 1990]: There have been no discussions between the Treasury and the National Audit Office on these proposals.

ENVIRONMENT

Inland Waterways

62. Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the present state of inland waterways.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The British Waterways Board is responsible for most of the inland waterways in Britain. The board is committed to realising the full potential of its waterways as an environmental and leisure resource and, where practicable, for freight transport. The Environment Select Committee, which reported on the board last August, found that the canals appeared to be in a better state overall than for many years previously.

Housing Exhibition

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition relating to housing to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Chope: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Services Committee, arrangements have been made with the authorities of the House for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from 12 to 16 March 1990.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the local authorities in England which had compiled their community charges register by 1 December 1989 as required.

Mr. Chope: All 366 charging authorities in England and Wales had compiled a community charges register by 1 December. Details of individual authorities' excellent register returns have been available from the Library of the House since 13 December.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the £10 premium received by unemployed people who are participating in the employment training scheme is disregarded for community charge purposes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The training premium paid to those participating in the employment training scheme is disregarded in the calculation of community charge benefit.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether 18-year-olds on the YTS are liable for the community charge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Those people who are on the youth training scheme and aged 18 or over are subject to the community charge. They will be able to apply for community charge benefit to help them with their payments.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the purposes for which a charging authority can use the information disclosed to it by a community charge registration officer for purposes other than those associated with the community charge; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Charging authorities derive their powers and duties from the Local Government Finance Act 1988, and in that capacity they have no functions other than those conferred in that Act.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received concerning the disclosure of anonymous poll tax data without the consent or knowledge of the poll tax payer; whether he will summarise the representations and place them in the Library; whether he plans to consult other organisations before introducing any regulation that allows for the disclosure of anonymous poll tax data; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The Office of the Data Protection Registrar has written seeking assurances about the disclosure of anonymous community charges register data and asking to be consulted on the regulations. Our intention is to consult other organisations before introducing any regulations allowing community charges registration officers to release non-personal data to third parties.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from local authorities on the need to disclose anonymous poll tax data; whether he will place a copy of the representations in the Library; what plans he has to ensure that the regulations that allow disclosure of anonymous poll tax data protect individuals from identification; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: One representation has been received on this subject from a local authority, making a case for allowing officers of the authority other than those involved in community charge registration to derive aggregate information from the register for planning and research purposes and for allowing the transfer of aggregate data to other authorities. The intention is that the regulation governing the release of data by community charges registration officers will enable them to release statistical data; there is no intention to create a power that enables an individual's privacy to be breached.

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether all local authorities on their community charge payment form are obliged to offer the facility of single payment by one member of the household, in accordance with former normal practice.

Mr. Chope: In order to increase the accountability of local authorities to their electorate, the community charge legislation requires every person who is liable to pay the personal community charge to be sent a demand notice. Where more than one person in a household receives a demand notice, it is a matter for members of that household to decide whether each individual should pay his or her own bill or whether to adopt some other arrangement.

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total revenue which local authorities in Great Britain expect to receive from (a) community charge and (b) business rates in 1990-91; and what was the income from (c) personal rates, and (d) business rates in 1989-90 in actual terms and as a percentage of (a) and (b) respectively.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 11 January 1990]: The information in the form requested is not available.

Regional Rivers Advisory Committees

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will name the nominating body for all those who so far have been appointed to the regional rivers advisory committees in (a) Yorkshire Water and (b) Severn Trent Water areas.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I am advised by the National Rivers Authority that the information requested as regards the regional rivers advisory committees for its Yorkshire and Severn Trent regions is as follows:

Environmental Labelling

Mr. Lord: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his eco-labelling initiative.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given on 9 January by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Northfield (Mr. King) (Official Report, Vol. 164, columns 589-91).

AIDS

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any proposals to carry out research to determine the longevity of HIV AIDS virus carried in untreated sewage into the sea.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Research to date shows that the numbers of HIV AIDS virus particles decrease very rapidly once infected fluids have left the body.

Sewage

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the cost of compliance with the proposed European Council directive Com(89)518 requiring the cessation of the disposal of sewage into the sea.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My Department has commissioned a study of the potential environmental benefits to the marine environment that may arise from treatment beyond the preliminary stage of sewage discharged to the sea; and of the costs of such further treatment. The study is expected to be completed shortly.

Bathing Waters

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if there are any popularly used inland bathing waters in the United Kingdom designated for compliance under the 76/160/European Community bathing water directive.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: There are no inland waters in the United Kingdom identified as bathing waters under directive 76/160/EEC.

Pesticides

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what monitoring his Department is undertaking of pesticides in streams and water supplies.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Water undertakers are responsible for monitoring the levels of pesticides in water supplies in accordance with the requirements of the Water Supply (Water Quality) Regulations 1989. In addition to the continuing role of local authorities in checking the quality of water supplies in their areas, the new drinking water inspectorate is responsible for ensuring that drinking water quality standards are met. The National Rivers Authority also monitors surface waters for those pesticides that are classified as European Community list I dangerous substances.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has made an assessment of the environmental impact of pesticide use on agricultural and other land.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The environmental impact of pesticide use is routinely assessed as part of the approval process specified in the Control of Pesticides Regulations 1986 made under the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985. The agreement of the Ministers of six Departments is needed before a pesticide can be approved for use, and Ministers are required to consult the independent Advisory Committee on Pesticides, which considers scientific information on all aspects of pesticide use, including the effect on agricultural and other land.

Historic Royal Palaces Agency

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what specific financial, efficiency and quality of service targets he has approved for the Historic Royal Palaces Agency for the current year and for the longer term.

Mr. Chris Patten: Detailed performance measures and targets for the Historic Royal Palaces Agency's commercial and non-commercial operations will be set out in its first corporate plan, which will be submitted for my approval in March. The corporate plan will provide the basis for the agency's performance—oriented management regime in its first full year of operation—1990-91—and beyond.

For the remainder of the current financial year the agency has continued with the management arrangements inherited from the Department, with the specific financial target of increasing the agency's surplus on its commercial activities from £2·3 million in 1988-89 to £3·8 million in 1990-91.

Disabled People (Housing)

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures his Department is taking to ensure that there is adequate good quality housing suitable and available for disabled people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Government's housing policies are aimed at securing decent housing provision for all our citizens, able bodied and disabled alike. Within the Housing Corporation programme, a place has always been found for spending to meet the needs of disabled people, and we have recently announced a doubling of that programme over the next three years. The new home renovation grant system, which will come into operation in April, will include special arrangements to facilitate works to enable disabled people to continue living in their own homes.

Cryptosporidium

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he has taken about the recommendations of Sir John Badenoch's committee as to the result of interim conclusions; and what response he has had from water undertakers, local authorities and health authorities in relation to cryptosporidium.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To discharge the remit of the group of experts on cryptosporidium in water supplies to make an interim report by the end of July 1989, Sir John Badenoch wrote to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Health on 25 July setting out the group's preliminary conclusions on measures to safeguard water supplies and on public health aspects of infection with cryptosporidium. The letter, a copy of which was placed in the Library, made it clear that further substantive reports containing conclusions and recommendations on the control of cryptosporidium would be prepared in due course by the group.

My Department sent Sir John's letter to water undertakers in August 1989 and endorsed the main recommendations. Copies of the letter were also sent by the Department of Health to the chief environmental health officers of local authorities and to the district general managers of health authorities and to other interests.

A co-operative research programme has now been put in hand involving Government Departments, water undertakers, the Water Research Centre and the Foundation of Water Research to take forward the expert group's research recommendations.

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what effect chlorination has on cryptosporidium; and what steps are being taken to protect public health from cryptosporidial infections in domestic water supplies.

Mr. Trippier: Cryptosporidium is unaffected by chlorine in the concentrations that can be used to treat drinking water. Sir John Badenoch, chairman of the group of experts on cryptosporidium in water supplies, wrote to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Health on 25 July 1989 setting out the group's preliminary conclusions on measures to safeguard water supplies and on the public health aspects of infection with cryptosporidium. The letter, a copy of which was placed in the Library, made it clear that further substantive reports containing conclusions and recommendations on the control of cryptosporidium would be prepared in due course by the group.

My Department sent Sir John's letter to water undertakers in August 1989 and endorsed the main recommendations. Copies of the letter were also sent by the Department of Health to the chief environmental health officers of local authorities and to the district general managers of health authorities and to other interests.

A co-operative research programme has now been put in hand involving Government Departments, water undertakers, the Water Research Centre and the Foundation of Water Research to take forward the expert group's research recommendations.

Toxic Pollution

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he is taking to evaluate the toxic pollution dangers of the use of (a) diacid ester hardeners, (b) acrylate, (c) silicate and aqua-reactive acrylic, (d) tanning/formaldehyde and (e) resoranol/formaldehyde grouts in tunnel construction in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Trippier: The Department of the Environment is not taking any specific action to evaluate the toxic pollution dangers of the materials listed in the question used as grouts in tunnel construction. There are general requirements in the Water Act 1989 to ensure that the use of substances, including chemical grouts, does not cause pollution of surface or ground waters. Substances in contact with water that is supplied for drinking, washing and cooking are subject to specific provisions in the Water Supply (Water Quality) Regulations 1989.

Landfill Sites

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what funds the Government are allocating to enable waste disposal authorities and other local authorities to locate and rehabilitate former landfill sites which now constitute a real or potential health hazard.

Mr. Trippier: Provision for credit approvals for local authority capital expenditure already reflects estimated expenditure needs to meet statutory responsibilities, including public health requirements to monitor and take action over potential hazards. For 1990-91 onwards, this will include specific provision for the capital cost of remedial works to deal with landfill gas on closed or completed sites. If a former landfill site is derelict, appropriate schemes may be eligible for reclamation under derelict land grant or through the urban programme.

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures the Government are taking to ensure that a clear and comprehensive register is kept of types, quantities and locations of materials currently being deposited in landfill sites and falling under the definitions of materials covered by the special waste regulations.

Mr. Trippier: There is an existing requirement under the Control of Pollution (Special Waste) Regulations 1980 for landfill operators to keep a register containing details of the types and quantities of special waste received and to record the location of each deposit by reference to the register.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the location of landfill sites known to cause groundwater contamination.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Complete and reliable information on landfill sites known to cause groundwater contamination is not held centrally. Waste disposal authorities and the NRA can advise on instances of groundwater contamination in their areas.

Oxide Emissions

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures the Government are taking to encourage the reduction of sulphurous and nitrous oxide emissions from oil refineries, manufacturing plants and coking plants.

Mr. Trippier: My Department issued a consultation paper on 31 August 1989 explaining in detail our proposals for implementing the EC Large Combustion Plants Directive, which applies to plants that are equal to or greater than 50MW thermal. Such plants are responsible for 85 per cent. of United Kingdom emissions of sulphur dioxide and about 40 per cent. of oxides of nitrogen. A copy of the paper is in the Library of the House.

The Environmental Protection Bill now before the House includes proposals to develop the current control regime operated by HMIP into a system of integrated pollution control. This will require major emitters to use best available techniques not entailing excessive cost (BATNEEC) to minimise releases of all pollutants, including sulphurous and nitrous oxides.

Motor Vehicles (Dumping)

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures the Government are taking to combat the illegal dumping of motor vehicles in rural areas.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Under sections 3 to 5 of the Refuse Disposal (Amenity) Act 1978 local authorities have a duty to remove abandoned motor vehicles from any land in the open air provided that they have placed a notice on each vehicle 15 days previously and that the owner of the land raises no objection. In addition, they have powers to dispose of the vehicles and to recover expenses incurred.

East Sussex County Council

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his standard spending assessment for East Sussex county council has taken account of the recent pay rise of the council's chief executive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The standard spending assessment for East Sussex county council will be calculated in accordance with the Revenue Support Grant Distribution Report (England) laid before the House of Commons on 11 January.

Hylands Park

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if a new date has been announced for the postponed public inquiry into the Hylands park, Chelmsford planning application; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: The public inquiry was postponed at the request of Chelmsford borough council to allow further negotiations to take place on these proposals. A new date will be arranged for the inquiry when those negotiations are completed.

Showmen's Guild

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action has been taken by his Department since 30 June 1989 to deal with the problems being experienced by members of the Showmen's Guild of Great Britain in the home counties and in particular (i) the Plantation, Redhill, (ii) Salfords, Reigate and (iii) the Turning Wheel, Crawley.

Mr. Moynihan: My Department has been preparing a consultation paper on measures designed to ease the problems experienced by travelling showpeople in obtaining planning permission for sites from which to base their operations. The sites mentioned by the hon. Member have been the subject of enforcement action, including appeals to the Secretary of State, which have been decided. My right hon. Friend has recently received an appeal against a refusal of planning permission for the use of land at the Plantation, Redhill; that will be the subject of a public local inquiry.

Commercial Properties (Revaluation)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about the revaluation of commercial properties since the publication of the details of the revaluations.

Mr. Chope: I have received a number of representations from hon. Members and from other sources. A non-domestic revaluation is now essential in order to remove the distortions caused by using values that are 17 years old. Any property tax, such as rates, must be based on up-to-date values if it is to be fair. The revaluation will, of course, reflect the level of market rents.

Moorland

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to increase access to moorland in the United Kingdom for walkers.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The existing network of 140,000 miles of rights of way in England and Wales already provides extensive opportunities for access to all types of countryside. Local authorities also have the power to enter into agreements with landowners where necessary to secure additional access to areas of open country, including moorland.

City Grants

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total value of city grants he expects to award in 1989-90.

Mr. Moynihan: We expect to approve city grants totalling about £60 million by the end of the financial year.

National Parks

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration he is giving to increasing the number of national parks.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My right hon. Friend has no such specific proposal in mind at present, but is always ready to consider suggestions.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he is having with his counterparts in overseas countries concerning the Montreal protocol and the limitations of chlorofluorocarbon; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Revisions to the Montreal protocol have recently been discussed by the European Community Environment Council. The protocol is to be revised at the second meeting of its parties to be held in London in June. The United Kingdom Government will be calling for the complete phasing out of CFCs. We are working for the general adoption of this position and to enlarge the numbers of signatories to the protocol.

Control of Pollution Act

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many prosecutions occurred under section 3 of the Control of Pollution Act 1974 in 1988; and how many were successful.

Mr. Trippier: In 1988 there were 227 prosecutions under section 3, of which 172 were successful.

Toxic Waste

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to legislate for the replacement of toxic waste incineration emissions with closed loop technology.

Mr. Trippier: Emissions to atmosphere from toxic waste incinerators are closely controlled by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution under the provisions of the Health and Safety at Work etc Act 1974. The Environmental Protection Bill currently before the House will strengthen those controls by requiring operators of prescribed processes to use the best available techniques, not entailing excessive costs, to minimise releases of prescribed pollutants.

My Department is promoting awareness of low-waste or clean technology through the environmental protection technology (EPT) scheme. A booklet on clean technology was published in November 1989 describing examples where British industry has successfully introduced new cleaner technology to bring about environmental and economic benefits. My Department will also be hosting in September a three-day seminar on the subject of "Cleaner Production" to promote the exchange and dissemination of information about clean technology at the international level.

Waste Disposal

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to make pollution prevention an integral part of all waste disposal plans.

Mr. Trippier: I am considering the need for such a provision.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to make the submission of a detailed waste minimisation plan a pre-condition for the issue of every waste disposal site licence.

Mr. Trippier: Waste disposal licences generally control activites at the point of waste disposal, not of waste production. Consequently, it would be inappropriate to require waste licence holders to produce waste minimisation plans.

Pollution Prevention

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will give details of studies into pollution prevention conducted by his Department in each of the last five years;

(2) if he will list the amount spent by his Department for each year since 1979 on research into pollution prevention.

Mr. Trippier: The figures for expenditure by the Department of the Environment on research on environmental protection, excluding countryside research, between 1979-80 and 1988-89 are as follows:

	£ million
1979-80	12·6
1980-81	18·3
1981-82	18·3
1982-83	17·5
1983-84	17·2

	£ million
1984-85	16·4
1985-86	20·3
1986-87	21·5
1988-89	22·6

The reports of the studies supported by this expenditure covering the years 1984-88 are listed in the DoE biennial R and D reports, copies of which are held in the Library of the House. The list for 1989 is in preparation and will be published in the next DoE R and D report.

Plastics (Recycling)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a further statement on the recycling of plastics within the United Kingdom.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The recycling of plastics is currently being specifically addressed by an expert working group consisting of representatives from Government, local authorities, industry and the voluntary sector with the aim of improving the rate of plastics recycling.

Leakage Control

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 6 December 1989, Official Report, column 211, why he has decided not to publish a further edition of the leakage control policy and practice report.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Decisions on whether to prepare and publish reports on such operational matters are for the water industry.

Road Building

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the environmental impact of an increased road-building programme.

Mr. Moynihan: The expanded road programme announced in the White Paper, "Roads for Prosperity", took account of all relevant factors including environmental effects. Individual road projects are subject to environmental appraisal.

Leigh Interests plc

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from Leigh Interests regarding the Environmental Protection Bill; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: I have received representations from Leigh Interests concerning the responsibility for control of treatment facilities and landfills under parts I and II of the Bill.

Standard Spending Assessment (Thanet)

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what account has been taken, in deciding the standard spending assessment figure, of the number of retired residents within the Thanet district council area; and what account was taken in deciding the allowance made for visitors under grant-related expenditure allocation.

Mr. Chope: The number of elderly people and the number of elderly people living alone or on income support are included in the component of the standard spending assessment for personal social services for Kent county council. Retired people are included in the estimates of total population used in other SSA components. Details may be found in the Revenue Support Grant Distribution Report (England) (HC 049) laid before the House on 11 January. Within grant-related expenditure assessment (GREs), 2 per cent. of the control total for the recreation element was distributed on the basis of visitor nights.

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the increase in the standard spending assessment for Thanet district council over the 1989-90 grant-related expenditure assessment; and what is the average standard spending assessment increase for the same period for the other Kent districts.

Mr. Chope: The 1990-91 standard spending assessment for Thanet district council has increased by 6·5 per cent. over the comparable adjusted figure for the 1989-90 grant-related expenditure assessment. The mean-average increase in 1990-91 SSA over comparable adjusted 1989-90 GREA for the other Kent district councils is 18·2 per cent.

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will bring forward measures to reduce emission of carbon dioxide ahead of the second world climate conference in November 1990.

Mr. Trippier: Effective measures to reduce emissions of carbon dioxide must be taken in the international context and such measures will be considered at the second world climate conference. Nevertheless, within the Department of the Environment we have recently announced changes to the building regulations, which will result in significant improvements in energy efficiency and we shall continue to keep all areas of our responsibilities under review. The principal sources of emissions of carbon dioxide are from the energy and transport sectors, and measures to reduce these are matters for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Energy and for Transport.

North Sea

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of radiation from artificial nuclides entering the North sea emanates from (a) wastes from the nuclear power industry, (b) radioisotope production, (c) uses of radioactivity in medicine, (d) teaching and research operations, (e) fall-out from nuclear weapons testing and (f) fall-out from other sources.

Mr. Trippier: The information is not available in the form requested. Estimated inputs of radioactivity to the North sea from nuclear establishments are contained in the report of the "Quality Status of the North Sea" (1987), a copy of which is in the Library. Also, a European Community study known as "Project Marina", assessing the radiological exposure of the population of the European Community from radioactivity in the north-east Atlantic has been undertaken; a report of which should be published in due course by the Commission of the European Community.

Deer

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the circulation of the Nature Conservancy Council report by V. P. W. Lowe on "Wild and Feral Deer in Great Britain", reference number NCC/NERC contract HF3/05/43.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I have been asked to reply.

This interim report was circulated in 1979 and 1980 among Government Departments, and some other interested organisations, including the British Deer Society and the Institute of Biology.

Wath upon Dearne (Waste)

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the conclusion by the United States Environmental Protection Agency that the toxic elements in the waste held at Wath upon Dearne are not hazardous.

Mr. Trippier: As I have already indicated in my letter to the hon. Member, we accept the conclusion of the report by the Environmental Protection Agency that, on the basis of the specific criteria applied under the US Resource, Conservation and Recovery Act, the wastes are non-hazardous. I am considering, as a matter of urgency, what further action can be taken.

Opencast Mining

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the environmental implications of opencast mining operations.

Mr. Moynihan: The environmental implications of opencast mining operations can often be considerable. It is for this reason that while it is necessary to recognise the economic benefits of mineral production it is essential that the impact of proposals on the environment is carefully assessed, and where necessary an environmental impact statement prepared. It is also necessary to ensure that sites are well managed in environmental terms and restored to a high standard. All mining operations should take account of best environmental practice. Recently published guidelines on opencast mineral workings set tough environmental standards.

Gallstone Crushing Equipment

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much money is spent annually on ultrasonic gallstone crushing equipment; and where in the south-east these machines are located.

Mr. Freeman: I have been asked to reply. Extra-corporeal shock wave lithotripters were used originally for treating kidney stones. With assistance from the Department of Health, Trent regional health authority is carrying out an evaluation of the use of a lithotripter in the treatment of gallstones.

We are aware of one lithotripter located within a National Health Service hospital in the south-east which might be used to treat gallstones. This is at St. Peter's hospital in London. There are also facilities at private sector hospitals.

We have no details of the prices paid for these machines, since these are confidential between the buyers and sellers.

THE ARTS

Wilding Report

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will make a statement on the merger proposed in the Wilding report between the Crafts Council and the Arts Council.

Mr. Luce: I shall make an announcement as soon as I have had an opportunity to consider the responses to the Wilding report.

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Minister for the Arts what recent representations he has received about the Wilding report on funding the arts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: I have received about 6,000 responses, of which approximately 4,500 are postcards. I shall be announcing my response to the report as soon as possible.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will make a statement on the regional implications of the Wilding report.

Mr. Luce: I shall announce my response to the Wilding report as soon as possible.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister for the Arts what representations he has received from the north-west about his proposed reorganisation for regional arts administration.

Mr. Luce: I have received a number of representations from individuals and organisations in the north-west area about the Wilding report.

Industrial Museums

Mr. Pike: To ask the Minister for the Arts what financial support his Department gives to working industrial museums.

Mr. Luce: The many working industrial museums around the country play an important part in preserving our industrial heritage.

Funding from the Office of Arts and Libraries for local museums in England is disbursed via the Museums and Galleries Commission (MGC) and the network of seven area museum councils and a number of working industrial museums benefit from these funds. Additionally, the Science museum, on behalf of the MGC, administers a grant scheme which has recently expanded in scope to assist with the preservation as well as the purchase of industrial and scientific material. In November 1989 I announced an increase of £1 million over the next three years to the local museums purchase funds, of which this is one.

The MGC is also able to offer professional advice and operates a capital grant scheme to assist with the cost of housing collections. Area museum councils give grants for restoration and conservation and also offer advice on a wide range of subjects, including interpretation, training and marketing and management.

Library Service

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will make a statement on public spending plans for the library service.

Mr. Luce: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave him on 11 December 1989 (Official Report, column 447).

CIVIL SERVICE

Agency Status

Mr. Stern: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service whether he has any plans to announce further candidates for agency status.

Mr. Luce: Ten executive agencies have been established so far, and Departments have announced a further 43 activities as candidates for agency status. In addition, a variety of activities are currently being considered internally by Departments as potential candidates for executive agency status, and I expect that a number of these will be formally announced as candidates in due course.

Civil Service College

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service, what specific financial, efficiency and quality of service targets he has approved for the Civil Service college for the current year and for the longer term.

Mr. Luce: The Civil Service college executive agency's primary measure of performance will be its ability to cover its costs from income. Other targets for the current and next four years are as follows:

	1988-90	1990-91	1991-92	1992-93	1993-94
Student	20,000	20,000	20,000	20,000	20,000
Student days	77,000	76,000	75,000	75,000	75,000
Course days	4,900	4,700	4,545	4,545	4,545
Ratio of course days to student days	15·7	16·2	16·5	16·5	16·5
Percentage of students at Grade 7 and above	23·8	25·5	27·5	30·0	33·2
Private sector students	420	500	600	870	1,200
Percentage	2·1	2·5	3·0	4·4	6·0
Course evaluation indicators in top two (of six categories per cent.)	76	77	78	79	80

In addition, there are targets for "cost per student day".

For 1990-91 and subsequent years, additional targets will be set in respect of an overall value-for-money indicator, the percentage of students studying for externally validated qualifications, examination pass rates, and the college's incomes from consultancy as a percentage of total incomes.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Funeral Payments

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications for funeral payments were granted from the social fund during the last 12 months for which he has figures available; and what was the average amount paid.

Mr. Scott: In the 12 months ending November 1989 a total of 41,247 funeral payments were awarded. The average payment was £522.

Local Offices

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list by location for south Yorkshire, the Department of Social Security offices that are due to close during the coming year; how many staff will be transferred; and to what locations.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: A review of the organisational pattern of all local offices is under way, including those in south Yorkshire. No firm proposals have yet been produced. Full consultation with all interested parties will take place in the normal way at the appropriate time if any changes are proposed.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what account is taken of the wind chill factor in determining the temperature information for cold weather payments.

Mr. Scott: None.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list individually the new description of the areas covered by national climatological message stations, in relation to cold weather payments.

Mr. Scott: The changes to the descriptions of areas linked to the national climatological message stations in the schedule to the Social Fund Cold Weather Payments (General) Regulations 1988 (SI 1988/1724) are listed in regulation 3 of the Social Fund Cold Weather Payments (General) Amendment Regulations 1989 (SI 1989/2388).

Income Support

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what number of people living within the (a) Doncaster and (b) Wath-on-Dearne Department of Social Security areas, are in receipt of income support for the latest available date for which he has figures; and what are the figures for 12 months ago.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The information is set out in the table:

Local office	Numbers in receipt of Income Support on 30 November 1988	30 November 1989
Doncaster (East)	10,164	10,039
Doncaster (West)	12,951	13,388
Wath-on-Dearne	7,118	7,552

Source: 100 per cent count of cases in action. The figures given include a small number of cases not actually in receipt of benefit.

Resettlement Agency

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what specific financial, efficiency and quality of service targets he has approved for the Resettlement Agency for the current year and for the longer term.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Resettlement Agency was initially set the following specific targets, which are subject to annual review:

Efficiency and effectiveness of Units

(a) To achieve a cumulative reduction of a least 1·5 per cent. per annum in the running costs of DSS resettlement units net of accommodation charges over the next three years (ie 1989-90 to 1991-92) without reducing standards. The savings will be made available for redeployment within the Agency budget, in accordance with nil cost package. The chief executive will produce proposals for use of the 1989-90 savings to the July 1989 meeting with Under-Secretaries.

(b) To establish a training strategy for staff, by March 1990.

(c) To present manpower proposals, based on the 1988-89 staff inspection to the September 1989 meeting with Under-Secretaries.

(d) To devise a scheme to assist resettlement units' managers to compare the effectiveness of units on a common basis, with an interim report in March 1990.

Replacement programmes

As provided for in the financial plan, to close:—
1990-91 2 Units
1991-92 4 Units

Efficiency and effectiveness of replacement provision

To commission and mount a research study to monitor the 36-bed direct access hostel opened in January 1989 and run by the London borough of Lewisham as part of the scheme to replace the Camberwell resettlement unit in 1985. The objective will be to examine the service provided both to ensure value for money and that a good standard of care and resettlement results.

Disability Benefits

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment his Department is making of the adequacy of disability benefits to meet daily living costs and extra costs of disability.

Mr. Scott: The findings of the surveys of disability carried out by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys (OPCS) between 1985 and 1988 clearly showed that in general the benefits paid to meet the extra costs of disability, attendance allowance and mobility allowance, are more than sufficient to cover the average extra costs of disability. The initial results of a follow-up to the OPCS surveys in the family expenditure survey confirm these findings. The OPCS surveys provided comparisons between the incomes of disabled people and their counterparts in the general population but did not assess the adequacy of income maintenance benefits paid to disabled people.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether, in the last six months, his Department has issued revised guidelines to doctors assessing fitness for work of people in receipt of disability benefits.

Mr. Scott: No.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has any plans to revise restart interviews, availability for work tests, and actively seeking work requirements, as they affect people who receive benefit as a result of their disablement.

Mr. Scott: Payment of most benefits for the disabled does not require disabled people to be available for, or actively seeking, employment. In the case of unemployment benefit and income support on the basis of unemployment, regulations provide for full account to be taken of any limitations imposed by disablement. We have no plans to alter this approach. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Employment has responsibility for the administration of the law governing claims for unemployed people, including the conduct of restart interviews.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if, pursuant to his statement on benefits for the disabled of 10 January, the new disablement employment credit will be available to all those who gain low-paid work after claiming a state benefit relating to their disablement; if there will be a child care addition; and if those on the benefit will receive additions for work expenses related to their disablement.

Mr. Scott: The Government propose that the new disability employment credit to be introduced in April 1992 will be available to people receiving the new disability allowance or to those who were receiving invalidity benefit, severe disablement allowance or the income support or housing benefit disability premium before starting work. Claimants will also need to satisfy a doctor that they are only partially capable of work. Precise details of the new benefit are still to be considered.

Mobility Allowance

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will consider extending the scope of the mobility allowance scheme to cover applicants who can show that they would have qualified for the allowance if they had made application before becoming 66 years of age and are now prevented from receiving the allowance only because they were unaware of the cut-off age of 66 years; and if he will estimate the costs involved in any such extension.

Mr. Scott: Although mobility allowance can be claimed during the year in which a person is aged 65, the medical eligibility criteria need to be fulfilled before the person reaches that age. We regard a year as a reasonable period to allow for making a claim, especially as the steady growth in the number of recipients indicates that the existence of the allowance is widely known. I regret that it is not possible to provide a reliable estimate of the cost of an extension of the upper age limit for claiming.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what further plans he now has to increase the availability of mobility allowance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what consideration he is giving to the introduction of a costs allowance for disabled people not helped by either mobility allowance or attendance allowance.

Mr. Scott: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security announced on 10 January, at columns 941-52, that the Government propose to introduce a new disability allowance for people of working age and below which will extend help with the extra costs of disability to people with moderate to severe disabilities who do not at present qualify for mobility allowance or attendance allowance. For people whose disability begins before age 65, the new allowance will subsume the help currently given through attendance allowance and mobility allowance within a common structure and extend help to people with care and mobility needs who do not currently qualify for attendance allowance or mobility allowance.

Disability Income

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment his Department has made of the cost of implementing a comprehensive disability income scheme along the lines proposed by the disability benefits consortium.

Mr. Scott: The comprehensive disability income scheme described by the disability benefits consortium in its paper circulated on 15 December 1989 is not described in sufficient detail for a reliable estimate of its cost to be made.

Statistics

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether his Department has produced advice on the disclosure of statistical data which are derived from information that concerns living individuals, so as to ensure that the disclosure in question does not identify individuals; and whether he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: This Department has not produced advice on the disclosure of statistical data. The Government statistical service produced and published in 1984 a document which provides strict guidance in this area and the Department closely follows this advice—"The Government Statistical Service Code of Practice on the Handling of Data Obtained from Statistical Enquiries", Cmnd. 9270. A copy is available in the Library. The relevant sections are contained in pages 5 and 6 of the paper.

OPCS Reports

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security to which organisations his Department has circulated copies of the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys reports for comment.

Mr. Scott: Copies of the OPCS reports dealing with the prevalence of disability and the financial circumstances of disabled people were sent by the Department to the following organisations of and for disabled people:

Access Committee for England
Action for Research into Multiple Sclerosis
Age Concern[1]
Arthritis Care
Association for Spina Bifida and Hydrocephalus
British Diabetic Association
British Epilepsy Association
Centre on Environment for the Handicapped
Disability Alliance[2]
Disablement Income Group
Disabled Living Foundation
Help the Aged[1]
Multiple Sclerosis Society of Great Britain and Northern Ireland
National Association for Mental Health
National Council for Carers
Parkinson's Disease Association[1]
Royal Association for Disability and Rehabilitation
Royal National Institute for the Blind
Royal National Institute for the Deaf
Royal Society for Mentally Handicapped Children and Adults
Scottish Council on Disability
Scottish Society for the Mentally Handicapped
SENSE—National Deaf-Blind and Rubella Association
Spastics Society
Wales Council for the Disabled.

[1] These organisations received only copies of the reports dealing with the circumstances of adults and not those dealing with children.
[2] A federation of over 80 organisations of and for disabled people.

Copies of these reports were also sent to a number of other bodies with an interest in issues concerning disabled people such as Motability and the local authority associations.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations have been made to his Department about the accuracy of the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys findings on extra costs incurred by disabled people as a result of their disability.

Mr. Scott: The findings of the surveys of disability carried out by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys were based on a sample of over 10,000 people. Representations have been received from the Disablement Income Group, the Royal National Institute for the Blind, and the Spastics Society. These organisations carried out three separate studies based on 10 or 13 cases, which suggested that the extra costs of disability were higher than the averages found by OPCS.

Ombudsman Reports

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many reports his Department has received from the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration on matters referred to the commission by hon. Members concerning the administration of his Department in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The information requested is provided in the table:

DHSS and DSS cases investigated by the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration to conclusion, with reports issued

Year	Number
1985	[1]76
1986	[1]86
1987	[1]82
1988	[1]62
1989	[2]60

These cases include only two-three DH cases each year.

Pensions

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the membership and functions of the joint working group on occupational and personal pensions; when it was set up; if he will place a record of its proceedings in the Library; and whether it has considered the need for advice to members of personal and other money-purchase pension schemes on the age at which they should consider discontinuing their contributions to those schemes.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The occupational pensions schemes joint working group was set up and is run by representative bodies in the pensions industry. Its members are the Association of British Insurers, the Association of Consulting Actuaries, the National Association of Pension Funds and the Society of Pensions Consultants. Neither my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security nor departmental officials have any involvement with the group. Inquiries concerning group proceedings should be directed to the group members.

Quite separately, from time to time officials in the Department consult representatives of various organisations concerned with occupational and personal pensions through a consultative group which meets when the need arises. The bodies circulated are the following:

Association of British Insurers
Association of Consulting Actuaries
Association of Pension Lawyers
British Bankers Association
Building Society Association
Friendly Societies Liaison Committee
Government Actuary's Department
Inland Revenue
National Association of Pension Funds
Nationalised Industries Pension Group
Occupational Pensions Board
Securities and Investments Board
Security of Pensions Consultants
Unit Trust Association

Discussions are informal. No minutes are kept.

On the question of advice to pension scheme members, it is for an individual member of an occupational or personal pension scheme to seek advice appropriate to his or her needs.

National Insurance Contributions

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has for the reform of the system of national insurance contributions; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: A reform of the system of national insurance contributions for employees was introduced last October. We have no current plans for further major reforms. Some minor changes are proposed in the Social Security Bill.

Claimants

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants registered as of no fixed abode there were in England and Scotland in each year from 1979 to 1989.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Social Security Spending

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total amount spent on social security in the United Kingdom, in actual and at 1989 prices, for each of the years 1978-79 to 1990-91, or for the latest year available; and what was the percentage increase for each year.

Mr. Scott: The information for Great Britain is set out in the table. Information about costs of benefits in Northern Ireland is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

DEFENCE

HMS Conqueror

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will now place in the Library a copy of the captain's narrative of HMS Conqueror's Falklands deployment.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No. The narrative concerns classified operational matters.

Military Training

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many episodes of injury attributable to excessive heat or insolation have occurred to members of the forces since 1978 and the last year for which figures are available; how many of these occurred during military exercises and other forms of training; and how many deaths were recorded from such causes in the same period.

Mr. Neubert: The figures requested relating to episodes of injury and death attributable to excessive heat or insolation within the Services area are as follows:

	1978	1979	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985	1986	1987	1988	Total 1978-88

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many members of the forces have (a) collapsed and (b) died while taking part in a mud run in the last five years.

Mr. Neubert: Statistical information specifically relating to injuries on the mud run is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Only one death is recorded in the period 1983-88 which can be attributed to a mud run.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many service men taking part in the combat fitness test have collapsed and required medical attention; and how many have died, since April 1984.

Mr. Neubert: Statistical information specifically relating to the combat fitness test is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if external medical advice has been sought regarding health dangers from mud runs.

Mr. Neubert: No, but due consideration is given by tri-service medical authorities to any advice or information, from whatever source, which might prove beneficial to the health and safety of service personnel.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions when there has been a collapse of a service man due to heatstroke, disciplinary action has been brought against the senior or junior officers involved.

Mr. Neubert: None over the last 10 years for which records are available.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information was given to the family and the solicitor of Sub-Lieutenant Simon Rowland regarding the circumstances of his collapse; and if he intends to make publicly available any information on this case of heatstroke.

Mr. Neubert: No approach has been made to my Department by a solicitor acting on behalf of Sub-Lieutenant Rowland. My officials have, however, written to Mr. and Mrs. Rowland to say that a full and comprehensive summary of the Board of Inquiry report will be sent to them as soon as it is possible to do so. It is not Ministry of Defence policy to release outside the Department information of a personal or medical nature, other than to the person concerned or to the nominated next of kin.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what medical advice he has received regarding the body temperature likely to be generated on a mud run.

Mr. Neubert: Advice relating to heat injury, its prediction, prevention and treatment is provided by the defence medical services. It does not specifically relate to mud runs.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made with the disciplinary investigation that was ordered after the collapse from heatstroke of Sub-Lieutenant Simon Rowland.

Mr. Neubert: As a result of the Board of Inquiry held to consider the collapse of Sub-Lieutenant Rowland, the Flag Officer Naval Air Command directed that the Naval Provost Marshall carry out a disciplinary investigation. The report has now been received and is being studied by the Flag Officer Naval Air Command. A decision on any further action will be made as soon as possible.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will introduce automatic courts-martial of training instructors in all cases of death or permanent injury due to heatstroke in training or assessments.

Mr. Neubert: No. In any such case it is the responsibility of the relevant service authority to determine what, if any, disciplinary action should be taken.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how his Department defines episodes of injury attributable to excessive heat or insolation.

Mr. Neubert: The Department defines "episodes of injury attributable to excessive heat or insulation" with reference to two statistical classifications; the "Manual of the International Statistical Classification of Diseases, Injuries and Causes of Death (ICD)" and the "NATO Armed Forces Supplement to the Manual of the ICD: External Cause of Injury Code, STANAG 2050".

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what cause of death was given by the post mortem in the case of Timothy Lester, a sapper in the Royal Engineers who died in a British military hospital in Hanover, West Germany, on 27 May 1989; and how his death was recorded.

Mr. Neubert: The report of a post mortem examination on Sapper Timothy Lester recorded the cause of death as shown by examination appearing to be:

(a) cerebral oedema
(b) hepato-renal failure
(c) heat-stroke injury

which was recorded on the death certificate.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the case of the lieutenant in REME who died in Hong Kong on 11 July 1980 was included in the figure of 11 deaths from heatstroke given in the letter of 29 June 1988 to the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South.

Mr. Neubert: Yes.

Weapons

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the Government's policy on the introduction of new weapons into service that are known to be banned under bilateral treaties between NATO and Warsaw pact countries to which Britain is not a signatory.

Mr. Neubert: The United Kingdom does not possess any such weapons, nor have we plans to acquire any.

Service Schools

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the conditions of service and methods of determining pay of locally employed teachers in service schools are being reviewed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr Neubert: The pay and conditions of service of all locally entered staff employed by the MOD overseas are kept under regular review.

European Defence

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what are the considerations which have prompted him to decide that the United Kingdom should participate in the European co-operative long-term initiative for defence;

(2) what benefits will accrue to the United Kingdom from participation in the European co-operative long-term initiative for defence;

(3) what sums of money have been committed to the European co-operative long-term initiative for defence; and what sums are likely to be committed in the next five years.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how much money Her Majesty's Government have committed to the European co-operative long-term initiative for defence; and if he will make a statement;

(2) when parliamentary approval was given for funding for the European co-operative long-term initiative for defence; under what Vote subhead it appears; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: EUCLID was launched by the Defence Ministers of the Independent European Programme Group in June 1989 to establish a European defence research and technology programme in a number of key areas for the future. Its aim is to improve the value for money from defence research by making more efficient use of the resources available in Europe. This is turn should facilitate co-operation on resulting projects.

No money has yet been committed by any nation to EUCLID. It is expected that the first detailed collaborative programmes will be agreed in the course of this year. The precise extent of United Kingdom funding will then be determined, and will come from moneys voted for by defence research.

I refer to the replies given to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas) on 24 July 1989 and to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 14 December 1989.

Laser Weapons

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the purpose of the laser weapon fitted to HMS Coventry; what is its applicability as a weapon for all services; whether the manufacturer is British; and if he will make a statement about his policy on the introduction of the laser weapon.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Laser dazzle devices have been developed as an additional, non-lethal means of self-defence for Her Majesty's ships. They are supplied by the British company, Irwin-Desman Limited. The Government's aim in equipping Royal Navy ships with such devices is to safeguard the lives of British service men.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is his Department's policy on the use by Royal Navy ships of the laser dazzle sight system during naval exercises;

(2) whether Royal Navy ships have used the laser dazzle sight system during naval exercises; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: The laser dazzle device is not used by the Royal Navy during naval exercises.

Weapons (Northern Ireland)

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy as to the use of weapons not officially issued by the Army serving in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Only authorised weapons should be used by the Army in Northern Ireland.

Captain Fred Holroyd

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will acquire for the library of the Ministry of Defence a copy of the book "War Without Honour" by Fred Holroyd.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A copy is already held in the Ministry of Defence library.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will take steps to ascertain from Major-General McGhie the precise contents of the statement referred to in the Adjournment debate on 29 November 1989, Official Report, column 818.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No. Major-General McGhie died in 1985.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations have been received concerning a request for a second medical opinion by a doctor, military or civilian, regarding the case of Captain Fred Holroyd, retired.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I am not aware of any recent representations.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what undertakings have been given to Captain Fred Holroyd (retired) since September 1976 concerning investigation of his allegations relating to events in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I am not aware of any undischarged undertakings.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether there have been any developments relating to the case of Captain Fred Holroyd following the Adjournment debate on 29 November 1989, Official Report, columns 812-20.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I am not aware of any.

European Fighter Aircraft

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Fylde (Mr. Jack) on 9 January, Official Report, column 805, whether a decision on the procurement of a radar for the European fighter aircraft will be made prior to his meeting with the West German Defence Minister.

Mr. Alan Clark: No. A decision on the choice of radar is a matter for the four participating countries.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration has been given to the need to maintain sufficient industrial capacity to meet future defence requirements in the procurement plans for the radar for the European fighter aircraft.

Mr. Alan Clark: In accordance with our procurement policy, the objective of the procurement strategy for the radar for the European fighter aircraft (EFA) has been to obtain a radar which meets the operational requirements of the partner nations at the best possible value for money. We always take into account the availability of suppliers to meet future requirements when assessing the value for money offered by competing bids.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the inclusion of aircraft in the CFE negotiations has had any effect on the procurement plans for the European fighter aircraft.

Mr. Alan Clark: There has been no change in the declared production offtake of 250 aircraft.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether there have been any changes to the projected in-service date of the European fighter aircraft in the last two years.

Mr. Alan Clark: Our aim remains to bring EFA into service in the mid-1990s.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he now expects a decision to be taken on which industrial consortium will be allocated the contract to develop the nose radar for the European fighter aircraft.

Mr. Alan Clark: I cannot forecast when a decision on the choice of radar might be made; but am anxious for the negotiations to be concluded as soon as possible.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has any plans to discuss the development of the European fighter aircraft with the Governments of the other three nations participating in the programme.

Mr. Alan Clark: My right hon. Friend meets his colleagues in the EFA project at regular intervals in a variety of fora. He expects to meet his German counterpart shortly for discussions on a wide range of issues.

West German Defence Minister

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he next expects to meet his West German counterpart.

Mr. Alan Clark: My right hon. Friend will be meeting Dr. Stoltenberg shortly for discussions on a wide range of issues.

Ambulance Duties

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the cost per Army man hour of deploying the Army on ambulance duties.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 8 January 1990]: I am replying on behalf of my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Health. Only extra costs directly attributable to the ambulance dispute are reported for recovery from other Government Departments. Such extra costs are not directly related to the number of man hours worked. The estimated extra costs up to 30 November 1989 are £0·85 million.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

New Forest (Hunting)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place in the Library (a) copies of the licences to hunt issued by the Forestry Commission for each of the last four years in respect of the New Forest and (b) in respect of each licence a copy of the special list of conditions.

Mr. Curry: The documents requested by the hon. Member have today been placed in the Library of the House.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with the north Yorkshire trading standards department concerning bovine spongiform encephalopathy.

Mr. Maclean: None, but my officials met the county trading standards officer for north Yorkshire in his capacity as secretary of the local authorities national animal health panel on 27 October 1989 to discuss various issues concerning BSE and will be meeting him again shortly.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number of cows with bovine spongiform encephalopathy that have been identified (a) on farms, (b) in slaughterhouses, (c) in auction markets and (d) in other places, by county.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 11 January 1990]: The information is not available in the form requested. It should be noted that as a result of the measures which my right hon. Friend announced on 8 November, those bovine tissues most susceptible to harbouring the BSE agent must be removed from human consumption for all animals more than six months old. So even if infected animals, or those suffering from pre-clinical infection, find their way to the slaughterhouse, these vulnerable tissues will be removed from them. The total number of cases of BSE in cattle confirmed in each county/region of Great Britain up to 5 January 1990 is set out in the following table (as these figures relate to confirmed cases, they differ from those for reported cases):

In the period 21 June 1988 (when BSE became notifiable) to 30 September 1989 (the most recent date for which information is available), 79 confirmed cases occurred at slaughterhouses and 56 at markets. This information is not available on a county basis.

Two confirmed cases have occurred at an import lairage in Dorset and five at artificial insemination centres in Devon, Dyfed, East Sussex, North Yorkshire and Somerset.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how many cases of bovine spongiform encephalopathy have been notified in each county for each year up to the end of 1989;

(2) how many cases of bovine spongiform encephalopathy have been notified each year in each county of the United Kingdom up to the end of 1989;

(3) if he will list the number of bovine spongiform encephalopathy cases notified for each year up to the end of 1989.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 11 January 1990]: BSE became a notifiable disease in Great Britain on 21 June 1988. The details of suspect cases of BSE notified since then are as follows:

[1] Became notifiable 29 November 1988.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last discussed with the National Farmers Union compensation payments on cattle suffering from bovine spongiform encephalopathy; and if he will increase compensation payments to 75 per cent.

Mr. Maclean: I meet representatives of the National Farmers Union frequently to discuss agricultural matters. As regards compensation, we believe that 50 per cent. is fair, given that the animals are terminally ill and worthless for all practical purposes, but are valued as though unaffected by BSE. This means that in many cases owners receive more in compensation than they would get if they were able to sell the animals. One hundred per cent. is paid for animals which are not confirmed as having BSE.

Organic Produce

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentage of organic (a) root vegetables, (b) other vegetables, (c) apples, (d) beef and (e) lamb sold in the United Kingdom is satisfied by domestic production.

Mr. Curry: This information is not available.

Enzymes

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what analysis has been conducted to establish the implications for animal welfare of the use of the meat tenderiser papain.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the full statement I made on this matter during the Adjournment debate on 7 November 1989.

Infected Place Notice

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, in relation to the issuing of an infected place notice by his Department, on Lansdowne Farm Ltd., East Retford, Nottinghamshire, what conclusion was reached as to the origin of the group C organisms which were discovered in the liver, ovaries and oviducts but not in the intestines.

Mr. Maclean: No conclusion was reached as to the origin of the group C organisms found in the livers, ovaries and oviducts but not in the intestines of the birds taken during the investigation at Lansdowne Farm Ltd.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in relation to the issuing of an infected place notice by his Department on Lansdowne Farm Ltd., East Retford, Nottinghamshire, on what basis birds were selected for slaughter.

Mr. Maclean: The birds taken were randomly distributed throughout each house. The birds were selected by a MAFF official of the veterinary investigation service assisted by representatives from Lansdowne Farm Ltd.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in relation to the issuing of an infected place notice by his Department on Lansdowne Farm Ltd. East Retford, Nottinghamshire, the phage type of the enteritidis strain alleged to have been recovered and the serotype of the group C organism recovered.

Mr. Maclean: Following is the information:

(i) The group D isolates were all identified as Salmonella enteritidis phage type 4.

(ii) he group C isolates were identified as Salmonella infantis.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in relation to the issuing of an infected place notice by his Department on Lansdowne Farm Ltd., East Retford, Nottinghamshire, whether the hen carcases remained in the sacks in which they were placed at the farm; at what temperature they were stored; and whether any other material was stored in the same refrigerator.

Mr. Maclean: Following is the information:

(i) The hen carcases remained in the sealed plastic bags into which they were placed at the farm.

(ii) They were stored at 8·5 deg C.
(iii) T other material was stored with the birds.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in relation to the issuing of an infected place notice by his Department on Lansdowne Farm Ltd, East Retford, Nottinghamshire, whether any person who moved the unopened bags to the post mortem room took part in the post mortem procedures; in which room the examinations were carried out and under what circumstances; and whether any other work was carried out in the same room at the same time or immediately before.

Mr. Maclean: One person who moved the unopened bags to the post mortem room took part in the post mortem procedures.

The examinations were carried out in the post mortem room at Sutton Bonington veterinary investigation centre on 8 November 1989. The post mortem room was cleansed and disinfected on 7 November and no work was subsequently carried out in that room until the birds were examined post mortem on the morning of 8 November. Post mortem tables were cleaned and disinfected between each batch of birds examined and fresh sets of gloves and sterile instruments were used to collect and examine samples of different organ types from within each batch.

The birds were examined on the morning of 8 November and no other work was carried out in the post mortem room at the same time or immediately before these examinations took place.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, in relation to the issuing of an infected place notice by his Department on Lansdowne Farm Ltd, East Retford, Nottinghamshire, how many salmonella colonies were examined from each plate subcultured for typing; how many colonies were identified as type D; how many times and over what period the plates were examined; and after how many examinations the group D types were isolated.

Mr. Maclean: Not less than three non-lactose fermenting colonies were examined from each plate showing typical salmonella growth characteristics. Four colonies were identified as group D salmonella. Each plate of brilliant green agar was examined twice at 24 and 48 hours after incubation at 37 deg C. Group D salmonellas were isolated from three subcultures at 24 hours and one subculture at 48 hours.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, in relation to the issuing of an infected place notice by his Department on Lansdowne Farm Ltd, East Retford, Nottinghamshire, whether the investigation concluded that the group C organism was present.

Mr. Maclean: The investigation concluded that group C organisms were present.

Bovine Animals (Head Meat)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to ban the use of head meat from bovine animals whose crania have been opened for the purpose of brain removal.

Mr. Maclean: The offal ban prohibits the use of brains for human food but allows meat from bovine heads to be utilised. It is not my intention to change this policy. Whatever method is used to remove the brain every precaution should be taken, in all circumstances, to avoid cross-contamination of the meat.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the risk of cross-contamination from bovine brains of the use of head meat from bovine animals as a result of abattoir practices.

Mr. Maclean: It is incumbent on operators and enforcement authorities at all times to ensure that cross-contamination is avoided from any source during the preparation of meat for human consumption. Brains from adult cattle may not enter the human food chain and the risk of cross-contamination where the crania has been split is extremely small so long as good hygienic practices are followed. The Southwood working party concluded that the risk to humans from BSE is remote.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what advice he gives to environmental health officers about the danger of cross-contamination from animal brains on to other head meat as a result of abattoir practices.

Mr. Maclean: My staff are always available to advise environmental health officers on hygienic practices. The advice will depend on the circumstances of the case.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has had from producers in relation to the policy of environmental health officers from Carrick district council and other authorities in the south-west to prevent the use of head meat from bovine animals whose crania have been opened for the purpose of brain removal.

Mr. Maclean: I am not aware of any such representations.

Lead Contamination Tests

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he hopes to publish the results of the lead contamination tests made on 14 December on calves at Higher Norton farm, East Allington, Totnes, Devon.

Mr. Maclean: The results of these tests were made available to the owner of the holding on 5 January.

Fish Farming

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if grants for the establishment of fish farming facilities are to be made available through the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service.

Mr. Curry: Grants for approved fish farming projects, jointly assisted by my Department and the European Commission, may be made under the provisions of Council regulation (EEC) No. 4028/86 on Community measures to improve and adapt structures in the fisheries and aquaculture sector. I shall be writing shortly to the hon. Member about points raised recently by one of his constituents.

Sulphur Dioxide Emissions

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the latest estimates in pound sterling of the annual costs of crop damage in the United Kingdom resulting from sulphur dioxide emissions.

Mr. Curry: Such estimates are not available and could not be provided on the basis of existing data. Crop damage due to sulphur dioxide is unlikely to be detectable at current ambient concentrations.

Coffee

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress the Director General of Fair Trading has made in investigating the retail price of coffee.

Mr. Curry: The investigation is still in progress. We understand that it is proceeding satisfactorily.

North Sea

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list those countries which in 1989 conducted operations to incinerate toxic wastes in the North sea.

Mr. Curry: Complete information about other countries' incineration activities in the North sea in 1989 is not yet available. In 1988 waste originating from Austria, Belgium, the Federal Republic of Germany, France, Italy, the Netherlands, Norway, Spain, Switzerland and the United Kingdom was incinerated in the North sea.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list those countries which in 1989 conducted operations to dump sewage sludge in the North sea.

Mr. Curry: Only the United Kingdom dumped sewage sludge in the North sea in 1989. There was no environmentally acceptable land-based disposal option for the sludge. Strict controls were applied to ensure that the disposals met national and international requirements and that no harm was caused to the marine environment.

Organophosphorous Sheep Dip

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what evidence has been received by his Ministry regarding immune system damage from organophosphorous sheep dip; and what further investigations are now being conducted.

Mr. Maclean: None. If any evidence of immune system damage from the use of organophosphorous sheep dips were to come to light, this would have to be fully investigated by Ministry scientists and the independent veterinary products committee, under Medicines Act procedures.

Lime

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many farmers in the United Kingdom during 1988 and 1989 were reported to have used large quantities of lime for the first time in order to preserve their crops from the effects of increased pH acidity levels in soils; and whether these reports originate from clearly defined geographic areas.

Mr. Curry: Data are not available in the form requested. However, ADAS, which has close contact with the situation in the field in England and Wales, has received no reports of farmers using larger than normal quantities of lime for the first time in 1988 or 1989.

Importation of Bees Order

Sir Dennis Walters: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether the Importation of Bees Order 1980 can be retained after the completion of the single market in 1992; and what discussions are taking place within the Community on the future of the order.

Mr. Curry: The Commission has proposed that after 1992 national measures on animal health, including bee health, should be replaced by EC controls. The proposals for bees would not, as drafted at present, permit a total ban on imports to the United Kingdom. Discussions are at an early stage, and we shall continue to press for the highest level of safeguard.

Free Foodstuffs (EC)

Mr. Kirkwood (Roxburgh and Berwickshire): To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the products underused when Economic Community surplus food is made available for free distribution to pensioners in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Curry: In 1988 the United Kingdom's full allocation of produce was taken up under the EC surplus food scheme. All the produce allocated in 1989 had been released from intervention stores and I believe that it will all be used.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list in the Official Report the types of food, the quantities ordered and the locations of the distribution of all free foodstuffs received from Economic Community states for free distribution to pensioners in the United Kingdom over the past six months.

Mr. Curry: In the six months from July to December 1989 some 1,495 tonnes of beef, and 2,000 tonnes of butter were delivered to designated organisations participating in the EC surplus food scheme in the United Kingdom. The distribution arrangements are a matter for those organisations, but they are required to notify officials of their planned distributions. I will supply details of those notified over the last six months as soon as possible.

The hon. Member refers to distribution to pensioners, but pensioners as a group are not eligible. Those eligible to receive produce under the current scheme are people on income support or family credit and those living in welfare hostels or who have no fixed abode. Pensioners falling into one or other of these categories are, of course, eligible.

DEFENCE

HMS Fearless and HMS Intrepid

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when his Department intends to make a decision on the replacement of HMS Fearless and HMS Intrepid.

Mr. Neubert: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Tynemouth (Mr. Trotter) on 21 December 1989, at column 383.

European Fighter Aircraft

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether Royal Air Force squadrons which are to be equipped with the European fighter aircraft will consist of the same numbers of aircraft as current fighter squadrons.

Mr. Alan Clark: The precise number of EFA to be allocated to each squadron is still under consideration.

Misfires

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether there has been an increase in the incidence of misfires with ammunition purchased from Greek suppliers.

Mr. Alan Clark: No reports of misfires with ammunition purchased from Greek suppliers have been received.

Brokerage Fees

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the Al-Hamanah Saudi arms deal provides for brokerage fees to his Department or the Defence Sales Organisation for sales placed in the United Kingdom; and in which years any such fees have been paid.

Mr. Alan Clark: No.

Cash Limit

Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will announce any changes to the defence cash limit for 1989-90.

Mr. Tom King: My right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary to the Treasury announced on 29 July 1989 an entitlement of £435,690,000 to increase the cash limit for 1989-90, resulting from carry forward of capital expenditure under the end-year flexibility scheme. I can now announce that we shall receive a further entitlement of £248,770,000. Of this new increase, £239,588,000 comes under the terms of the additional flexibility arrangements announced to the House on 19 December 1986, Official Report column 778. These arrangements provide for carry forward of underspend resulting from procurement decisions taken to improve contractors' performance and the value for money obtained from our defence procurement contracts during the 1988-89 financial year, including the Department's tauter approach to interim payments. The remaining £9,182,000 is to compensate the defence budget for the costs arising from the change in status of the Property Services Agency.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps are taken by his Department to ensure the quality of ammunition purchased from overseas.

Mr. Alan Clark: The quality requirements called up in MOD tenders and contracts for ammunition are identical for United Kingdom and overseas suppliers. Our quality assurance branches ensure that the requirements are met irrespective of the place of manufacture.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total value of contracts awarded to overseas suppliers to provide the United Kingdom armed forces with small calibre ammunition, 30 mm and below, for each year since 1984.

Mr. Alan Clark: The data for 1984-85 are not readily available. The approximate values for the subsequent years are:

Year	£ million
1986-87	6·9
1987-88	28·5
1988-89	14·1

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total value of contracts awarded to United Kingdom suppliers to provide the United Kingdom armed forces with small calibre ammunition, of 30 mm and below, for each year since 1984.

Mr. Alan Clark: The data for 1984-85 are not readily available. The approximate values for the subsequent years are:

1985-86	76·6
1986-87	68·6
1987-88	52·5
1988-89	50·1

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which United Kingdom companies are still able to supply the United Kingdom armed forces with 0·5 in ammunition.

Mr. Alan Clark: After the unsuccessful bid by Eley Ltd. for our last tender in 1988, there have been reports that it has closed its facility. There are no other established manufacturers for 0·5 in ammunition in the United Kingdom, but several could adapt their capabilities should our next requirement be attractive to them.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which United Kingdom companies have in the past 20 years supplied his Department with 0·5 in ammunition.

Mr. Alan Clark: The only United Kingdom company to have supplied 0·5 in ammunition to MOD in the past 20 years is Eley Ltd.

Ministry of Defence Houses

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many surplus Ministry of Defence houses have been sold to service men to date.

Mr. Neubert: As at 8 December 1989, a total of 2,241 surplus married quarters had been sold to service personnel through the Ministry of Defence's own discounted sales scheme since its inception on 1 December 1983.

In addition, approximately 224 surplus quarters were sold to service personnel through the Ministry of Defence's non-discounted sales scheme, which operated from 1 April 1981 to 30 November 1983. We do not maintain records of surplus quarters that may have been sold to service personnel outside these two schemes.

Warsaw Pact

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the occasions when Royal Navy vessels have made visits to ports in Warsaw pact countries since 1985.

Mr. Neubert: Visits made by Royal Navy vessels to ports in Warsaw pact countries since 1985 are as follows:

Port	Vessel	Date
Constanta, Romania	HMS Naiad	July 1985
Leningrad, USSR	HMS Bristol	May 1989
Gdynia, Poland	HMS Bristol	June 1989
Rostock, GDR	HMS Achilles	June 1989

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the occasions when Warsaw pact naval vessels have visited British ports and naval bases since 1985.

Mr. Neubert: The Polish destroyer Warszawa, which visited London during May 1989, is the only Warsaw pact warship to have visited a British port or naval base since 1985. A number of Warsaw pact naval sail training ships have also visited the United Kingdom during this period to take part in the annual tall ships race.

AWACS Aircraft

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his estimate of the current value of contracts awarded to United Kingdom companies as a result of the offset arrangement agreed for the purchase by his Department of seven AWACS aircraft.

Mr. Alan Clark: Boeing has to date submitted five progress reports listing contracts placed with United Kingdom companies to the value of $1,176 million. Our evaluation is not yet complete, but we have so far agreed some $672 million to count for offset credit purposes.

Bounty Payments

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current minimum training commitment per year of Royal Navy Reserve officers and ratings enabling them to claim bounty payments.

Mr. Neubert: The current minimum training commitment of Royal Navy Reserve officers and ratings for bounty purposes is a standard two continuous weeks and 50 drill nights per year, which may be reduced for certain specialist categories.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current minimum training commitment per year of Territorial Army officers and men enabling them to claim bounty payments.

Mr. Neubert: In order to earn bounty, assuming other qualifying criteria are met, members of independent and specialist units of the Territorial Army must complete a minimum of 27 days and 19 days respectively in each training year. In both cases the overall requirement would normally include a continuous period of 15 days, either annual camp or a course in lieu. Where personal circumstances preclude an undertaking at the above level, facilities exist for indi iduals to carry out a lower training liability with a commensurately lower level of bounty being payable.

Royal Ordnance

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the Government retained any share of the patent rights of Royal Ordnance when Royal Ordnance was sold off; and whether they have to pay for the use of any of the patents transferred to British Aerospace.

Mr. Alan Clark: The transfer of patents to Royal Ordnance was subject to the right of the Secretary of State and any Government Department without payment to use and authorise others to use any of the patents for any Government purpose, except for patents for inventions arising out of work funded out of the ROF Trading Fund. These terms are unaffected by the purchase of Royal Ordnance by British Aerospace.

Ambulance duties

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the number of Army man hours employed in ambulance duties per police authority to date.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 8 January 1990]: Up to 5 January 1990, estimates of the number of Service man hours deployed are as shown. It is not possible to separate out the Army element without disproportionate cost.

ENVIRONMENT

Waste Oil

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he has any plans for specific legislation on waste oil discharges from incineration facilities;

(2) if he has any plans to facilitate the collection of waste oil from small producers;

(3) if he has any plans to introduce legislation to bring Britain into compliance with EEC directive 75/442 on waste by requiring establishments producing, collecting and disposing of at least 500 litres of waste oil each year to keep records and submit a report to the competent authorities;

(4) if he has any plans to introduce legislation to bring Britain into compliance with EEC directive 75/442 on waste by requiring that information be provided on the quantity, quality, origin and location of waste oils as well as on their receipt and dispatch;

(5) if he has any plans to introduce legislation to require mineral and synthetic oil retailers to take back waste oils free of charge;

(6) if he has any plans to introduce legislation to require that in-house disposal of waste oils must be authorised or approved;

(7) if he has any plans to introduce legislation to require the recycling of waste oils;

(8) if he intends to introduce specific provisions to prohibit the discharge of waste oils into water bodies and drainage systems;

(9) if he intends to introduce specific provisions to prohibit uncontrolled discharge of waste oils and to require that they be disposed of in an environmentally safe manner.

Mr. Trippier: The Government are considering what further action to take to ensure compliance with EC directives 75/439, 75/442 and 87/101 regarding the disposal of waste oils. Most large industrial plants burning waste oils are already controlled by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution (HMIP) under the Alkali etc. Works Regulation Act 1906 and the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974. It is intended that waste oil burning will be included in processes listed in regulations made under the Environmental Protection Bill, when enacted, for part I control. The Government will also take steps to make the public aware of the need to dispose of waste oils in an environmentally responsible way.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to introduce legislation specifically concerning disposal of polychlorinated biphenyls and polychlorinated triphenyls.

Mr. Trippier: The disposal of waste PCBs and PCTs is subject to the general legislation on the disposal of toxic waste. The storage and landfilling of waste PCBs/PCTs comes under the licensing system of the Control of Pollution Act 1974 and their incineration under the registration system of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 and the Alkali etc. Works Regulations Act 1906. It is intended that storage and landfilling will come under the revised licensing system and chemical incineration under the integrated pollution control system to be established under the Environmental Protection Bill.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to introduce legislation to require that the total polychlorinated biphenyl and halogen content of waste oils has to be recorded.

Mr Trippier: Under the Control of Pollution (Special Waste) Regulations 1980, the PCB and halogen concentration of waste oils which are special wastes is stated on the consignment note which is raised when the waste is moved from the premises where it is produced. Copies of these consignment notes are kept on registers held by producers, carriers and waste disposal licence holders. The PCB and halogen content of waste oil, which brings it within the definition of special waste, is one of the matters covered in our proposals for revising the Special Waste Regulations which I shall announce shortly.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to introduce legislation whereby a subsidy is paid to operators exchanging or retrofilling equipment containing poly chlorinated biphenyls or polychlorinated triphenyls.

Mr. Trippier: No. Paying subsidies would be contrary to the polluter pays principle.

Cleaning Products

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to ban the use of (a) nitro-tri-acetic acid, (b) ethylene diamino-tetra-acetic acid, (c) perborate bleach, (d) optical brighteners and (e) enzymes in cleaning products.

Mr. Trippier: The Department has no plans to ban the use of these chemicals in cleaning products.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to limit the amount of (a) phosphates, (b) chlorine bleaches and (c) ethlylene diamino-tetra-acetic acid used in cleaning products; if he intends to limit the acidity of toilet cleaners; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The Department has no plans at present to limit the amounts of these constituents in cleaning products but is planning to place a study contract to review any adverse effects which may occur if polyphosphates used in cleaning agents are replaced by other chemicals.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to require an increase in the biodegradability of anionic and non-ionic surfactants.

Mr. Trippier: The Department has no plans to require an increase in the biodegradability of anionic and non-ionic surfactants.

Richmond Metal Company

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has obtained a report from Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution and the Health and Safety Executive on how a bar of uranium came to be on the premises of the Richmond Metal Company; what action has been taken; whether any breaches of security were involved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution and the Health and Safety Executive have carried out an extensive investigation into how the small bar of uranium came to be on the premises of the Richmond Metal Company. They have concluded that it arrived in a large batch of mixed scrap metal. The origin of the bar has not yet been established and this may prove difficult in view of the nature of scrap metal operations. Investigations are continuing and arrangements have been made to dispose of the uranium bar. There is no evidence of any breach of security.

Radioactive Waste Disposal

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will make a statement on the findings of the European Commission's PAGIS study into the suitability of British geology for high-level radioactive waste disposal;

(2) what account he will take of the European Commission's PAGIS study findings in determining Government policy on the disposal of high-level radioactive waste in Britain;

(3) how his Department intends to use the findings of the European Commission's PAGIS assessment of the suitability of British geology for high-level radioactive waste disposal.

Mr. Trippier: PAGIS—performance assessment of geological isolation systems—a six-year multinational research project on the safety assessment of high-level radioactive waste disposal, was launched in 1982 as part of the Community plan of action in the field of radioactive waste management. Reports of the PAGIS project have been published by the European Commission. The results indicate that vitrified high-level radioactive waste could be disposed of safely in a variety of geological formations. PAGIS reinforces Government policy on the management of high-level radioactive waste and due account will be taken of the methodology and results when considering its eventual disposal.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what contribution his Department made to the European Commission's PAGIS study into the suitability of British geology for high-level radioactive waste disposal.

Mr. Trippier: My Department was represented on the PAGIS steering committee.

Cyclists

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many personal journeys are made in the United Kingdom each year; and if he will initiate research to estimate gains to be made in vehicle pollution abatement by a ten fold expansion of cycling in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Trippier: "Transport Statistics Great Britain, 1978-88" (HMSO, September 1989) includes tables showing the passenger/kilometres travelled using the main modes of transport, and journeys per person per week. No research is planned to estimate gains in vehicle pollution abatement following from an expansion of cycling.

Toxic Wastes (West Yorkshire)

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what areas in west Yorkshire were involved in the study undertaken by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution on toxic wastes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution's recent technical report "Determination of Polychlorinated biphenyls, Polychlorinated Dibenzo-p-dioxins and Polychlorinated Dibenzofurans in United Kingdom Soils" report levels of PCB, PCDD and PCDF contamination at specific points on a regular 50 km grid across most of the United Kingdom.

The report lists the grid references of all the sampling locations. Copies of the report have been placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the areas in west Yorkshire where toxic wastes have been found; and if he will identify the so-called hot spots.

Mr. Trippier: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution's recent technical report "Determination of Polychlorinated biphenyls, Polychlorinated Dibenzo-p-dioxins and Polychlorinated Dibenzofurans in United Kingdom Soils" reported levels of PCB, PCDD and PCDF contamination at specific points on a regular 50 km grid across most of the United Kingdom.

The study was aimed at identifying the range of contamination levels of these chemicals in United Kingdom soils. There was no intention, in this study, to identify areas of abnormally high contamination (hot spots).

The report lists the grid references of all the sampling locations. Copies of the report have been placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the result of the soil samples taken from refuse tips in west Yorkshire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution's recent technical report "Determination of Polychlorinated biphenyls, Polychlorinated Dibenzo-p-dioxins and Polychlorinated Dibenzofurans in United Kingdom Soils" reported levels of PCB, PCDD and PCDF contamination at specific points on a regular 50 km grid. Copies have been placed in the Library.

The study was aimed at identifying the range of contamination levels of these chemicals in United Kingdom soils. No refuse landfill sites were knowingly sampled in west Yorkshire or elsewhere in the United Kingdom.

Romania

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to increase the United Kingdom contribution to the east European programme of the International Union for the Conservation of Nature to provide assistance in improving the ecological situation in Romania.

Mr. Trippier: My Department has recently announced a contribution of £50,000 towards the east European programme of the International Union for the Conservation of Nature and Natural Resources. It is a matter for the IUCN to decide how much of this programme should be devoted to assisting Romania.

Rateable Values (Chelmsford)

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment as a result of the recent revaluation, what percentage of businesses in the Chelmsford parliamentary constituency area have had their rateable value (a) cut, (b) increased by 1 to 10 per cent., (c) increased by 11 to 20 per cent., (d) increased by 21 to 30 per cent., (e) increased by 31 to 50 per cent., (f) increased by 51 to 100 per cent., (g) increased by over 100 per cent., (h) increased by over 150 per cent., and (i) increased by over 200 per cent., and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The information for which my hon. Friend asks is not available.

Hospital Incinerators

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will specify the date when Crown immunity will be removed from all hospital incinerators.

Mr. Trippier: Crown immunity for hospital incinerators with a capacity of over 1 tonne an hour was lifted in March 1989 as a result of the Health and Safety (Emissions into the Atmosphere) (Amendment) Regulations 1989. Clause 54 of the National Health Service and Community Care Bill provides for a widespread removal of Crown immunity from National Health Service premises. This will cover all National Health Service incinerators. The provision will be brought into effect by commencement order at the earliest opportunity.

Radioactive Substances

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment from which persons and bodies he has received responses to the consultation paper on the control of radioactive substances.

Mr. Trippier: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Shrewsbury and Atcham (Mr. Conway) on 6 December, Official Report, column 217.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further steps he proposes to take to control radioactive substances; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The improvements we intend to make to the control of radioactive substances under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960 were set out in a consultation document, a copy of which has been placed in the Library, and are incorporated in the Environmental Protection Bill now before the House.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his Department has had regard to the new ionising regulations in the United States based on proposals by the National Academy of Sciences in drawing up proposals for the control of radioactive substances in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Trippier: The Radioactive Substances Act 1960 provides a comprehensive framework for controlling the keeping, use, accumulation and disposal of radioactive substances. We take into account legislation in other countries in amending United Kingdom legislation where appropriate.

Urban Programme

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what resources will be available for local authorities in the urban programme in 1990-91; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I am today announcing initial urban programme resource allocations for 1990-91, totalling over £258 million, an increase of £13 million over last year. The resources will be allocated to the 57 urban programme partnership and programme authorities. The money will be used to support a wide range of projects aimed at stimulating economic recovery, improving the environment and helping people to deal with social problems in urban areas.

The urban programme encourages local authorities, in partnership with Government, to help revitalise our inner cities. It is a key part of the Government's Action for Cities programme, which includes the Department of the Environment's other urban initiatives—urban development corporations, city grant and derelict land grant. Together, these Department of the Environment programmes will provide £920 million for inner city regeneration in 1990-91.

The urban programme allocations made today, some three weeks earlier than last year, are provisional: formal allocations are made after inner area programmes (IAPs) have been assessed and approved. Allocations will not be confirmed until authorities have provided a satisfactory annual report on achievements through the UP in 1988-89. Redistribution of resources can sometimes occur within the course of the year which may lead to outturn being different from the initial allocations.

Copies of the allocations to individual authorities have been placed in the Library.

Soil Contamination

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment his Department has made of soil contamination with polychlorinated biphenyls throughout Britain.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 16 January 1990]: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution's recent report "Determination of Polychlorinated Biphenyls, Polychlorinated Dibenzo-p-dioxins and Polychlorinated Dibenzofurans in UK Soils" contained details of the levels of PCBs found in soils in England, Wales and part of Scotland. The results show that PCBs are ubiquitous in soils, although the levels vary, being higher where there is a history of heavy industry and urbanisation. Copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give details of soil contamination throughout Britain from polychlorinated bi-phenyls, contamination from factory chimneys and the burning of plastic wastes in municipal incinerators.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 15 January 1990]: Details of PCB contamination of soils throughout Britain are given in the report by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution "Determination of Polychlorinated Biphenyls, Polychlorinated Dibenzo-p-dioxins and Polychlorinated Dibenzofurans in UK Soils" published by HMSO, copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House. The use of PCBs is severely restricted by the Control of Pollution (Supply and Use of Injurious Substances) Regulations 1986. Thus they are not likely to be found in emissions from factory chimneys or to arise from the burning of plastic wastes in municipal incinerators.

Landfill Sites

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the location of sites where landfill gases have been identified as a potential problem.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 15 January 1990]: Reliable and complete information on sites where landfill gas has been identified as a potential problem is not held centrally. Waste disposal authorities can advise about specific sites in their area.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give details of the sites, where landfill gases are a potential problem, that are located within 250m of housing.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 15 January 1990]: This information is not held centrally. Waste disposal authorities provide information to local planning authorities where development is proposed within 250m of a landfill site.

Pollution Inspectorate

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will ensure that all future soil samples from the area around the Rechem incinerator at Pontypool required to be taken by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution are collected by persons in the direct employ of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 15 January 1990]: It is for Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution to determine the most effective use of its resources and, in part, this will mean deciding on the most appropriate way to obtain samples in particular areas.

Single Homeless People

Mr Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will publish figures for the number of single homeless people for each year from 1979 to 1989;

(2) how many single homeless people he estimates there are under the age of 25 years currently in England;

(3) if he will publish the figures for the number of single homeless people in (a) Birmingham, (b) Cardiff, (c) Edinburgh, (d) Liverpool and (e) London during each year from 1979 to 1989.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 15 January 1990]: Local authorities report the number of households for whom they accept responsibility to secure accommodation under the homelessness provisions of the Housing Acts; the single homeless are not separately identified and my Department has no estimates.

For information about Wales and Scotland I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and Scotland.

Housing Associations

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a statement on the Stonefrost inquiry report into the future of housing associations' development in central London.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 15 January 1990]: I was pleased to note the report's acknowledgement of the value of work carried out by London housing associations, and the part played in this by private finance. Since the inquiry was concluded, we have announced our decision to move over the next two years to a regional distribution of the Housing Corporation's capital investment programme based on the housing needs indicator, an objective measure of the relative need for investment by housing associations in different areas which was fully reviewed last year by my Department, the Housing Corporation and the National Federation of Housing Associations. As a result housing associations in London and the south-east will receive significantly higher levels of resources to help them continue their important work in providing homes for people in housing need.

Homelessness

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received regarding homelessness.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 15 January 1990]: Following publication last November of our review of the homelessness legislation, we have received comments from a range of public and voluntary bodies.

Water Pollution

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will ensure that the general public has immediate and free access to the regional registers of water pollution levels.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amery: Information on water quality and pollution is contained in the registers maintained by the National Rivers Authority in accordance with its duties under section 117 of the Water Act 1989. The public has free access to these registers at the authority's regional offices during normal working hours.

Bathing Waters

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which of the beaches awarded blue flag safe bathing symbols were tested for, and failed the European Economic Community standards for coliforms, enteroviruses and salmonella.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 15 January 1990]: The results of the 1988 survey of bathing waters were placed in the Library on 21 February 1989. These included details of tests for coliforms, enteroviruses and salmonella. The award of blue flags for 1989 was announced on 5 June 1989 by the organisers of the blue flag campaign.

TRANSPORT

Public Transport

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps his Department is taking to implement the recommendations in the report "Public Transport and the Missing Six Million—What Can Be Learned?"

Mr. Atkins: My Department is working closely with the disabled persons transpot advisory committee in following up the recommendations.

Motor Vehicle Accidents

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the number of motor vehicle accidents, excluding motor cycles, in each of the last five years involving fatalities and non-fatalities in England and Wales.

Mr. Atkins: Information is only available for road accidents which involve personal injury. The information requested is as follows:

Motor vehicle accidents, excluding motor cycles
England and Wales, 1984-1988

	Fatal	Non-fatal	Total
1984	3,470	166,431	169,901
1985	3,309	165,629	168,938
1986	3,527	172,405	175,932
1987	3,390	171,024	174,414
1988	3,427	181,160	184,587

This table, as requested, counts accidents and not vehicles, and excludes all those accidents involving motor cycles including, for example, an accident involving car and motor cycle.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the number of motor vehicle accidents, excluding motor cycles, in each of the last five years involving drivers who had passed their test in the previous 12 months in England and Wales.

Mr. Atkins: The information requested is not available; licence details of drivers involved in accidents are not recorded on the accident report form.

Car Drivers

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the number of people who are currently permitted to drive a car in England and Wales.

Mr. Atkins: Over 28 million people in Great Britain have full licences to drive motor cars. There are no separate figures for England and Wales.

Driving Tests

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the number of people who have passed a driving test to drive a car in each of the last five years; and if he will specify what proportion of those people were aged (a) 17 to 25 years, (b) 26 to 40 years, (c) 41 to 60 years and (d) over 60 years.

Mr. Atkins: Statistics in this form are available only from 1985. Those for 1989 have not yet been completed. Figures for 1985-1988 are as follows:—

Year	Tests passed (cars)	Proportion in age-group: per cent. 17-25	26-40	41-60	Over 60
1985	863,339	71·6	22·9	5·1	0·4
1986	941,005	75·6	19·7	4·4	0·3
1987	958,087	74·2	20·8	4·7	0·3
1988	1,039,461	73·5	21·3	4·9	0·3

A38 Trunk Road

Mr. Robert Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his Department's preferred line of route for the A38 trunk road improvement Liskeard to Bodmin section.

Mr. Atkins: As I informed my hon. Friend in my reply of 4 December, at column 95, I hope to announce the Department's preferred route early in 1991.

Mr. Robert Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he hopes to announce the consulting engineers to examine possible alternative routes for the A38 trunk road improvement, Saltash to Trevulefoot section.

Mr. Atkins: I hope to announce the appointment of consulting engineers within the next few weeks.

Mersey Ferries

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received in respect of the funding of the Mersey Ferries; if he will consider giving direct financial aid; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The director general of the Merseyside passenger transport executive wrote to the Department of Transport on 21 July and 31 August 1989 with details of a project for developing the Mersey Ferries as a leisure facility, and the passenger transport authority also asked for this project to be taken into account in the determination of its annual capital guideline. The Department replied to the PTE on 9 October raising various questions on the project. We have received no representations since then. We would consider any application for direct financial assistance on its merits, in accordance with our normal criteria for grant for public transport projects.

Mark Woodward

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a further statement on what was done with the Coastguard and British Telecom tapes of calls relating to the accidental drowning of Mark Woodward on 16 August 1989, following the coroner's inquest.

Mr. McLoughlin: The multi-track tapes that recalled the content and timing of all telephone and radio messages to and from Coastguard stations were wiped clean one month after the coroner's inquest. Up to this time these tapes would have been available for examination should this have been requested. For the benefit of the inquest certain extracts of the tapes were taken, in cassette form, and these are currently held by the police, following their inquiry. These tapes will be returned to the Department's solicitor shortly and will be made available to interested parties. But also it should be noted that in cassette form the content is incomplete and cannot be linked to accurate time. The question of the British Telecom tapes is one which should be addressed to BT in the north Devon area.

British Rail

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what subjects are covered by the commercially confidential matters to which he referred in his answer to the right hon. Member for Tonbridge and Malling of 21 December, Official Report, column 361.

Mr. Portillo: The letters cover a wide range of issues, for example the commercial and financial structure of the proposed joint venture, which are now the subject of detailed negotiation between Eurorail and the British Railways Board. They also bear on the negotiations that need to take place with third parties before the joint venture can be established.

A13

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what improvements to the A13 between the North Circular road and the Tower of London will be started before 31 December; at what cost; and when they will be completed;

(2) what improvements to the A13 between the North Circular road and the Tower of London are currently in progress; at what cost; and when they will be completed.

Mr. Portillo: The Department's responsibilities are for the A13 trunk road, which runs as far west as Butcher row. The remainder of the A13 known as Commercial road is the responsibility of the London borough of Tower Hamlets.

Departmental schemes currently under construction are:

Scheme	Works £ million	Completion
Strengthening of Britannia Bridge	0·3	February 1990
Creation of access to "Financial Times"	[1]0·6	February 1990
The following schemes are due to start before 31 December:
West India Dock Road junction interim improvements	1·2	Mid 1991
Cotton Street junction interim improvements[2]	4·0	Summer 1992
Leamouth Road junction interim improvements	2·0	Early 1991
Ironbridge waterproofing and resurfacing	0·2	September 1990
Cumberland Road Subway refurbishment	0·07	April 1990
Tollgate Road signalled junction	0·75	Summer 1990

[1] Costs met by developer.

[2] Progress dependent upon timely confirmation of LDDC's compulsory purchase order on land for redevelopment at Woolmore street.

Progress on most of the trunk road schemes are dependent on the completion of statutory processes which could be subject to public inquiry and delay. Completion dates are therefore provisional.

Permanent schemes at Butcher row, West India Dock road and Blackwall tunnel northern approach-Cotton street will follow in 1993, when a three and a half year project will commence to make final improvements to the Leamouth road junction and widen the Ironbridge, including the connection of LDDC's East India dock link to the A13.

Towards the end of this year we hope to publish Orders for improvement of the A13 junction with the A117 East

Ham Manor way and to hold an exhibition of proposals for improvement of the A13 junction with the A112 Prince Regent lane.

The traffic control systems unit of the City of London is investigating on behalf of the Department the possible co-ordintation of signals on the A13 trunk road in Tower Hamlets to expedite the flow of through traffic.

West Yorkshire Bus Services

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the implications for the bus services of the change effected by the community charge on the method of raising finance for the West Yorkshire Passenger Transport Authority from a precept to a levy on the five west Yorkshire districts; and what assessment has been made of the effect of fixing that levy at grant related expenditure.

Mr. Portillo: It is up to the passenger transport authority to decide what level of bus services to provide and what levy to raise to achieve its objectives, in the same way as it decided on the level of services and set an appropriate precept for the present financial year. The districts influence PTA spending policy through their representations on the PTA. The PTA levy is only one of the elements making up total district expenditure, and there is no separate standard spending assessment for PTA services. Instead, districts' standard spending assessments will include an element designed to cover spending on these and other small services.

Oil Companies (Shipping)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the number of registered oil companies that have their own shipping.

Mr. McLoughlin: The United Kingdom oil majors will have their own commercial arrangements for access to shipping, generally through ownership or chartering, but the information required to provide a more comprehensive reply is not available.

Near Misses

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the number of reported near-miss occurrences in the transit area that covers the area from Hucknall in the south, through Mansfield, Chesterfield, Worksop, Sheffield and Rotherham to Barnsley, Doncaster and Finningley, that have involved military and civilian aircraft for the last five years; what are the types of aircraft involved; and what is their nationality.

Mr. McLoughlin: Within the area specified, three air misses have been reported, none of which involved commercial air traffic:

1. A civilian glider and a civilian Cessna 172 (2 November 1986).

2. An RAF Buccaneer and a civilian Cessna 152 (1 July 1987).

3. An RAF Tornado and civilian Cessna 152 (27 January 1988).

A27

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he has received from East Sussex county council a map detailing a possible route for the A27 dual carriageway from Lewes to Polegate; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will make it his policy that any scheme brought forward to dual the A27 from Lewes to Polegate will take into full account the landmark of Mount Caburn, and the views therefrom, and from Firle Beacon;

(3) if he will make it his policy that any scheme brought forward to dual the A27 from Lewes to Polegate will bypass Wilmington rather than dualling the present road.

Mr. Atkins: This scheme was admitted to the trunk road programme in May 1989 following a confidential scheme identification study undertaken for the Department by East Sussex county council. This study recommended the improvements to dual carriageway standards of the A27 between Lewes and Polegate, and identified one possible option.

Design agents are to be appointed very shortly to investigate and prepare proposals for the improvement. They will identify and evaluate all feasible route options for the scheme, including combinations of on-line and off-line solutions, on which to consult the public. Their brief will include a requirement for environmental and landscape assessments of the alternatives identified. It is too soon, therefore, to predict what route the improvement might follow or how villages along the existing A27 might be placed in relation to it.

Road Improvements (Compensation)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what his policy is for compensating those people whose dwelling is (a) compulsorily purchased and (b) severely blighted as a result of major road improvements.

Mr. Atkins: Where land is compulsorily purchased, the statutory basis for compensation is the open market value of the land, disregarding any alteration in value due to the scheme for which the land is being acquired. Vendors may also be eligible for additional payments, such as removal costs, reconnection and refitting charges, and legal expenses. A displaced houseowner who had lived in the property for at least five years is also entitled to a home loss payment. Entitlement to compensation is set out in a series of booklets "Land Compensation—Your rights Explained". There are copies in the Library of the House.

Where a dwelling lies in the line of a road proposal and cannot be sold in the open market at a reasonable price, protection is given by the blight provisions in the Town and Country Planning Act 1971. An owner-occupier may serve a notice on the highway authority, requiring it to buy the property. In the early stages of a road proposal, before a preferred route is announced, there also exists a discretionary power to buy where there is a genuine possibility that the property will be required. Policy is to exercise this power to alleviate cases of serious hardship.

When roadworks are imminent or in progress, there is discretionary power to buy dwellings not required for the road but likely to be severely affected by the construction works. There is also discretionary power to buy property severely affected by nuisance arising from the use of a new or improved road, up to one year after opening.

The legislation governing compulsory purchase and compensation is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment. He is currently considering whether improvements are needed in the light of comments on an consultation paper published last year.

M27 Motorway

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans exist for the construction of an M27 motorway; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins We have no present plans to extend the M27 motorway. However, consultants are carrying out a study into the possible need to increase the capacity of the existing roads and its junctions. They are expected to report in the spring.

We are also improving progressively the south coast trunk route, running westwards from the M27 to Honiton and eastwards to Folkestone. The national trunk road programme currently includes 36 schemes at various stages of preparation, collectively valued at some £375 million.

Transport Spending (London)

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list for each London borough (a) the transport supplementary grant and (b) the capital allocations or annual capital guideline for transport purposes for each of the years 1987-88, 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 15 January 1990]: Details of each London boroughs (a) transport supplementary grant and (b) transport capital allocation, annual capital guideline and supplementary credit approval for the period 1987-88 to 1990-91 are given in the table.

Bus Deregulation

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the operation of buses in north-west Sussex, following deregulation.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 15 January 1990]: The Department has no detailed records of bus services in north-west Sussex. The operation of services is a matter for operators and local authorities. In West Sussex as a whole, bus mileage has increased whilst the county council has been able to reduce spending on bus support from some £1·5 million before deregulation to £610,000 for 1989-90.

Light Dues

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list those maritime nations, on which he has information, that collect light dues from pleasure craft;

(2) when he expects to reach a conclusion on the payment of light dues by yachtsmen.

Mr. McLoughlin: The British Ports Federation has not yet completed its study on the feasibility of extending light dues to pleasure craft. I expect to invite views on its report from interested parties before reaching any conclusions. Charging practice in relation to navigational aids varies widely in other countries. I understand that almost half the states with membership of the International Association of Lighthouse Authorities levy dues of some kind as the sole source of finance, but information on the treatment of pleasure craft is not available.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Deptford City Technology College

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the total liability of his Department, as of the end of December 1989, to reimburse the Haberdashers' company for expenses incurred to that date in connection with the proposed establishment of a city technology college in Deptford.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave yesterday at column 8.

Middle Schools

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many children are currently educated in middle schools.

Mr. Alan Howarth: In January 1989 the number of pupils in maintained middle schools in England was 334,099.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make a statement on the funding of primary age children in middle schools under schemes of local management of schools.

Mrs. Rumbold: Under schemes' funding formulae, schools should receive a basic sum of money for each pupil of the same age; that sum should be the same whether the pupil is in a primary or a middle school. Schools will, however, receive additional resources over and above this basic aliocation for a variety of reasons and this may lead to differences in funding both between primary schools and between primary and middle schools with similar numbers of pupils.

Teachers' Pay and Conditions

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to meet with the teachers' unions to discuss the establishment of negotiating machinery for teachers' pay and conditions; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend held a series of meetings with the teacher unions in October and November last year. He is considering carefully the points made to him then. Further meetings will take place in due course.

Higher Education Statistics

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the latest year for which his Department has any estimates of the numbers of students in higher education in the United Kingdom; and what is the estimate for that year.

Mr. Jackson: The Department has not projected beyond the year 2000, when the most recent figures indicate that there will be about 1,130,000 students in higher education in Great Britain.

Opto-electronics

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on his policy towards the funding of academic-only work in relation to opto-electronics.

Mr. Jackson: The policy objectives for Department of Education and Science funding of civil science were set out in the Secretary of State's speech at the first plenary meeting of the Academia Europaea in London on 26 June 1989. Copies are available in the Library.

The Government support scientific research through the science budget which funds the research councils and through the Universities Funding Council block grant to universities. Some research is also carried out by polytechnics funded through the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council. It is for the research councils and higher education institutions to determine the priority they accord to opto-electronics or any other scientific field, taking due account of the policy objectives referred to above.

Pupil-Teacher Ratio

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the latest pupil-teacher ratio for England and Wales; and what was the ratio in 1978-79.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The overall pupil-teacher ratio in maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools in England in January 1989 was 17 and in January 1979 was 18·9. Similar information for Wales is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Teacher Shortages

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the Manchester university study on teacher shortage, a copy of which has been sent to his Department.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Department has not received a copy of the report referred to. However, officials have been in touch with the authors of the report, and I understand that their findings are broadly consistent with the Department's statistics about teacher wastage. They confirm that the majority of those leaving teaching do so on retirement. Others resign on maternity, on moving house or on going abroad, and less than 1 per cent. of the work force leaves teaching for other employment, including self-employment.

PRIME MINISTER

Agriculture Spending

Q16. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if she will raise at the next meeting of the European Council the operation of the automatic agricultural stabilisers and the legally binding budgetary controls.

The Prime Minister: I have no plans to do so. The stabilisers and the legal limit on market support expenditure, for which the United Kingdom fought so hard, have been a considerable success. They have been major elements in reducing expenditure on the common agricultural policy and bringing about significantly lower levels of surplus food.

Bournemouth

Q139. Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to visit Bournemouth.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Pornography

Q165. Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Prime Minister what action she proposes to take to support moves to remove pornography from the shelves of shops.

The Prime Minister: I share the hon. Member's concern about pornography. We have introduced legislation for the control of sex shops and outlawing possession of child pornography. Legislation to outlaw indecent displays has been carried with Government support. The Government have also given support to two private Members' Bills to strengthen the Obscene Publications Act 1959 which were unsuccessful, and has taken other steps to uphold standards in published material. My right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary has commissioned a review of the available research on links between pornography and violence and the effects on attitudes to women.

Low-cost Rural Housing

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Prime Minister what recent representations she has received concerning low-cost rural housing.

The Prime Minister: I receive such representations from time to time from hon. Members, interest groups, and members of the public. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment is responsible for housing issues in England.

We have announced a significant increase in resources available to the Housing Corporation over the next three years. Total capital expenditure is planned to rise to £1,736 million by 1992-93, more than double the provision in 1989-90. As a result we expect the number of new homes provided by associations in 1992-93 to be over twice the 1988-89 output.

We have specifically enabled the Housing Corporation to establish a special programme for smaller villages which will rise to 1,500 new rented houses a year by 1992-93.

African National Congress

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Prime Minister whether she continues to regard the African National Congress as a terrorist organisation.

The Prime Minister: I welcome the preference expressed in some of the African National Congress' statements for a resolution of South Africa's problems through negotiation. But there have also been statements repeating the commitment to armed struggle. We hope that the organisation will remove this ambiguity and commit itself explicitly to the pursuit of peaceful solutions only.

Engagements

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 16 January.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 16 January.

Ms. Gorman: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 16 January.

Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 16 January.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 16 January.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 16 January.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

AIDS

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list the Government Departments which have been or will be funding research into AIDS, giving the amount that each Department contributed to this work for 1989-90 and 1990-91; and if she will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I have been asked to reply. The latest available information about expenditure by central Government on AIDS research in 1989-90 is as follows:

Medical Research Council	[1]13,100,000
Other Research Councils	2,909,700
Department of Health	496,000
Health Education Authority	1,000,000
National Institute of Biological Standards and Control	440,000
Public Health Laboratory Service	1,100,000
Scottish Home and Health Department	163,000
Overseas Development Administration	533,306

[1] Includes expenditure on work commissioned by the Department of Health.

Figures for 1990-91 are not yet available.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Occupational Pensions

Mr. John Townend: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what effect the proposed changes made by the occupational pension board will have on small self-administered pension schemes for small businesses.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Hereford (Mr. Shepherd) on 20 December 1989 at column 304.

Unemployment Benefit

Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the annual cost of unemployment benefit.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: For the financial year 1988-89, unemployment benefit is estimated to have cost £1,143 million.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) whether social security adjudication officers will automatically treat an unemployed claimant whose income support is suspended for not actively seeking work as suffering hardship so that they only lose 40 per cent. of their personal allowance; whether unemployment benefit recipients will be treated automatically as suffering hardship so long as they fulfil the basic qualifying rules for income support; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether unemployed claimants who are quarterly attenders who have had their benefit suspended for not actively seeking work, have to return their order books; whether they will be paid benefit if they are in hardship; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Where an unemployed claimant receiving benefit has failed to show that he is actively seeking employment, hardship payments of income support may be made. The adjudication officer considers each case on its merits. If he is satisfied that the claimant, or any member of his family, would suffer hardship unless benefit were paid, income support is awarded at a reduced rate. Quarterly attenders who do not satisfy the actively seeking employment condition are required to return their order books.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many of the claimants affected by his introduction on 10 December of the new benefit rule on claimants earning more than £43 a week he estimates (a) will have an entitlement to income support or other income replacement benefits, and (b) in cases where they have two employers, will not earn enough from one employer to have a National Insurance contribution liability as an employee; and how many of these are married/cohabiting women, lone parents and claimants with intermittent work patterns due to chronic illness and disability.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: It is estimated that of around 5,000 people who will lose unemployment benefit as a result of this rule up to 1,000 will qualify for income support or housing benefit. I regret that the other information requested is not available.

Pensioners (Canada)

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his most recent estimate of the number of British pensioners currently residing in Canada.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The number of British pensioners residing in Canada was 95,228 at 28 December 1989.

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what recent discussions have taken place between the British and Canadian Governments to discuss the payment of uprated pensions to British pensioners residing in Canada.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: There have been no recent discussions of this topic.

Invalid Care Allowance

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people are in receipt of the invalid care allowance (a) in Tower Hamlets, and (b) in Bow and Poplar.

Mr. Scott: I regret that this information is not available.

Short-term Foster Parents

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Oldham, West of 20 December concerning short-term foster parents, what arrangements he has made regarding requirements for (a) availability for work and (b) actively seeking work in the periods between placements.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The general rule is that people claiming benefits on grounds of unemployment have to be available for and actively seeking employment. No special arrangements apply to short-term foster parents, who are treated in the same way as natural parents.

Pension Books

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the cause of the pre-Christmas computer error which delayed automatic renewal of 42,000 pension books; how many staff, departmental and consultancy, were employed, for how long and at what cost, to send out substitute giros; and what has been the cost of overpayment as a result of the error.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Issue to the Post Office of some 4,300 pension books, not 42,000 was delayed by a recent change to the income support computer system. Immediate action was taken to ensure that all affected beneficiaries received payments before Christmas. A total of 112 man days' effort was spent in preparing interim payments, at a cost of approximately £7,000.

The cost of any duplicate payments is not yet known, but is not expected to be significant. We have taken action to ensure that there will be no recurrence of this incident.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claims for attendance allowance are awaiting a decision by the attendance allowance board.

Mr. Scott: At 30 November there were about 49,000 claims awaiting a decision by the attendance allowance board and its delegated medical practitioners.

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will take steps to expedite consideration of the case of Natasha Greig who has been waiting for two and a half years for a decision on the review of her claim for attendance allowance.

Mr. Scott: I understand that the attendance allowance board has concluded its review of Miss Greig's case. The board's written decision will be sent to her mother as soon as possible.

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average time taken to review claims for attendance allowance.

Mr. Scott: The average time taken to process an application for review of a determination made by the attendance allowance board or one of its delegated medical practitioners is about 12·3 weeks where the outcome of the review is in the claimant's favour, and about 29·9 weeks when the result is not in the claimant's favour.

Income Support and Housing Benefit

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what basket of specific items is accounted for in each of the disablement-related premiums for income support and housing benefit;

(2) what basket of specific items is accounted for in the weekly personal allowance of the applicable amount for income support and for housing benefit.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: There are no specific amounts included in income-related benefit levels to cover particular items of expenditure apart from the amounts included last April to help towards the minimum contribution to the community charge.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Romania

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what role the ambassador and his staff played in the recent events in Romania.

Mr. Maude: None. The embassy did, of course, fulfil its usual task of observing and assessing events and reporting on them.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether Her Majesty's Government provided any assistance or encouragement to the revolutionary forces in Romania prior to, or during, the civil unrest leading to the fall of Mr. Ceausescu.

Mr. Maude: None.

Treaties and Directives

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many (a) directives and (b) treaties, have been agreed or ratified by (i) the EEC and (ii) the Council of Europe, since 1960.

Mr. Maude: During the period 1 January 1973 to 15 December 1989, a total of 1,209 directives were adopted and published by the European Community. In the same period, there have been nine treaties revising earlier treaties and Acts relating to the Communities, and the Community has become party to a large number of bilateral and multilateral treaties with third countries and international organisations; these could be quantified only at disproportionate cost. All of these legislative Acts have been published in the Official Journal of the European Communities, copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

The Council of Europe does not issue directives or ratify treaties itself. Since 1960, a total of 73 conventions and agreements have opened for signature and ratification by member states of the Council of Europe.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list, by name and in chronological order (a) the directives and (b) the treaties that Her Majesty's Government have initiated and which have been ratified by (i) the EEC and (ii) the Council of Europe since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: Under the Community treaties it is for the Commission to initiate proposals for directives and for the ratification of treaties by the Community, and for the Council of Ministers, made up of the representatives of the member states, to decide on those proposals. Nineteen Council of Europe conventions and agreements, set out in the table, have opened for signature by member states.

I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible with details of those initiated by the Government.

European Convention for the Protection of Animals for Slaughter (1979)

Convention on the Conservation of European Wildlife and Natural Habitats (1979)

South Africa

Mr. Caborn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether any representations have been received on behalf of Basayi Maqoko and Zwelinkosi Mjo currently under sentence of death in South Africa for their alleged involvement in offences arising out of political protest; and what action he has taken on these cases.

Mr. Maude: We have received no specific representations about these cases. We consider intervening, exceptionally, in such cases only when all legal avenues of appeal have been exhausted. Our criteria are that the case must be clearly political and there must be strong extenuating circumstances or grounds to doubt the fairness of the judicial process. We are not prepared to make appeals in cases involving indiscriminate terrorism.

Mr. Caborn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether any representations have been received on behalf of Dilizintaba Lucky Nomgana, Mandla Mngomezulu and Sibusion Sindane currently under sentence of death in South Africa for their alleged involvement in offences arising out of political protest; and what action he has taken on these cases.

Mr. Maude: We have received a number of representations on behalf of Mr. Dilizintaba Lucky Nomgana. We consider intervening, exceptionally, in such cases only when all legal avenues of appeal have been exhausted. Our criteria are that the case must be clearly political and there must be strong extenuating circumstances or grounds to doubt the fairness of the judicial process. We are not prepared to make appeals in cases involving indiscriminate terrorism. With legal avenues yet to be exhausted we have not intervened with the South African Government in this case. We have received no specific representations on behalf of Mr. Mandla Mngomezulu or Sibusion Sindane.

Mr. Caborn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) whether any representations have been received on behalf of Israel Machasa, Jerry Molebeng and Johannes Mono currently under sentence of death in South Africa for their alleged involvement in offences arising out of political protest; and what action he has taken with regard to these cases;

(2) whether any representations have been received on behalf of Jabu Obed Masina, Frans Ting Ting Masango and Neo Griffith Potsane current under sentence of death in South Africa for their alleged involvement in offences arising out of political protest; and what action he has taken about these cases;

(3) whether any representations have been received on behalf of Leonard Natange Sheehama and Nkosinathi Zuma currently under sentence of death in South Africa for their alleged involvement in offences arising out of political protest; and what action he has taken about these cases;

(4) whether any representations have been received on behalf of Mthetheleli Zephania Mncube and Mzondeleli Euclid Nondula, currently under sentence of death in South Africa for their alleged involvement in offences arising out of political protest; and what action he has taken about these cases;

(5) whether any representations have been received on behalf of Mtutuzeli Bottoman Ngqandu, Abraham Zeyo and Gilindoda Norman Gxekwa currently under sentence of death in South Africa for their alleged involvement in offences arising out of political protest; and what action he has taken about these cases;

(10) whether any representations have been received on behalf of Vuyani Petrus Jacobs, Mthetheleli Lucas and Tozamile Mooi currently under sentence of death in South Africa for their alleged involvement in offences arising out of political protest; and what action he has taken with regard to these cases;

Mr. Maude: We have received no specific representations about these cases. We consider intervening, exceptionally, in such cases only when all legal avenues of appeal have been exhausted. Our criteria are that the case must be clearly political and there must be strong extenuating circumstances or grounds to doubt the fairness of the judicial process. We are not prepared to make appeals in cases involving indiscriminate terrorism.

Mr. Caborn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether any representations have been received on behalf of Joseph Chidi, Robert John McBride and Nico Ledube Mnyamana currently under sentence of death in South Africa for their alleged involvement in offences arising out of political protest; and what action has been taken about these cases.

Mr. Maude: We have received a number of representations on behalf of Mr. Robert McBride. We consider intervening, exceptionally, in such cases only when all legal avenues of appeal have been exhausted. Our criteria are that the case must be clearly political and there must be strong extenuating circumstances or grounds to doubt the fairness of the judicial process. We are not prepared to make appeals in cases involving indiscriminate terrorism. We have not intervened with the South African Government in this case. We have received no specific representations on behalf of Mr. Chidi or Mr. Mnyamana.

Mr. Caborn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether any representations have been received on behalf of Patrick Manginda, Desmond Majola, and Dickson Madikane, currently under sentence of death in South Africa for their alleged involvement in offences arising out of political protest; and what action has been taken about these cases.

Mr. Maude: We have received a number of representations about Mr. Patrick Manginda, Desmond Majola and Dickson Madikane. We consider intervening, exceptionally, in such cases only when all legal avenues of appeal have been exhausted. Our criteria are that the case must be clearly political and there must be strong extenuating circumstances or grounds to doubt the fairness of the judicial process. We are not prepared to make appeals in cases involving indiscriminate terrorism. With legal avenues yet to be exhausted, we have not intervened with the South African Government in these cases.

Mr. Caborn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether any representations have been received on behalf of Rodney Moloi and Stanford Lebepe, currently under sentence of death in South Africa for their alleged involvement in offences arising out of political protest; and what action he has taken with regard to their cases.

Mr. Maude: We received representations from the mother of Mr. Rodney Moloi which were forwarded to the South African authorities. We consider intervening, exceptionally, in such cases only when all legal avenues of appeal have been exhausted. Our criteria are that the case must be clearly political and there must be strong extenuating circumstances or grounds to doubt the fairness of the judicial process. We are not prepared to make appeals in cases involving indiscriminate terrorism. We have received no specific representations on behalf of Mr. Lebepe.

Mr. Caborn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) whether any representations have been received on behalf of the Upington 14 currently under sentence of death in South Africa for their alleged involvement in offences arising out of political protest; and what action he has taken about this case;

(2) whether any representations have been received on behalf of Wilson Matshili, Patrick Molefe, Takalani David Mamphanga and George Maugedzo currently under sentance of death in South Africa for their alleged involvement in offences arising out of political protest; and what action he has taken on these cases.

Mr. Maude: We have received a number of representations about the Upington 14. We consider intervening, exceptionally, in such cases only when all legal avenues of appeal have been exhausted. Our criteria are that the case must be clearly political and there must be strong extenuating circumstances or grounds to doubt the fairness of the judicial process. We are not prepared to make appeals in cases involving indiscriminate terrorism. With legal avenues yet to be exhausted, we have not intervened with the South African Government in these cases.

Afghanistan

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what diplomatic arrangements are in hand for the protection of British citizens in Afghanistan.

Mr. Maude: As I explained in answer to a similar question on 13 November 1989, we have temporarily withdrawn our embassy staff from Kabul, and, therefore, we are not able to offer consular assistance to British nationals in Afghanistan.

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he intends to re-establish Her Majesty's ambassador in Afghanistan.

Mr. Maude: Her Majesty's ambassador was withdrawn in 1980 following the Soviet invasion. There are no plans to appoint a new ambassador.

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which countries have reopened their embassies in Afghanistan.

Mr. Maude: None of the Western Governments who withdrew their diplomatic staff from Kabul early last year has returned them, although we understand that the French Government have now decided in principle to do so.

Cameroon

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which Ministers have made visits to Cameroon in the past five years.

Mr. Maude: The following list gives details of ministerial visits to Cameroon in the last five years:

Mr. Channon (Department of Trade and Industry—13 to 17 February 1985

Mrs. Chalker (Department of Transport)—28 November to 1 December 1985

Mrs. Chalker (Foreign and Commonwealth Office)—12 to 14 July 1988

Vietnamese Boat People

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has received the report to which he referred in his statement of 12 December 1989 on the mandatory return of boat people to Vietnam from Hong Kong; and whether he will make it public.

Mr. Maude: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has received the report to which he referred on 12 December and it has been placed in the Libraries of this House and another place. It is also being made available publicly.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Women Police Officers

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many women are employed as police officers in each police authority area; and what rank they hold.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information as at 31 October 1989 is set out in the table.

[1]Commander

Visas

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any proposals to require nationals of (a) Morocco (b) Algeria and (c) Jamaica to obtain visas to enter the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to a question by the hon. Member for Sheffield, Central (Mr. Caborn) on 7 December 1989 at column 378.

War Crimes

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will accept the recommendation by Sir Thomas Hetherington and Mr. William Chalmers in the war crimes report that, should it be decided to legislate, investigations into those suspected of involvement in Nazi war crimes should commence as soon as possible after the decision to legislate has been taken.

Mr. John Patten: The Government are considering the views expressed in the recent war crimes debates in each House of Parliament, and we shall announce our conclusions shortly. Investigations could begin once it was clear that any proposed legislation had the general support of Parliament.

Gamma Radiation Accidents

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for south and west Yorkshire, the comprehensive plans and programmes for implementation of procedures that have been made for the fire and ambulance services to deal with accidents on railways or road involving external emissions of gamma radiation, and for police officers and other workers immediately affected.

Mr. Atkins: I have been asked to reply.

The provision of emergency plans is the responsibility of the consignors of radioactive material. These plans are exercised regularly with the emergency services, which have the relevant operational responsibilities.

Terrorism and Drug Trafficking

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what investigations have been made into the links between international terrorist groups and drug trafficking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: Investigation of the links between terrorism and other forms of crime has not so far indicated any significant involvement in drug trafficking by terrorist groups threatening the United Kingdom.

Broadcasting Ban

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to remove the broadcasting ban introduced in October 1988.

Mr. Mellor: We have no plans at present to remove the broadcasting restrictions, but we are keeping the operation of them under review.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received about the broadcasting ban introduced on 19 October 1988.

Mr. Mellor: We have received representations about the broadcasting restrictions from right hon. and hon. Members, members of the public and interested organisations.

Tobacco Sales

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions have been initiated against cigarette retailers in alleged breach of the Protection of Children (Tobacco) Act 1986 each year since the Act became effective.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is given in the table. The Protection of Children (Tobacco) Act 1986 came into force on 8 October 1986.

Interpretation Service

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people are currently held in custody awaiting provision of an interpretation service.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: None. The criteria for detention under the Immigration Act do not include the availability of an interpreter.

Mental Health

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to apply the conclusions of the Office of Health Economics report, "Mental Health in the 1990s: From Custody to Care? to prisoners in custody; and if he will make a statement".

Mr. Mellor: The report was published as recently as last month and is wholly concerned with arrangements for care of the mentally ill in the general community. We are always open to ideas which may, directly or indirectly, point to ways of improving the health care of prisoners. In that spirit we will study the conclusions of the report with some care.

Children in Prison

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for 1980, 1985 and for the latest date for which he has figures and by location (a) the number of children and babies who are in prison with their mother because of an offence she has committed and (b) the length of time the children are kept in prison.

Mr. Mellor: On 10 January 1990, there were 38 babies in the three prison mother and baby units; 12 were at Her Majesty's prison, Holloway, 10 at Her Majesty's prison and young offender institution, Styal, and 16 at Her Majesty's prison, Askham Grange. Equivalent information for 1980 and 1985 is not available.

Rule 9(3) of the Prison Rules 1964 (SI 1964 No. 388) provides that the Secretary of State may, subject to any conditions he thinks fit, permit a woman to have her baby with her in prison. Only a mother can request the admission of her baby but approval depends on a place in the units being available and admission being considered as in the best interests of the child.

The length of time a baby remains in a prison mother and baby unit can reflect a number of factors, including the wishes of the mother and the length of her sentence. But babies are not normally permitted to remain with their mother in prison beyond the age of 18 months because research has shown that after that age there is likely to be an adverse effect on the development of the child.

Prison Officers' Accommodation

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of prison officers' accommodation for which requests have been made by officers to purchase, for each establishment, at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Mellor: The prison service scheme for the discount sale of quarters to staff was introduced in June 1987 and to 9 January 1990 we have received the following applications to purchase:

Beryl Kennedy

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the rules governing the number of letters that may be written by any one person to a prisoner; and how these have been applied in the case of Beryl Kennedy writing to an inmate in Winson Green prison.

Mr. Mellor: Instructions to prison service staff about handling prisoners' correspondence have been published in Standing Order 5B, a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

Governors have discretion to limit the amount of mail received by a prisoner if the number of letters received causes delays in handling other prisoners' letters. Ms. Kennedy was writing on a daily basis and after being asked to reduce the volume of her correspondence it was judged necessary, so that other prisoners' mail would not be delayed, to return some letters to her.

Offensive Language

Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will have discussions with the broadcasting bodies about the use of language which might cause offence.

Mr. Mellor: Programme content is a matter for the broadcasting authorities, who are independent of the Government and are responsible for considering complaints on such matters. In addition the Government have established the Broadcasting Standards Council as a direct response to public concern about standards of taste and decency on television and radio. These include the use of offensive language. The Government's Broadcasting Bill proposes that the council should have statutory powers to consider and adjudicate on complaints.

Lost Property

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many complaints in 1989 were made by inmates to his Department over the loss of money or personal property that resulted from an inmate being moved from one prison to another.

Mr. Mellor: The precise information requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, the total number of complaints in 1989 relating to lost property and money, including those concerned with property lost on transfer, was about 2,250.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the policies that are followed by the prison department to ensure that money and personal effects belonging to inmates go with them when they are moved from one prison to another prison.

Mr. Mellor: Instructions to prison service staff, requiring that a prisoner's property and cash should be moved with him or her on the day of transfer, are contained in prison Standing Order 1C, a copy of which has been placed in the Library. It has not always proved possible in practice to comply with this requirement in respect of the transfer of money and a number of steps are being taken to improve the present procedures.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what complaints have been made to his Department by inmates who had been held in Canterbury prison and when moved to another prison did not have money belonging to them transferred; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Figures for individual establishments are not available, and could only be produced at disproportionate cost. Because of delays in the transfer of money from prisons in the south-east region of the prison service, which includes Canterbury, the regional director issued instructions in November, so that all receiving establishments will be notified of private cash balances within 24 hours of transfer, by which time the prisoner should be able to spend this money. Loans are available to cover any delays in the transfer of a prisoner's earnings.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of cases that inmates in prisons in England and Wales took to the small claims court against his Department in 1989 following the loss of personal property; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Nineteen claims for lost property were commenced in the small claims court during 1989.

Prisoners Committees

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will encourage the involvement of inmates in prisons in England and Wales in the formation of prisoners committees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Governors of prison service establishments have discretion to use a variety of methods when seeking the views of inmates, including encouraging the establishment of inmate committees.

Grendon Prison

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the prisons that inmates from Grendon prison have been sent to; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Serious defects in the electrical systems at HM prison Grendon meant that the establishment had to be evacuated in December. Inmates have been temporarily moved to the following prisons:

Aylesbury (one inmate only).
Glen Parva
Oxford (one inmate only).
The Mount
Swinfen Hall (two inmates only).
Winchester
Wormwood Scrubs (currently holding inmates originally destined for Parkhurst.

In view of the unique nature of Grendon's therapeutic regime, every effort is being made to enable receiving establishments to maintain that regime, wherever possible.

Grendon inmates and staff will be returned to Grendon when the prison reopens. In the interim, urgent work is in hand to empty HMYOI Wellingborough of young offenders, and convert it for use as a temporary "new" Grendon. All young offenders should have been moved out by the end of this month. Grendon inmates will be individually assessed for their suitability for the levels of security at Wellingborough before they are transferred there.

The two wings at Wellingborough not required for Grendon inmates will be occupied by category C adult male prisoners.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department why Grendon prison has been closed; and how long this prison will remain closed.

Mr. Mellor: An electrical survey carried out at Her Majesty's prison Grendon revealed a number of serious faults which made it necessary to evacuate the establishment. The prison is likely to remain closed for between six and nine months while repair work is undertaken.

Prison Kitchens

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what complaints have been made to his Departmet by boards of visitors regarding the conditions existing in prison kitchens; and if he will list the prisons, and the action that has been taken.

Mr. Mellor: The information required is not recorded centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

I place great value on the work undertaken by boards of visitors. Any matters of concern raised or recommendations made by them, whether in their valuable, detailed annual reports or by other means are afforded very careful consideration. I can assure the hon. Member that the same careful consideration is given to any matters raised on kitchens.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what training is given to inmates who work in kitchens in prisons in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: All inmates who work in kitchens in prisons in England and Wales recieve instruction in personal hygiene and training in the safe operation and care of machinery and equipment. Establishments are also encouraged to provide formal craft training leading to recognised vocational qualifications. At the end of June 1989, a total of 45 establishments were offering 52 certified courses and a further 17 uncertificated courses. An additional 35 establishments plan to introduce formal training courses during 1990.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of senior catering officers who are fully trained and in charge of kitchens in London prisons on 5 January; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Ashford and Downview employ private catering contractors. In every other London establishment the officer-in-charge of the kitchen is a fully trained caterer.

Alcohol-related Violence

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on Government measures to curb late-night alcohol-related violence against police officers.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 15 January 1990]: We continue to be concerned at the level of alcohol-related violence. We therefore encourage the work of local inter-agency groups, such as Newport's, seeking to reduce such crime for the benefit of all members of the community, including police officers. Parliament has provided severe penalties for serious attacks against any person: a maximum of five years' imprisonment for assault occasioning actual bodily harm, and up to life imprisonment for wounding with intent to do grevious bodily harm. The Public Order Act 1986 put in place revised and new offences to help deal with disorder whatever its cause.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Cameroon

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has any plans to contribute funds for the building of a ring road in north-west Cameroon.

Mrs. Chalker: Funding of that part of the Bamenda ring road project proposed for UK finance would require an ECGD covered commercial loan in association with aid funds—the latter from the aid and trade provision. There is currently no medium or long-term ECGD cover to Cameroon following its 1987-1988 economic crisis and subsequent structural adjustment programme. In the event of export credit cover being restored, construction of part of the ring road would be considered, alongside any other eligible proposals for ATP funding, if it met the conditions pertaining to such cover.

Vietnam

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what representations he has received about Her Majesty's Government's policy on development aid for Vietnam, and from which organisation; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether he will now consider the joint funding of NGO projects in Vietnam on a case-by-case basis.

Mrs. Chalker: I have received representations from Save the Children Fund, Oxfam and Christian Aid about aid to Vietnam, and also from a number of private individuals. We welcome the withdrawal of Vietnamese combat units from Cambodia, but we also expect the Vietnamese Government to meet their obligations towards their own people, including the boat people in Hong Kong, as a pre-condition for the establishment of a Government-to-Government aid programme. Further progress is also needed in the reform of economic policies.

Following the representations to which I have referred, I am considering whether the time has come to open Vietnam for participation in the joint funding scheme whereby the Government meet half the costs of agreed projects sponsored by voluntary agencies, and in particular how the agencies might be able to contribute to mitigating the economic and humanitarian problems in the areas from which the boat people predominantly come.

Pensions

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to uprate the pensions paid to former local government officers overseas to bring them into line with pensions paid to former overseas civil servants.

Mrs. Chalker: The British Government are not responsible for the pensions of officers who served overseas in the local authorities of our former colonies, and have no plans to uprate them.

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the average pension of (a) retired local government officers in overseas service and (b) retired civil servants in overseas service.

Mrs. Chalker: We do not hold details of the pensions of officers who served overseas in the local authorities of our former colonies, nor generally about the pensions of colonial civil servants. The average pension in respect of overseas service paid to some 39,000 former colonial civil servants and their widows, for whom the British Government accept a responsibility, is about £3,800 a year.

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the average pension paid to local government officers retired from service with Nairobi city council; and what are the highest and lowest pensions received by former officers with the council.

Mrs. Chalker: My Department has no responsibility for the pensions paid to retired Kenya local government officers. Information about Nairobi city council pensions is held by the Public Trust Office which is the trustee of the Kenya local authorities superannuation fund.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many pensions are in payment for the Palestine police force; what is the average pension in payment; when the pensions were last increased; and by how much.

Mrs. Chalker: There are 557 expatriate officers and 613 local officers receiving a pension from HM Government for their Palestine public service. The number of these who served in the police force could be identified separately only at disproportionate cost. The average pension paid to local officers is at present £1,180 a year. Many expatriate officers have pensions for service in several territories, which are treated together for calculating increases. The present value of the pension deriving specifically from Palestine service in these cases can be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The average pension paid to the 235 expatriates who served only in Palestine is £2,240 a year. The pensions attract increases under the United Kingdom pensions increase legislation, and are uprated annually in line with inflation. They were last increased with effect from 10 April 1989 by 5·9 per cent.

WALES

Welsh Language

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the additional cost faced by local education authorities in Wales arising from the movement of each non-Welsh speaking child into schools where Welsh is the normal language of education (a) at primary level and (b) at secondary level; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: We have made no such estimates. The costs of Welsh medium education are, however, taken into account in the annual local government financial settlement.

Forestry

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people are employed by the Forestry Commission in Wales, giving a sub-regional breakdown indicating labouring and white collar jobs.

Mr. Peter Walker: The information is shown in the table:

Forestry Commission direct employees at 30 November 1989

County	Non-industrial	Industrial
Clwyd	15	46
Gwynedd	43	139
Dyfed	[1]115	79
Powys	29	96
Glamorgan	41	87
Gwent	19	37

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much forest land has been sold so far in Wales since 1981; for what sums of money; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: The Forestry Commission sold some 8,600 hectares of forest land in Wales between July 1981 and 31 March 1989. Total receipts from these sales were in the region of £11 million.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement concerning the continued supply of forest products to the paper industry consequent upon the sale of woodlands.

Mr. Peter Walker: The guidelines on the selection of Forestry Commission properties for sale which Forestry Ministers issued in 1981 require the Forestry Commissioners to take account among other things, of the maintenance and development of the wood processing industry. The commissioners are continuing to follow these guidelines and are fully meeting their wood supply commitments. The guidelines are to be found at appendix V to the commission's 1981-82 annual report.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will set up a study group to assess the social and economic impact of forest sales upon rural areas.

Mr. Peter Walker: No. I do not believe that there is any need to set up such a study group.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the likely number of Forestry Commission staff to be made redundant consequent upon the sale in Wales of forests and woods; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: It seems unlikely that any Forestry Commission staff will have to be made redundant as a consequence of the sale of forests and woods in Wales.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the percentage of forests to be sold in Wales giving a sub-regional breakdown.

Mr. Peter Walker: It is expected that about 10 per cent. of the Forestry Commission's forest land in Wales will be sold over the next 10 years. It is not possible to give any sub-regional breakdown.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he will make to protect the public's right of access to woodland sold by the Forestry Commission.

Mr. Peter Walker: In answer to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Dumfries (Sir H. Monro) on 16 June 1989, my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland indicated that the Government were concerned that the general public should continue to enjoy access to those forests to be disposed of by the Forestry Commission in a way which was compatible with management for forestry and other purposes. Ways of achieving this objective are being investigated.

Plastic Waste

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what guidelines were issued by his Department to health authorities in Wales regarding the safe burning of plastic waste without such burning forming dangerous compounds such as polychlorinated biphenyls, chlorines and flurans.

Mr. Ian Grist: Guidance on the safe disposal of clinical waste including plastics was issued by the Department to district health authorities in June 1982. The code of guidance was prepared by the Health and Safety Commission and offered advice on the handling, transport and disposal of all kinds of clinical waste.

Teachers

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Woolwich of 20 December, Official Report, columns 319-20, in March 1989; how many teachers were employed by each local authority in Wales; how many teachers were in receipt of an incentive allowance for each local authority in Wales; what percentage this was of the total employed by each local authority; and how many teachers in receipt of an incentive allowance in each local authority in Wales held allowances that were (a) incentive A, (b) incentive B, (c) incentive C, (d) incentive D and (e) incentive E.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Information relating to March 1989 is not yet available.

Sport in the Countryside

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales to what body he will give responsibility for policies and developmental work with organised and active sport in the countryside in Wales in the future.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will continue to expect all the relevant agencies to work together in this field.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what arrangements he intends to bring in to ensure that adequate consideration is given in future to the interests of informal users of the countryside, including horse riders and cyclists; and that these interests are reconciled with environmental conservation requirements.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: None.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he intends to take to achieve or maintain a separation of regulatory and promotional functions in relation to the countryside in Wales, particularly in respect to access and recreation.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: None.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he intends to take to ensure full consideration of the views of organised sports and recreational interests in Wales by the proposed Countryside Council for Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: This will be a matter for the proposed Countryside Council for Wales when it takes over its full functions.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he intends to take to ensure that recreation in the countryside in Wales is controlled by agreement and conciliation between conflicting interests wherever possible, and that control by regulation is only undertaken following adequate consultation and attempted conciliation; and what machinery he will establish to this end.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Government have no specific proposals to introduce any controls of this nature.

Countryside Commission

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he intends to take to ensure that promotional and development work currently undertaken by the Countryside Commission in Wales is continued and developed following the changes proposed in the Environmental Protection Bill.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The provisions in the Environmental Protection Bill relating to the countryside and conservancy agencies are essentially concerned only with the reorganisation of those bodies. The Countryside Council for Wales will continue to have the same statutory functions as the Countryside Commission. It will be for the council to develop its policies within that framework.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he intends to take to ensure that the Countryside Commission's target of opening up all rights of way in Wales is achieved by the year 2000; following the restructuring of conservation and countryside bodies.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: This will be a matter for the Countryside Council for Wales.

Countryside Council for Wales

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will make it his policy to ensure that the powers of the Countryside Council for Wales are not limited only to national parks and areas of outstanding natural beauty in Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Countryside Act 1968 not only changed the name of the National Parks Commission to the Countryside Commission but enlarged its functions to include the wider countryside. These broader functions which are in no way limited to national parks and areas of outstanding natural beauty will be transferred, in respect of Wales, to the new Countryside Council for Wales.

Bilingual School, Preseli

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the latest developments regarding the proposed bilingual school, Preseli, Pembrokeshire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Dyfed county council published proposals under section 12 of the Education Act 1980 on 22 November 1989 to establish a bilingual comprehensive school in the premises of the existing Preseli county secondary school. The law prescribes that, if statutory objections to the proposals are received by the county council, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State must decide whether to approve or reject the proposals.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the income of each district to sustain a common level of services throughout Wales on the basis of his assumed figures for community charge payments in each district.

Mr. Peter Walker: The standard spending assessment for each county and district council is calculated on the basis of formulae which have been agreed by the Welsh local authority associations. It represents a measure of the cost of providing a standard level of service, taking into account the characteristics of each area. If every authority were to spend at the level of its standard spending assessment, the community charge in the area of each charging authority in Wales, after taking account of revenue support grant entitlements and income from non-domestic rates, would be £173—the community charge for standard spending.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Income Support

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland in how many cases the personal allowance of an individual in receipt of income support is used to cover costs of (a) private residential care and (b) private nursing care in each unit of management area of the Southern health board.

Mr. Needham: I regret that the information is not available.

Detention

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of people detained under the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1987 had their requests to have someone told of their detention delayed on the direction of a police superintendent or an officer of more senior rank in 1988 and the period 1 January to 31 October 1989.

Mr. Cope: Figures are available to 30 June 1989. During 1988, a total of 6 per cent. of requests to have someone informed of a person's detention were delayed on the authorisations of a superintendent or above. Between 1 January and 30 June, no such requests were delayed.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of requests made by persons detained under the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1987 for solicitors were delayed on the direction of a police superintendent or an officer of more senior rank in 1988 and the period 1 January to 31 October 1989.

Mr. Cope: Figures are available to 30 June 1989. During 1988, a total of 60 per cent. of requests for access to see a solicitor were delayed on the authorisation of a superintendent or above. Between 1 January and 30 June, 64 per cent. of requests were so delayed.

Home Helps

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the average hourly rate of pay earned by home helps in each health board area in each financial year since 1980.

Mr. Needham: Standard hourly rates are payable to all home helps in the Health and Social Services Boards. Details are as follows:

Financial year	Period	Hourly rate
1980-81	1 April 1980-31 October 1980	154·13p

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Accounting Standards Committee

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will make a statement on the work of the accounting standards committee.

Mr. Redwood: The work of the accounting standards committee of the Consultative Committee of Accounting Bodies in developing accounting standards has made a major contribution to improvements in accounting practice over the last 20 years. The arrangements for making and enforcing such standards now need strengthening. The Dearing committee's recommendations on this subject have been widely supported and Sir Ronald Dearing is negotiating terms with all concerned so that the new arrangements for making and enforcing acccounting standards are in place by the summer.

Public Houses

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received from (a) brewers and (b) representatives of public house landlords and managers regarding the revaluation of business rates; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: I have been asked to reply.

We received in 1988 and 1989 a number of representations from and on behalf of brewers about the powers available to the valuation officer to obtain information to be used in making a valuation and the subsequent use of such information. We have not, however, received any representations about the levels of value proposed for breweries or for public houses.

Regional Assistance, Corby

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what has been the total annual expenditure in each year since 1979-80 on (a) regional development grants, (b) regional selective assistance, (c) regional investment grants and (d) regional innovation grants paid in the Corby development area.

International Tin Council

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will make a statement about the progress of discussions concerning the liabilities of the International Tin Council.

Mr. Ridley: A proposal supported by all known creditors of the International Tin Council's buffer stock operation for a settlement at £182·5 million payable on 30 March 1990 has been approved by the ITC as the basis for a settlement. A Supplementary Estimate covering a United Kingdom contribution not exceeding £31,790,000 to the settlement amount will be laid before the House in February.

Consumer Guarantee

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list those organisations which have made representations to him opposed to the consumer guarantee as set out in the report of the National Consumer Council.

Mr. Forth: A formal public consultation exercise has not been undertaken but, following publication of the National Consumer Council report "The Consumer Guarantee", representations have been made both for and against various aspects of the proposals. It would be inappropriate to name bodies which have expressed views in confidence.

Company Prosecutions

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many prosecutions arising from company investigations commenced after 1 June 1979; and how many of the prosecutions were successful.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 15 January 1990]: I am aware of 113 successful prosecutions completed since 1 January 1979 arising from investigations under the Companies Acts; some of those prosecutions may have commenced before that date.

Further information is given in the annual report prepared under section 729 of the Companies Act 1985 (formerly section 451 of the Companies Act 1948) and published by Her Majesty's Stationery Office. This report is available in the Library.

Company Accounts

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether his Department examines published company accounts for compliance with the requirements of the Companies Acts.

Mr. Redwood: Responsibility for compliance with the Companies Act's requirements concerning accounts rests with directors, with auditors required to state whether the accounts meet those requirements. Companies House staff carry out certain basic checks on accounts, but the contents are not scrutinised in detail except in response to specific complaints.

Genetically-Manipulated Animals

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the patenting of genetically-manipulated animals.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 15 January 1990]: Patents are granted in the United Kingdom for inventions which are novel, non-obvious and capable of industrial application, except that plant or animal varieties and essential biological processes, among other things, are not patentable. However, microbiological processes and their products, with which genetic engineering is essentially involved, are patentable and it is therefore likely that patent applications for inventions concerned with genetically-manipulated animals would be granted, provided other relevant conditions were met.

A European Community proposal for a directive on the legal protection of biotechnological inventions which is currently under discussion would not alter this position. Nevertheless, I am aware that a patent application for a genetically-manipulated mouse similar to one granted by the US Patent and Trade Mark Office has been refused by the European Patent Office. However, this decision is under appeal.

Eastern Europe

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement about the new opportunities available to British firms in eastern Europe; and what support services his Department is now able to offer such firms.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 15 January 1990]: My Department is well seized of the new commercial opportunities opening up in eastern Europe. These include, in particular, the opportunities for direct investment; the possibility of increasing exports of goods and services; opportunities for joint ventures and other forms of industrial co-operation; as well as consultancy and management training opportunities.

My Department has an eastern European branch of 25 staff directly responsible for commercial relations and trade promotion in eastern Europe. This branch is able to provide both general and specific advice and guidance to United Kingdom business men on investment opportunites in these markets and about the availability of the various United Kingdom and EC assistance schemes recently created. These resources are supplemented by other staff in my Department working on various specific export service schemes, such as trade fairs, and by the export service staff in the Department's regional offices. My Department also funds the East European Trade Council, the BOTB's area advisory group for eastern Europe.

Coal (Balance of Trade)

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the balance of trade in coal and related products at the last available date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: I have been asked to reply.

Information is available for the period January to November 1989 as shown in the table.

January to November 1989

Uranium

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what quantities of uranium have been imported from Africa in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Baldry: I have been asked to reply.

Uranium for the United Kingdom's civil nuclear programme has not been imported from Africa since 1984. From 1980, some 6,300 short tons of U_3O_8 (some 4,800 metric tonnes of contained uranium) were imported. Figures for specific years are as follows:

	metric tonnes (to nearest hundred tonnes)
1980	1,200
1981	1,300
1982	1,000
1983	900
1984	400

Output Figures

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether output figures based on sales include products which are imported by producers from their overseas subsidiaries, associates and others.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I have been asked to reply.

The concepts and methodology employed in the output measure of gross domestic product and its components, including the index of industrial production are fully described in chapter 5 of "United Kingdom National Accounts: Sources and Methods" (third edition: HMSO 1985), a copy of which is available in the House of Commons Library.

Trade Surpluses

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what were the bilateral trade surpluses/deficits with the United States of America of each of the OECD countries, Hong Kong, Singapore, South Korea, Taiwan, Romania, India and Brazil, in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Redwood: The information is in the table.

ENERGY

Low-Sulphur Coal

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the levels of imported low-sulphur coal in tonnes for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Baldry: Information on the sulphur content of imported coal is not available centrally.

Fuel (Energy Values)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has as to (a) the energy values required to manufacture waste derived fuel and refuse derived fuel and (b) the balance between the energy required and energy produced by the various types of fuel.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Waste and refuse derived fuels produce typically just over five times more energy than is used in their production, although this figure will depend on the particular process involved.

The less highly refined forms of refuse derived fuel and fuels derived from commercial and general industrial wastes are even more attractive as they require less energy in production. The energy inputs required to produce other fuels will depend on the circumstances of their production.

Hinkley Point C

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects the inspector to the Hinkley Point C public inquiry to submit his report; and if he will publish it when received.

Mr. Baldry: The timing of his report is a matter for the inquiry inspector. My right hon. Friend will wish to see and consider the report before deciding when to publish it.

Oil and Gas (Safety)

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the number of fatalities and serious injuries which have occurred involving the use of gangways linking offshore oil and gas installations and other vessels or structures, for each year of operations on the United Kingdom continental shelf.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Since 1 January 1980 my Department has received reports of three fatalities relating to the use of gangways. These occurred in a single incident in 1982 when the bridge connecting Piper Alpha to MSV Tharos collapsed. No serious injuries have been reported.

Private Licensed Mines

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many men were working underground in private licensed mines in 1978-79 and each succeeding year.

Mr. Wakeham: The British Coal Corporation's 1988-89 annual report and accounts provides a figure of 1,524 as the number of men employed underground in licensed deep mines at the end of 1988-89. The Department does not have figures for previous years. I have therefore asked the chairman of the British Coal Corporation, which is the licensing authority, to write to the hon. Member.

HEALTH

Block Contracts

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health who was the contractor, what was the cost, what was the experimental location by district and unit and what was the date of report of all pilot work carried out on the specification of block contracts.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We are funding development work on contracting for services in a number of health authorities. For details of this work I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond) on 6 November 1989 at columns 455-56. The projects involve contracting for a range of services in a variety of local circumstances and identifying the most appropriate type of contract to use in these different situations. None of the work is limited explicitly to specifying block contracts.

Deaths (Elderly People)

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of deaths among those aged (a) 60 to 69 years, (b) 70 to 79 years and (c) 80 years and over for each complete six-monthly period from 1 April 1979 to 31 March 1989 for England and Wales.

Mr. Freeman: The information is shown in the table.

Number of deaths among those aged (a) 60-69 years, (b) 70-79 years and (c) 80 years and over for each complete six-monthly period from 1st April 1979 to 31st March 1989 for England and Wales

Residential Care

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of persons aged over 75 years live in nursing homes.

Mr. Freeman: This information is not collected centrally.

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of persons aged over 85 years live in (a) nursing homes, (b) residential homes and (c) other institutions in England and Wales.

Mr. Freeman: Not all this information is collected centrally. At 31 March 1988, the number of people aged 85 and over in local authority staffed and registered residential care homes for the elderly people and younger physically handicapped people was 100,036 or 15·4 per cent. of the population aged 85 and over. This figure is provisional.

Royal Hallamshire Hospital, Sheffield

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what training procedures have been introduced at the Royal Hallamshire hospital, Sheffield, on accepting radiation-contaminated casualties and assisting with decontamination of personnel.

Mr. Freeman: Regional health authorities are responsible for planning for emergencies. The hon. Member should contact the chairman of Trent regional health authority for details of training for staff at the Royal Hallamshire hospital.

Backlog Maintenance, Trent

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total cost of backlog maintenance for National Health Service properties in the Trent regional health authority and by district health authority, for the latest year for which he has figures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms. Harman) on 10 January at columns 666-69.

Infant Mortality

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the figures from 1979 to 1989 for the number of (a) spina bifida births, (b) hydroencephaly births, (c) still births and (d) cot deaths, in the Merseyside area.

Mr. Freeman: The information is shown in the table.

NHS Reform

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent discussions he has had with the chairman of the North Western regional health authority to discuss the proposed Health Service reforms.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have regular monthly meetings with the chairmen of the regional health authorities including Mr. Bruce Martin, chairman of the North Western regional health authority. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State last met Mr. Martin at the regional chairmen's meeting on 14 November 1989 when a number of management issues including Health Service reforms were discussed.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will show, by regional health authority, the response received to date from general practitioners, by percentage, where health centres and clinics are proposed to be sold; and what terms and conditions will be implemented.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is not held centrally.

Community Care

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the estimated number of frail elderly, disabled and chronically sick patients no longer in need of acute hospital services who need to be rehabilitated and transferred to community care; what plans he has for professional training and establishing nationally-determined rates of pay for community carers; and what is the estimated average cost of care in the community per seriously disabled patient.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The organisation of rehabilitation services is a matter for individual district health authorities together with local authority social services departments. Information about such numbers is not held in the form requested. As set out in our White Paper "Caring for People" (Cmnd. 849) we welcome the developments in the role of home care workers which are already under way in a number of areas and have no plans to create a profession of community carer. We are currently discussing the detailed financial implications of the White Paper with the local authority associations.

Health Authorities

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans to introduce remuneration or compensation for members of the proposed new health authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Yes. Paragraph 7 of schedule 1 to the National Health Service and Community Care Bill will enable remuneration to be paid to the new non-executive members of health authorities.

Grant Funding

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average time his Department takes to make a decision on grant funding; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: As the nature and complexity of applications for grants vary considerably, an average time could prove misleading. We have introduced arrangements for our section 64 general scheme which require applications from voluntary organisations to be submitted by October with the intention that most decisions will be announced before April. A few complex applications and those where additional information is required may take a little longer to process.

Intra-fallopian Transfer

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list the National Health Service centres that do not charge patients for gamete intra-fallopian transfer treatment;

(2) if he will list the National Health Service centres that do not provide full National Health Service funding to National Health Service patients for gamete intra-fallopian transfer treatment and the cost per centre.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health why payments are required from National Health Service patients for the cost of gamete intra-fallopian transfer treatment at some National Health Service centres.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Gamete intra-fallopian transfer (GIFT) is a relatively new technique used in the treatment of infertility and is available in only a few centres. Treatment under the National Health Service, including that for infertility, is provided free of charge. In addition, in some NHS hospitals GIFT may be provided as part of an academic research programme when patients may be asked to contribute to its costs.

Hospital Building

Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the 10 largest hospital building projects in the United Kingdom currently under construction.

Mr. Freeman: Information held centrally shows that the 10 largest hospital building schemes, based on the cost of construction at tender, currently under construction in England are as follows:

Region	Scheme
Northern	Royal Victoria Infirmary, Scheme 1, Phase 5
Northern	Wansbeck General Hospital, Scheme 1, Phase 1
Trent	Lincoln County, Phase 2
North West Thames	Westminster and Chelsea Hospital
South East Thames	Hastings District General Hospital, Main Phase 1
South West Thames	Mid Sussex, Phase 1
Wessex	Bournemouth District General Hospital, Phase 2B
Wessex	Salisbury District Hospital, Phase 1
South Western	Royal Devon and Exeter, Wonford
North Western	Ormskirk District General Hospital, Phase 1

Information on Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland is the responsibility of their respective Secretaries of State.

Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what have been the 10 largest hospital building projects completed in the United Kingdom since 1979.

Mr. Freeman: Information held centrally shows that the 10 largest hospital building schemes, based on the cost of construction at tender, completed in England since 1979 are as follows:

Region	Scheme
Trent	Queens Medical Centre Development, Phase 2
North West Thames	St. Mary's W2, Phase 1B
North East Thames	Homerton Hospital, Phase 1
South West Thames	St. Georges Block H, Phase 2A

West Midlands	Walsall, Phases 4A and 4B
West Midlands	City General, Stoke, Surgical Accommodation
West Midlands	Telford District General Hospital, Phase 1
West Midlands	Bromsgrove Redditch District General Hospital, Phase 1, Contract 2
Mersey	North Sefton District General Hospital, Southport, Phase 1

Information on Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland is the responsibility of their respective Secretaries of State.

Camberwell Breast Screening Unit

192. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the future of the Camberwell health authority breast screening unit.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No changes are planned at present to this unit. Since October 1988 it has provided women aged 50 to 64 from south-east London with a successful and popular screening and follow-up assessment service.

Social Work Training

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the future of social work training.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Government have accepted the need to improve training for social workers and other social care staff and we are implementing a balanced programme of improvements. This includes the provision of additional funding for phasing out one-year post-graduate social work courses in favour of a minimum of two years training, improvement to the quality and quantity of practice placements and improvements to course curricula. Additional funds are also being made available to the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work to introduce a new qualifying course, the diploma in social work which will replace the existing qualifying courses in due course. We are also giving consideration to improving opportunities for social work post-qualifying training.

Hospices

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will take steps to introduce a scheme of financial assistance to voluntary hospices for Her Majesty's Government to match pound for pound, up to 50 per cent. of running costs, money raised by the voluntary sector.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Banbury (Mr. Baldry) on 15 December 1989 at columns 846-47.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will visit the Hospice of the Good Shepherd, Backford, near Chester, to meet the medical director to discuss the work of the hospice.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We would be pleased to consider an invitation from the hospice.

Population Statistics

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what use the registrar general is making of information collected for the community charge in respect of improving the accuracy of population statistics.

Mr. Freeman: None, at present. The registrar general will be examining aggregated community charge data with a view to their use in making population estimates. If it becomes clear that use of community charge data would improve the accuracy of population estimates, this will begin as quickly as practicable.

Lewisham Hospital

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he is yet able to announce a decision on the proposed new Health Service development at Lewisham; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Agreement has recently been reached on a major new development, known as phase II, at Lewisham hospital, the cost of which will be around £27 million. This scheme should provide, from the mid-1990s, a greatly improved range of health care to local people. The development complements the equally impressive phase III scheme at Guy's hospital in the north of Lewisham and North Southwark health authority costing around £75 million.

Prescription Pricing Authority

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many inquiries were undertaken each year since 1979 into prescribing practices by the Prescription Pricing Authority.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No such inquiries have been undertaken, as this is not a function of the Prescription Pricing Authority.

Prescriptions

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) in how many cases in each year since 1979 family practitioner committees deducted prescription costs from general medical practitioners, remuneration; and in which National Health Service regions those cases occurred;

(2) in how many cases in each year since 1979 local medical committees invoked their powers under section 20 of the National Health Service Regulations 1974; and in which National Health Service regions such cases occurred.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information for the period prior to August 1988 is no longer held in the Department. For the period since August 1988 the table shows for each region, on the basis of the information reported to the Department, the number of cases considered by local medical committees (LMCs) under regulation 20 of the NHS (Service Committees and Tribunal) Regulations 1974, the number of cases in which LMCs decided that the substances should not have been prescribed, and the total number of cases in which the cost of the prescription was recovered from the GP concerned.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in how many cases in each year since 1979 PD8 inquiries were undertaken into individual doctors' prescribing practices; and in which National Health Service regions these inquiries were carried out.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Inquiries into the prescribing of practices whose costs overall are significantly above the local average (previously known as PD8 inquiries) are undertaken by medical officers of the Department's regional medical service (RMS). RMS boundaries are not conterminous with NHS regional boundaries and it is therefore not possible to provide information in exactly the form requested. The RMS is organised in six divisions and covers the NHS regions as follows:

Eastern Division
North West Thames, North East Thames and East Anglian Regions.
East Midlands Division
Trent and Oxford Regions.
North Eastern Division
Yorkshire and Northern Regions, excluding Cumbria.
North Western Division
North Western and Mersey Regions, plus Cumbria.
Southern Division
South East Thames, South West Thames and Wessex Regions.
Western Division
West Midlands and South Western Regions.

The numbers and total of visits to high cost practices undertaken in England since 1979 in each of the RMS divisions is shown in the following table:

Tranquillisers

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many benzodiazepine tranquilliser addicts are known to have broken their dependency.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will provide the necessary funds to ensure that the national tranquilliser advice centre can continue operating;

(2) what help or advice has been given to the national tranquilliser advice centre by his Department towards preventing its closure through lack of funds.

Mr. Freeman: The Department awarded a grant of £10,000 to TRANX (UK) Ltd. in 1988-89 to enable the organisation to balance its books in that year. The organisation was advised that it should collaborate closely with local statutory authorities in order to secure adequate funds for the future. In the current financial year representatives of TRANX (UK) Ltd. met departmental officials who advised them that central funding was unlikely to be available in their existing circumstances. To assist TRANX, officials therefore suggested that it should provide details of its budget expectations and how it would set priorities for the services it offers in line with the funding likely to be available. Following this reappraisal by TRANX, the Department would consider whether there was any advice or help which it could offer.

When the North West Thames regional health authority and the London borough grants unit decided not to continue to support TRANX the Department wrote in December explaining that because the local statutory authorities are no longer prepared to fund local elements of the service TRANX (UK) Ltd. provides and given the constraints on central funds the Department is unable to offer the organisation any further grant aid.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will summarise the nature of the new provision for drug misusers that has been made by the regional health authorities with the near £15 million provided by his Department; and approximately what proportion of this provision is specifically aimed at those addicted to tranquillisers.

Mr. Freeman: Regions are due to report in detail on the use made of the £14·793 million allocated in 1989-90 specifically for the development of drug misuse services in July 1990. We will be asking regions for full details of developments funded from these earmarked allocations which will include information on services for people dependent on tranquillisers.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what assessment he has made of the spread of the service provided by the national tranquilliser advice centre for tranquilliser addicts;

(2) what information he has been given by the national tranquilliser advice centre about the national service it provides; and what information he has on the proportion of the inquiries it receives from people living in areas which are not part of the North West Thames region.

Mr. Freeman: Direct client services of the kind TRANX (UK) Ltd. offers are best provided locally rather than nationally. Local statutory authorities are best placed to decide which services are worthy of support and fit in with their overall plans. TRANX (UK) Ltd. has provided the Department with details of the national service it offers. This consists of telephone counselling, written information about tranquillisers and advice on how to withdraw from them, together with a newsletter.

Figures from TRANX (UK) Ltd's annual report for 1988 (the most recent available) show that 44 per cent. of inquiries in England were from areas not covered by the catchment areas of the four Thames regions. The breakdown of inquiries from the North West Thames area is not separately available.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what efforts his Department has made to establish the number of people at risk of addiction through taking benzodiazepine tranquillisers on a long term basis.

Mr. Freeman: It is unlikely that it would be possible to obtain accurate statistical data on those dependent on benzodiazepines. What is important is to encourage careful prescribing of benzodiazepines, to promote alternatives to their use and to provide services for those experiencing problems as a result of their dependence: the right hon. Member will be aware of the initiatives the Government are taking in this respect.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on the number of tranquilliser advice centres, similar to the national tranquilliser advice centre, operating throughout the United Kingdom and on their source of funding.

Mr. Freeman: We are aware of a number of centres in various parts of England which provide advice for those working with those dependent on tranquillisers. We are also aware of many local services for this group. The provision and funding of these local direct client services is the responsibility of the local statutory authorities. We are funding the National Association for Mental Health (MIND) to produce a national directory of services for this group. Up to £81,000 has been made available for the work which is spread over three financial years starting in 1988-89.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what investigation there has been of the type of support and advice that best enables those addicted to tranquillisers to overcome their addiction.

Mr. Freeman: Studies have shown that in other fields of dependence face-to-face counselling and contact with a local treatment service improve the likely prognosis compared with other treatment approaches. The available evidence is that this also applies to tranquillisers.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the estimated number of people dependent on the benzodiazepine tranquillisers; and how the numbers have changed in the last 10 years.

Mr. Freeman: Detailed information is not held centrally, but it is known that in recent years the increase in the number of local agencies which have been established partly as a result of Government initiatives, has resulted in a far greater number of people coming forward for help in withdrawing from their prescribed drugs.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the most recent figure for the annual rate of prescription of benzodiazepine tranquillisers; and which pharmaceutical companies currently supply the National Health Service.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The latest estimate of the number of prescriptions for benzodiazepines dispensed by community pharmacists in Great Britain is 23·2 million in 1988. Under the selected list scheme prescriptions for most benzodiazepine sedatives and tranquillisers must be written generically. It is not possible to produce a comprehensive list of pharmaceutical companies whose products are being supplied. However some benzodiazepines may be prescribed at NHS expense using the brand name for example for intravenous use. The manufacturers concerned are

C. P. Pharmaceuticals Ltd.
Farmitalia Carlo Erba Ltd.
Kabi-Vitrum Ltd.
Roche Products Ltd.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what response has been given to the pharmaceutical company Roche which has indicated that it would contribute towards the organisational costs of the national tranquilliser advice centre if his Department did likewise.

Mr. Freeman: My noble Friend Lady Hooper has written to Roche, informing it of the decision by North West Thames regional health authority and London borough grants unit and the Department of Health that no further funding can be awarded to TRANX (UK) Ltd.

Mental Hospitals

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients were admitted to mental illness and mental handicap hospitals under compulsory powers; how many were resident in such hospitals when detained, excluding special hospitals; and what percentage of total admissions and residents they constituted, at the latest available date.

Mr. Freeman: The most recent complete information is for 1986. During that year there were 237,311 admissions, of which 16,193 (6·8 per cent.) were formal admissions under compulsory powers, to National Health Service mental handicap and mental illness hospitals and units in England. It is estimated that 9,900 patients, already admitted as informal, were subsequently detained as formal patients and 7,600 formal patients had a change of legal status although remaining detained. On 31 December 1986 there was a total of 93,442 patients resident in these hospitals and units, of whom 4,602 (or 4·9 per cent.) were formally detained patients.

Welfare Milk

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the proportion of total redeemed token value in the welfare milk scheme submitted by roundsmen in each year since 1979 in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Information is not available in the form requested.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are his proposals for apportioning revenue loss costs between farmers, dairies and distributors with respect to his proposed welfare milk scheme discount; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The regulations laid on 5 January enable the dairy trade, on a voluntary basis, to accept tokens for the supply of liquid welfare milk and pass them up through the trade so that the cost of the price reduction can be shared equitably. The dairy trade has well-established mechanisms and procedures for deciding prices and discounts between milk marketing boards and distributors.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what negotiations have taken place with the milk trade and its constituent companies concerning proposals for changes to the welfare milk scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Before negotiations commenced we wrote to all suppliers explaining that as part of the Government's initiative to see whether better value for money could be obtained the cost of purchasing liquid welfare milk was to be examined. Detailed and extensive negotiations subsequently took place over a period of eight months involving over 40 separate companies and six major supermarket chains. Discussions were held with representatives from all sectors of the dairy trade including the dairy trade federations, the National Dairyman's Association and the milk marketing boards. Meetings were held with representatives of the British Retail Association, the National Farmers Union and the National Fedration of Self Employed and Small businesses. Following the decision to introduce a revised pricing structure, we have written to all suppliers explaining the decision together with details of the measures that we have introduced to enable the cost of the price reduction to be shared equitably throughout the trade.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations have been received by his Department with respect to current proposals to change funding arrangements for the welfare milk scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Following the announcement of the decision to implement a revised price structure for the supply of liquid welfare milk we have received representations from the English Dairy Trade Federation and the National Dairyman's Association. In response my noble Friend Baroness Hooper met with officers and members of the English and Scottish dairy trade federations on 9 January to hear the trade's views and make arrangements to discuss implementation of the new structure.

Hepatitis C

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether imported blood products are tested for hepatitis C; and what are the differences in testing procedures between imported blood products and fresh blood donations from British resident donors.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 10 January 1990]: As far as we are aware, at present there is no routine testing for hepatitis C carried out by the home authorities in any country from which blood products are imported to the UK. Such tests as are available are still being developed and evaluated.

It is a matter for the authorities in each country to decide on appropriate screening procedures for blood. These may vary according to the prevalence of certain infectious agents in the country of origin. The Department keeps testing procedures under review and recommends the introduction of new tests in the light of scientific and other developments.

Blood or plasma collected overseas for processing into blood products which are to be imported into the United Kingdom under United Kingdom product licence is subjected to such screening tests as are laid down by the home authority, as well as any that are required by our licensing authority—the Medicines Control Agency.

SCOTLAND

Training

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how employment training and YTS will be administered after the Scottish Enterprise and the Highlands and Islands Enterprise proposals are implemented.

Mr. Lang: Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise will contract with local enterprise companies for the provision of all Government training in their respective areas.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he intends to promote any measures to increase the take-up of YTS and employment training places in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I have no present plans for further measures specifically designed to increase uptake of employment training and youth training. However, I fully expect that the creation of local enterprise companies and the opportunities that they will have for flexibility in the provision of training will lead to more attractive locally-oriented training arrangements for both adults and young people that are closely geared to their needs and those of local employers.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report an analysis of training expenditure in Scotland, consistent with page 40 of "Public Expenditure to 1991-92: A Commentary on the Scotland Programme", indicating for the years 1983-84 to 1991-92 (a) public expenditure in Scotland on training, (b) the public expenditure programme in which it was included for that year, (c) the Vote on which it was taken for that year and (d) the impact of the definitional and classification changes upon the annual totals of public expenditure on the Scotland programme, as shown in table 16.1 of Cm. 616 and in the table appended to the Secretary of State's statement to the House on 6 December, Official Report, columns 330-33.

Mr. Lang: It is not possible to provide details of spending on training only. Spending in Scotland by the Manpower Services Commission, the Training Commission and the Training Agency cannot be broken down in sufficient detail to distinguish fully spending on training from spending by these bodies on other employment-related programmes such as the employment rehabilitation service and the enterprise allowance scheme. The figures given in the table therefore represent total expenditure in Scotland by these bodies, which were funded by the Secretary of State for Scotland:

Year	(a) Spending in Scotland by Manpower Services Commission, Training Commission and Training Agency £ million	(b) Public expenditure programme	(c) Class and Vote
1983-84	119 outturn	4	Class XV Vote 4
1984-85	127 outturn	4	Class XV Vote 4
1985-86	134 outturn	4	Class XV Vote 4
1986-87	162 outturn	4	Class XVI Vote 4
1987-88	164 outturn	4	Class XVI Vote 4
1988-89	205 outturn	4	Class XVI Vote 4
1989-90	277 planned expenditure	4	Class XVI Vote 4
1990-91	267 planned expenditure	4	Class XVI Vote 4
1991-92	not yet available	15	Class XVI (Vote not yet available)

(d) Since this expenditure has been in programme 4 definitional and classification changes affecting it have had no impact on the Scotland programme.

Steel

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of employment in steel and steel-related industries in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: The total number of employees in steel and steel-related industries in Scotland in 1989 was estimated at 7,400 using data from the Industry Department for Scotland's regional data system.

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of employment in steel and steel-related industry in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: I refer the hon. Member to my reply given on 16 January to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Govan (Mr. Sillars).

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of employment in steel and steel-related industries in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: I refer the hon. Member to my reply given on 16 January to the hon. Member for Govan.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of employment in steel and steel-related industry in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: I refer the hon. Member to my reply given on 16 January to the hon. Member for Govan.

Community Charge

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has had from local authorities in Scotland about the collection of poll tax; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend has received a number of representations from local authorities about different aspects of the community charge.

Dangerous Weapons

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if there have been any recent alterations to the rules governing the holding of potentially dangerous weapons within Scottish prisons.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No. The Prison Rules (Scotland) do not authorise the holding of potentially dangerous weapons and there is no reason to alter them.

Mr. Gordon Jackson

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if weapons were involved in the authorised training processes carried out within the Scottish prison service by Mr. Gordon Jackson.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Mr. Jackson was authorised to train teams in negotiating procedures. Weapons are not authorised or necessary for such training.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland under what authority the former governor of Glenochil prison, Mr. Gordon Jackson, established a special squad from the prison service to be trained to SAS standards; and what was the basis for selection.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: A special squad from the prison service was not established and trained to SAS standards.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the special training initiated by governor Gordon Jackson at Glenochil has continued following his departure.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There is no evidence to suggest that governor Gordon Jackson initiated any special training at Glenochil and no such training has been introduced since his departure.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement as to why Gordon

Jackson, governor of Glenochil prison, kept CS gas cartridges and ammunition at the gaol; and what was his policy on the keeping of similar supplies at other prisons.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Mr. Jackson pled guilty to being in unauthorised possession of CS cartridges and ammunition at Alloa sheriff court on 1 December 1989. The Prison Rules (Scotland) do not authorise the possession or use of these items and no change to this position is considered necessary.

Drought Orders

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list by (a) water company and (b) location those areas where drought orders still remain in force.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Water supply in Scotland is the responsibility of the regional and islands councils. No drought orders are in force at the present time.

Drinking Water

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the percentage by volume of drinking water in Scotland that is treated by the addition of (a) chlorine and (b) ozone.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Over 99 per cent. of drinking water in Scotland is disinfected by chlorination. Of the remainder, broadly equal proportions are disinfected by either ozone or ultraviolet radiation.

Planting of Evidence

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many cases of alleged planting of evidence were made in 1989 against the police in Scotland; and how many of these resulted in prosecutions.

Mr. Rifkind: I understand from inquiries made of chief constables that in 1989 five cases of alleged planting of evidence involving the police in Scotland were reported to the procurator fiscal. No proceedings were taken in three cases; the remaining two are still under consideration by the procurator fiscal.

Two Homes Allowance

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the amount of the two homes allowance payable by the Scottish Education Department in addition to students who own or rent property which they cannot reasonably be expected to give up on moving to another area for educational purposes, in each of the last five academic years including 1989-90.

Mr. Lang: The information requested is as follows:

Academic Year	£
1985-86	410
1986-87	455
1987-88	473
1988-89	490
1989-90	515

Museum of Scotland

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the location of the planned Museum of Scotland.

Mr. Lang: I am delighted to announce that the new Museum of Scotland will be located in Edinburgh, on the vacant site adjacent to the Royal Museum of Scotland in Chambers street, and to confirm the Government's agreement to fund the development.

The Museum of Scotland will provide a worthy setting for the outstanding Scottish collections of the National Museums of Scotland. The need for new accommodation in which to display the nation's heritage has been acknowledged for many years. The project was given fresh impetus in 1985 with the formation of the National Museums of Scotland. The board of trustees identified the provision of a new museum as their prime objective and last year submitted to the Secretary of State a detailed assessment of their requirements and a comprehensive investment appraisal of optional locations for the development. This clearly demonstrated that the need for the new museum was more pressing than ever, and that the Chambers street site was the most appropriate and cost-effective location.

On the basis of the investment appraisal, we have allocated resources for the new building within our recent public expenditure settlement, and I am pleased to confirm that these resources will now be made available to the National Museums' board of trustees.

The Government's decision to invest in this project reflects the importance that we attach to the care and display of our heritage, and to expanding the opportunities for the people of Scotland and for visitors to enjoy and learn from the wealth of material held by the museums.

I congratulate Lord Bute and his fellow trustees and the director Dr. Anderson and his staff on their success in securing a new home for Scotland's heritage.

Competitive Tendering

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what uses are being made by health boards of the moneys released from competitive tendering initiatives; and if he will make a statement.

Window Replacement

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the amounts spent by the Scottish Special Housing Association on window replacement programmes for its housing stock in each year since 1979; and if he will also list the amounts currently being spent and planned to be spent on window replacement programmes by Scottish Homes.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 12 January 1990]: Such information is not held by the Scottish Development Department. The hon. Member may wish to write directly to Scottish Homes, which may be able to provide information on past expenditure by the Scottish Special Housing Association and its own expenditure programmes on window replacement.

Mentally Ill People

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what extra resources will be made available for the provision of community care for the mentally ill;

(2) what plans he has to earmark financial resources for the care of the mentally ill.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 15 January 1990]: The recently published White Paper "Caring for People" (Cmd. 849) states that local authorities will receive adequate resources to enable them to discharge their new responsibilities. These extend to the provision of care and support for persons with mental illness in the community. Local authorities will have transferred to them resources that the Government would otherwise have used to finance residential care through social security payments to people in residential and nursing homes.

Local authorities are generally free to determine the use of the resources available to them for their various responsibilities. The White Paper announced that there will be a specific grant to help accelerate the development of community-based services for persons with mental illness.

Rural Legal Partnerships

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will conduct a survey into the financial viability of small legal partnerships in rural areas.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 15 January 1990]: I have no plans to do so.

Legal Aid

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to review the levels of legal aid fees in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 15 January 1990]: Legal aid fees in Scotland are set after consultation with the Law Society of Scotland and the Faculty of Advocates. The next consultations will begin soon.

Community Water Charge

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has regarding the community water charge set in each region and islands council area for 1989-90.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 15 January 1990]: Information on water charges is available in the booklet "Water Charges in Scotland—The New Arrangements" published by the Scottish Office in April 1989, copies of which are available in the Library. The community water charges set in each region and islands council area for 1989-90 are set out in the table:

Regional/Islands Council	Community Water Charge £/person
Borders	31·00
Central	15·00
Dumfries and Galloway	28·00
Fife	18·00
Grampian	30·00
Highland	20·00
Lothian	18·00
Strathclyde	19·00
Tayside	21·00
Orkney	26·00
Shetland	6·78
Western Isles	34·00

Homelessness

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many single homeless people he estimates there are currently in Scotland under the age of 25 years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 15 January 1990]: The Scottish Development Department does not make such estimates.

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the figures for the number of single homeless people in Scotland for each year from 1979 to 1989.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 15 January 1990]: This information is not collected centrally.

CIVIL SERVICE

Government Documents

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what measures have been taken to increase the safety of Government documents being transported by Ministers in Great Britain following the recent theft from the car of the hon. Member for Peterborough (Dr. Mawhinney).

Mr. Luce: I am satisfied that the measures which are already in place for the protection of Government documents are sufficient to ensure their safety.

Staff Relations

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service if he will take steps to improve staff relations in the Civil Service.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 16 January 1990]: The Government have always attached importance to good staff relations in the Civil Service. The next steps initiative is intended, amongst other things, to increase motivation and satisfaction by releasing staff talents to provide a better service to the public. In some cases group performance bonuses can be earned. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer and I have both paid public tribute to the quality and commitment we see in staff in the Civil Service. As I made clear in my speech at a RIPA seminar last year the Government care greatly about the men and women of the Civil Service and the way they deliver Government services.

THE ARTS

Opera

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he has any plans to increase funding for the provision for opera facilities in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Luce: The funding of opera is a matter for the Arts Council. However, I am pleased to say that, as a result of the increase in the Arts Council's grant which I announced in November, companies will receive significant increases in their grant. Among these, Welsh National Opera will receive an 8 per cent. increase from the Arts Council of Great Britain, and a 10·1 per cent. rise from the Welsh Arts Council taking its total grant to £4·8 million in 1990-91.

Arts for Labour

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he will meet representatives of Arts for Labour to discuss the allocation of resources, both national and regional.

Mr. Luce: I have no plans to do so.

National Railway Museum

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will take steps to save the unique double turntable installation at the national railway museum in York during works involving the replacement of the roof at the museum; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: The proposed changes at the national railway museum at York are a matter for the director and the trustees of the science museum. I understand that they have formulated their proposals for the new roof and a single turntable after careful and extensive consultation. The north engine shed has a long history of alteration and the museum has never sought to interpret the main hall or any part of it as a former locomotive depot.

Arts Funding

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he next plans to discuss arts funding and tax deductibility.

Mr. Luce: I keep these matters under general review.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Friendly Societies

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he is now ready to publish a Green Paper on his proposals for the future legislative regime for friendly societies.

Mr. Major: I have today laid before Parliament a paper entitled "Friendly Societies: A New Framework". This Green Paper sets out the Government's proposals for a new legislative framework for friendly societies. The main proposals are to give societies wider powers to offer a more comprehensive and competitive range of services through subsidiary companies. The main new powers would be to allow establishment and management of unit trust schemes and personal equity plans; to act as agents of other insurers (life or general business); to give advice on insurance; to provide loans; and to reinsure other friendly societies' business.

This range of powers was requested by the Friendly Societies Liaison Committee in its submission to the Economic Secretary in 1988 and I have decided to accept its case in full.

The proposals include legislation to provide societies with a cheap and simple route to incorporation as a special category of body under the Industrial and Provident Societies Acts. This will enable societies to achieve the legal status which is necessary to own subsidiaries and hence to offer services other than long-term insurance business, without losing their special identity as friendly societies.

The paper also proposes that the regulatory system for friendly societies should be updated to give improved investor protection. In particular, I propose that a solvency requirement should be extended to all friendly societies, that the chief registrar should be given enhanced powers to deal with moribund societies, and that the requirements for societies' systems of accounts and control should be updated to bring them into line with other financial institutions. I also propose that all societies should be required to join a statutory investor protection scheme and that a new ombudsman scheme should be established to deal with members' complaints.

I believe that the Green Paper will establish a satisfactory constitutional and legislative framework for societies, which will allow for their continued development over the coming years. I hope that there will be support for these proposals from both sides of the House.

Exports

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what exports per capita were in each of the OECD countries, in the latest year for which figures are available;

(2) what percentage of gross domestic product exports amounted to in each of the OECD countries, in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Ryder: The data for exports per capita and exports as a percentage share of gross domestic product in each of the OECD countries for 1988 are shown in the table:

	Exports of goods per capita US $	Exports of goods as a percentage of gross domestic product
United Kingdom	2,539	17·8

Public Expenditure

Mr. Radice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report an analysis, comparable with Table 2.4 of Financial Statistics, of the public expenditure classification changes contained in table 1A.1 of the Autumn Statement 1989, Cm 879.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The classification changes contained in table 1A.1 of the Autumn Statement include the following:

1. Statutory sick pay and statutory maternity pay are now included in the planning total;
2. Recipts of fines and fixed penalties are now treated as revenue and outside the planning total;
3. Expenditure on police, education and fire services in Northern Ireland is now treated as central Government's own expenditure. Previously this was treated as local authority expenditure;
4. Expenditure by the Training Agency on the technical and vocational educational initiative (TVEI) and work-related further education (WRFE) formerly treated as central Government's own expenditure, is now included in support for local authorities;
5. Expenditure of National Rivers Authority on land drainage financed by levies on local authorities is now included in central Government's own expenditure. Equivalent expenditure was previously included in local authority expenditure as payments to water authorities;
6. Receipts from visa fees are now treated as revenue and outside the planning total;
7. Receipts of OFTEL and OFGAS are now treated as revenue and outside the planning total.

Their contributions to the aggregate classification change shown in table 1A.1 are as follows.

	1990-91	1991-92
Central Government's own expenditure
Statutory Sick Pay/Statutory Maternity Pay	1,259	1,311
Fines and Fixed Penalties	275	291

	1990-91	1991-92
Northern Ireland switch from local authority	791	831
TVEI and WRFE	−243	−248
NRA land drainage	155	160
Visas	32	33
OFTEL and OFGAS	7	7
Others	3	2
Total	2,279	2,387
Public Corporations
Local authority airport and bus companies	−86	−70
Total	−86	−70

A similar analysis covering the period from 1984-85 to 1991-92 will be included in the 1990 public expenditure White Paper.

Mr. Radice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report tables showing, for the latest years now available, identifiable public expenditure by function in England, Scotland, Wales, Northern Ireland and the United Kingdom expressed (a) in cash terms, (b) as an index, United Kingdom total identifiable public expenditure = 100, (c) as an amount per capita and (d) as an amount per capita expressed as an index, United Kingdom amount per capita = 100.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Swindon (Mr. Coombs) on 19 December 1989 at columns 179-91.

EEC Payments

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what payments from the European Economic Communities due in the calendar year 1989 have yet to be made; when such payments are expected; and if he will state the reasons for any delay.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 15 January 1990]: As far as I am aware, all of the payments which the United Kingdom was due to receive in 1989 were made.

Capital Investment

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the latest trends on capital investment by British industry.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 15 January 1990]: Figures of manufacturing investment up to the third quarter of 1989 are shown at table 1 of the press release CSO(89)147 (Manufacturers' Investment Intentions for 1990 and 1991) issued on 20 December 1989. That release also contains projections of future investment by manufacturers. For non-manufacturing industries, comparable figures to the third quarter 1989 are given in table 3 of the Central Statistical Office Business Bulletin Issue 16/89. Projections of future investment for these industries are not available. Copies of both documents are available in the Library.

City of London (Foreign Earnings)

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what have been the foreign earnings of the City of London in (a) insurance, (b) banking, (net), (c) commodity trading, (d) brokerage, (e) investment trusts, (f) pension funds, (g) unit trusts, (h) leasing, (i) securities dealer and (j) in total in (i) 1970, (ii) 1979, (iii) 1987, (iv) 1988 and (v) 1989.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 15 January 1990]: Information up to and including 1988 is given in the published annual Pink Books on the United Kingdom balance of payments and from the CSO Databank, both of which are available in the Library. Information for 1989 will be published later this year.

VAT

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the current rates of value-added tax on (a) electricity and (b) gas in each European Community country; and whether it is intended to maintain a zero rate in the United Kingdom for fuels after 1992.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 15 January 1990]: Based on the latest available information the current rates are as follows:

Per cent.

Country	Gas	Electricity
Belgium	17	17
Denmark	22	22
France	5·5	5·5
Germany	14	14
Greece	[2]—	[2]—
Ireland	10	5
Italy	9	9
Luxembourg	6	6
Netherlands	18·5	18·5
Portugal	8 (6)	[1]8 (6)
Spain	12	12

[2] Information not available.

To comply with the European Court of Justice ruling of 21 June 1988, VAT at the standard rate will apply in the United Kingdom to fuel and power supplied to businesses from 1 July 1990.

In the context of the Commission's indirect tax proposals for the single market, the Government have repeatedly made it clear that they intend to maintain the zero rate of VAT for domestic fuel and power. As changes to EC law require unanimous agreement, the United Kingdom's position is safeguarded.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Consumer Panel

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the names of individuals that have been nominated to sit on his consumer panel, giving the name of the nominating organisation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: I have not yet written to all the nominees. When I have done so, it is my intention to announce publicly the names of the members of the consumer panel and details of its meetings. I will send the hon. Member the information he has requested at that time.

Cattle Auctions

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cattle auction markets are (a) licensed and (b) unlicensed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: All cattle auction markets must be licensed under the provisions of article 17 of the Brucellosis (England and Wales) Order 1984.

Organic Extensification

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he plans to introduce an organic extensification option; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: I shall shortly be issuing a consultation document outlining a possible scheme under which grant aid would be available to those farmers wishing to convert from conventional to organic production.

Organic Produce

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what plans he has to encourage further the practice of organic farming;

(2) what steps he proposes to take to lessen dependence on imports to satisfy consumer demand for organic produce.

Mr. Curry: It is for those who produce, process or market organic produce to respond to the growing demand for organic foods and to lessen our dependence on imported supplies. However, my Department has already taken a number of steps to encourage this process while additional proposals are current under consideration.

Of particular significance has been the setting up of the United Kingdom register of organic food standards (UKROFS) which in May 1989 launched production and processing standards for organic produce and an independent certification and inspection system. We understand that the UKROFS board has now reached an advanced stage in its discussions on registration with the organic sector bodies through which it is expected the large majority of registrations will be effected. Once the board has satisfied itself on the inspection and certification arrangements to be operated by these bodies, consumers will be able with confidence to purchase British organic produce backed by the UKROFS standards and monitoring provisions.

Other steps being taken, or under consideration, by the Government include the funding of a comprehensive economic survey of organic farming; the provision of R and D and of specialised ADAS advice; the help for conversion available through the fallow option of the set-aside scheme; and the benefits available through the farm and conservation grant scheme and from assistance towards establishing co-operatives. In addition, we are proposing shortly to issue a consultation document on an organic conversion option under the EC extensification scheme.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he proposes to take to prevent the sale of produce inaccurately labelled as organic.

Mr. Maclean: It is already an offence under the Food Act 1984 to apply a false or misleading description to food. In proposed EC regulation, currently under consideration, there are specific provisions to prevent the sale of produce labelled as organic but which does not conform to specified standards.

Farm Woodland Scheme

Sir Jim Spicer: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will accept further applications from those who have already made a first application under the farm woodland scheme to cover a further three-year period.

Mr. Curry: Initially, the rules of the farm woodland scheme allowed only one application to be accepted for any one agricultural unit or applicant. Last August, in the light of experience, we changed the rules so that farmers with more than one agricultural unit could make a separate application for each of them.

The rule limiting farmers to one application per agricultural unit remains in force to minimise administrative work and to encourage farmers to formulate a firm three-year planting plan at the outset. However, I am keeping it under review, along with the other rules, in the light of operational experience and the level of uptake under the scheme.

At the end of the initial three-year experimental period in September 1991 all aspects of the scheme will, of course, be reviewed to help establish what arrangements should apply thereafter.

Sir Jim Spicer: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the hectarage applied for during the first three years of the farm woodland scheme; and how much under the target figure this is.

Mr. Curry: In the first 14 months of the farm woodland scheme applications to plant 8,938 hectares of trees throughout the United Kingdom were received. This compares with the target for applications in the first experimental three-year period of 36,000 hectares.

Polychlorinated Biphenyls

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has made an assessment of polychlorinated biphenyl levels in all parts of fish; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Ministry scientists regularly measure the concentrations of PCBs in both edible and non-edible parts of fish in English and Welsh waters as part of an extensive programme on the quality of fish and shellfish. The results are published in the directorate of fisheries research's aquatic environment monitoring report series. The most recent report is AEMR 16, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Microwave Ovens

Ms. Short: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether there is any evidence of a risk to health in heating milk in microwave ovens; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Microwaving is simply one method of heating food. I am not aware of any good evidence that changes in food brought about by microwave heating would not also be brought about by other methods producing equivalent amounts of heat.

I understand that the account of the research carried out at the University of Vienna and reported in The Lancet of 9 December was very incomplete. It failed to mention that a very small milk sample was microwaved at full power in a sealed tube to an unknown temperature (probably well in excess of 100 deg. C) until it was brown. This heat treatment was far more severe than that received by other samples with which it was compared and bears no relation whatever to the way consumers would heat milk in the kitchen.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the nature and scope of his new research programme into the vertical tranmissibility of bovine spongiform encephalopathy.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him on 18 December 1989 at col. 30.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if the research work into bovine spongiform encephalopathy as announced by him on 9 January, will be published in full as recommended by the Tyrrell report.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 12 January 1990]: I shall adhere to MAFF's general policy and publicise the results of research which we fund.

Enzymes

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the use of gels containing enzymes as binding agents in meat products.

Mr. Maclean: Meat products offered for sale have to comply with the provisions of the Food Act 1984, the Food Labelling Regulations 1984 and the Meat Products and Spreadable Fish Products Regulations 1984. Meat products made using the techniques mentioned would have to be carefully labelled so as to ensure that consumers are adequately informed of their true nature and means of production.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to ban the use of vegetable enzymes as meat tenderisers.

Mr. Maclean: The continued use of vegetable enzymes to tenderise meat will be subject to single market rules yet to be determined. However during the course of the Adjournment debate on 7 November 1989, I announced the Government's decision not to seek provision for the continued use of the pre-slaughter injection of cattle with the enzyme papain when Community proposals are discussed.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will require meat subjected to treatment with the vegetable enzyme papain to be labelled in such a manner that the use of this enzyme is clear to prospective consumers.

Mr. Maclean: The Food Labelling Regulations 1984 already require that the name used for any meat which has been treated with proteolytic enzymes or which is derived from an animal that has been so treated shall include or be accompanied by the word "tenderised".

Fish Disease

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what surveys have been conducted by his Department to establish the incidence of (a) dab, (b) flounder, (c) cod, (d) herring and (e) plaice caught in water around Britain which show evidence of disease.

Mr. Curry: Since 1980 my Department, together with the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland, has conducted both annual and ad hoc surveys to establish the prevalence rates of diseases in commercial fish species, including dab, flounder, plaice, cod and herring in water around Britain.

My Department has played a key role in establishing standardised sampling and disease recording methods with other European countries and collaborates with these countries in fish disease survey programmes.

Simplesse

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether his Department has discussed the product Simplesse with Monsanto.

Mr. Maclean: Yes. Representatives of Nutrasweet, a Monsanto subsidiary, have discussed the product with officials of my Ministry and the Department of Health. It is a product made from common food ingredients using existing food production methods and has been considered by the advisory committee on novel foods and processes. The likely impact on the diet of this and similar products is under consideration.

Industrial Pollution (North Sea)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from consumers about the effect on fish in the North sea of industrial pollution and waste disposal; and what response he has made.

Mr. Curry: I receive a number of inquiries from members of the public about the safety of North sea fish for human consumption.

The waste disposal operations directly licensed by my Department are very carefully assessed to avoid adverse effects on marine life either in the short or long term. My Department carefully monitors the quality of the marine environment both round disposal sites and more generally and this includes an extensive programme of monitoring fish.

As a consequence, I am able to assure correspondents that the health of the North sea is good, that fish offered for sale from British waters are not adversely affected by pollution, that they fully comply with relevant public health standards and that they are quite safe to eat.

Fish Liver Oils

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is known by his Department about the extent of polychlorinated biphenyl contamination of fish liver oils; and what tests are, or have been, carried out on fish liver oil products.

Mr. Maclean: Results of surveillance of fish liver oil products for the presence of polychlorobiphenyls (PCBs) have been published in food surveillance papers Nos. 13 and 16, copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

Wastes

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for South Shields, 14 December, Official Report, column 800, whether the replies received from (a) Sweden, (b) Denmark, (c) the Netherlands, (d) Germany and (e) Norway, were in support of his proposals to issue a licence to dump the relevant wastes in the North sea.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 11 January 1990]: Sweden, Denmark and Norway objected to each of the three proposals, the Netherlands objected to two and the Federal Republic of Germany raised no specific objections.

The other seven countries of the Oslo convention did not comment, an indication that they were content with our submissions.

A full response has been sent to each country which raised objections, clarifying misunderstandings which appear to underlie the comments.

In response to concerns that heavy metals could cause harm we have confirmed that there are no detectable heavy metals in the wastes. We have explained that the biochemical oxygen demand would be far too insignificant to have any effect in the sea and that standard works of reference show that the trace level of biodegradable phenol in one waste will not taint fish.

As regards monitoring, we have reminded the countries concerned that these specific wastes are rapidly neutralised in the sea and that their presence in the water is undetectable very shortly after release. We have described our fish and shellfish monitoring programme which shows that fish are not affected by the disposals.

Pesticides

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food further to his answer of 11 December to the hon. Member for South Shields, Official Report, columns 512-16, if he will list the active ingredients which have had their reviews concluded by the ACP according to the categories (a) approval withdrawn, (b) use restricted and (c) use continues unchanged following their review; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 11 January 1990]: The information requested is as follows:

(a) Approvals Withdrawn
- Aldrin
- Binapacryl
- Bitertanol
- Captafol (Phased withdrawal)

It should be noted that (i) Alachlor, which appeared under "Reviews concluded by the ACP" in my answer of 11 December to the hon. Member should in fact have been listed under "Reviews currently in progress"; (ii) Sulphonyl Ureas should have been listed under "Reviews completed by the ACP" and (iii) the partial review of Daminozide was completed in December 1989 and has therefore been included in the list.

EMPLOYMENT

Tourism

13. Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his revised estimate for the numbers and value of overseas visitors to the United Kingdom for 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: A total of 14·9 million overseas visitors are estimated to have come to the United Kingdom in the first 10 months of 1989, spending about £5·8 billion.

Both the number of visitors and their total expenditure were 9 per cent. more than in the same period last year. The estimate for the whole of 1989 will be published on 7 March.

Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what measures he has taken to assist the tourist industry since the ending of section 4 grants.

Mr. Nicholls: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Elmet (Mr. Batiste) on 28 November 1989, Official Report, column 212, regarding my Department's review of tourism policy.

Employment Training

15. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of employment training places in the north-west are unfilled.

Mr. Nicholls: At 15 December 1989 about 21 per cent. of employment training places in the Training Agency's north-west region were unfilled.

31. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what recent representations he has received about employment training.

Mr. Nicholls: My Department receives a wide range of representations, from both individuals and organisations about employment training, all of which receive careful consideration.

50. Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he expects to publish his Department's survey into the overall performance of the employment training scheme.

Mr. Nicholls: The first results from the 100 per cent. follow-up survey of employment training leavers have already been made public. These show that 58 per cent. of trainees completing their agreed training went into jobs or self-employment or further full-time education or training.

70. Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on his Department's 100 per cent. follow-up survey of employment training.

Mr. Nicholls: The latest results from the 100 per cent. follow-up survey of employment training leavers show that 58 per cent. of trainees completing their agreed training went into jobs or self-employment or further full-time training or education. This is clear evidence that the programme is playing a major role in helping unemployed people to get back into work.

Footwear and Textiles

16. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on job losses in the footwear and textile industries.

Mr. Eggar: As the hon. Member knows, owing to competitive pressures there have been some job losses in the footwear and textile industries. I refer him to the reply given by my hon. Friend on 8 January, Official Report, column 491.

Minimum Wages

17. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how he intends to increase the number of prosecutions for breaches of minimum wage legislation.

Mr. Nicholls: The policy of the wages inspectorate under all Governments has been to seek compliance with wages council regulations by advice and persuasion and to prosecute ones where an offence is deliberate or repeated and the evidence is considered adequate. There are no plans to change this policy.

43. Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he is taking to increase minimum wage levels.

Mr. Nicholls: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Members for Birmingham, Erdington (Mr. Corbett), for Pontefract and Castleford (Mr. Lofthouse) and for Manchester, Blackley (Mr. Eastham) on 5 December 1989, Official Report, columns 202-3.

EC Ministers

18. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he last met his European Community counterparts; and what was discussed.

Mr. Howard: My predecessor last met his European Community counterparts on 30 November 1989, at the meeting of the Labour and Social Affairs Council. The outcome of that meeting was reported in the Official Report of 19 December 1989, columns 144-45.

Disabled People

19. Mr. McAvoy : To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how he intends to raise the number of disabled persons in the work force.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Erdington (Mr. Corbett).

41. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the appropriateness of anti-discrimination legislation to protect disabled persons within the labour market.

Mr. Eggar: The Government's preferred option for improving opportunities for people with disabilities in the labour market is to educate, persuade and assist employers to adopt constructive policies and practices. The appropriateness of anti-discrimination legislation is being examined in the Employment Department's current review of its services for people with disabilities. The conclusions of the review will be published in a consultative document soon.

Industrial Disputes

20. Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will estimate how many working days have been lost in disputes for a shorter working week in the last 12 months.

Mr. Nicholls: In the 12-month period ending October 1989, 15,000 working days were lost through disputes about basic working hours.

Training and Enterprise Councils

21. Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how his Department intends to avoid preferential funding by TEC members in organisations in which they may have an interest.

Mr. Howard: Every TEC's memorandum and articles will contain a clause requiring a director to refrain from voting on any matter in which he has an interest. TECs' plans will be scrutinised to ensure they reflect market needs and they will contract on a competitive basis for training and enterprise services. Furthermore, a TEC will publish an annual report of its performance against its plan.

22. Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what progress is being made with the establishment of training and enterprise councils.

Mr. Howard: I have been very encouraged by the excellent response from employers throughout the country since we issued the invitation to form training and enterprise councils. Applications for development funding from over 50 groups of senior employers from around the country have been approved. A table listing the areas from which we have had applications and indicating their current status has been placed in the Library.

61. Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what further applications have been received to set up training and enterprise councils; and if he will make a statement.

63. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on recent progress with the training and enterprise council programme.

78. Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the progress of training and enterprise councils.

Mr. Eggar: I have been very encouraged by the excellent response from employers throughout the country since we issued the invitation to form training and enterprise councils. Applications for development funding from over 50 groups of senior employers from around the country have been approved. The table lists the areas from which we have had applications and indicates their status.

44. Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how his Department will assess the competence of training and enterprise council board members.

Mr. Eggar: The competence of training and enterprise councils will be judged by their ability to achieve agreed levels of performance on quality as well as quantity. TECs will also be accountable to their community by holding public meetings and by publishing an annual report. It will be for board members themselves to consider the competence of other members of their board.

Labour Statistics

23. Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received about unemployment in Cleveland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: In recent months my Department has received one letter on unemployment in Cleveland. In the year to November 1989, unemployment in Cleveland county fell from 36,150 to 27,964, a reduction of 22·6 per cent. on the November 1988 figure.

24. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment by what amount the work force in the United Kingdom has increased in the last quarter for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: The work force in employment in the United Kingdom increased by 78,000 in the last quarter to stand at 26,341,000 in June 1989—the highest level ever.

25. Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the fall in the numbers of unemployed in the latest month for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: Between October and November 1989, seasonally adjusted unemployment in the United Kingdom fell by 25,200. Unemployment has now fallen for 40 consecutive months on a consistent basis and is now at its lowest for over nine years.

45. Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the fall in unemployment for the last quarter and what were the figures for the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The following table shows the change in unemployment in the United Kingdom for the latest available quarter and the change for the corresponding quarter in each of the last five years. Unemployment has now fallen for 40 consecutive months and is at its lowest level for over nine years.

46. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the current level of unemployment.

Mr. Nicholls: In November 1989 the level of unemployment, seasonally adjusted, in the United Kingdom was 1,649,700, the lowest for over nine years.

47. Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are currently unemployed in the Devon, North constituency; and how many in 1979.

Mr. Nicholls: Figures for current parliamentary constituencies are available only back to June 1983 when there were 3,124 unemployed claimants in the parliamentary constituency of Devon, North. This compares with 1,968 in November 1989, a fall of 1,156 or 37 per cent. The comparison is affected by the change in the compilation of the unemployment count in March 1986 to reduce over-recording and by the change in benefit regulations affecting under 18-year-olds in September 1988.

48. Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the latest quarterly figure for those in work in the United Kingdom, and what were the comparable figures for the last five years.

Mr. Nicholls: In June 1989, the United Kingdom work force in employment, seasonally adjusted, stood at 26,341,000—the highest level ever. The table shows comparable figures for the past five years:

Workforce in employment—United Kingdom

56. Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the percentage of unemployed people in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) Canada; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: In September 1989, the latest date for which international standardised unemployment rates are available, the percentage of unemployed claimants, seasonally adjusted, was 6 per cent. in the United Kingdom and 7·3 per cent. in Canada. Over the past two years the unemployment rate in the United Kingdom has fallen faster than in any other major industrialised country.

77. Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the average unemployment rate in the United Kingdom and in each country of the European Community for each of the last five years.

64. Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the average level of unemployment in the other members of the European Community; what is the comparable level of unemployment in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: In October 1989, the latest available date, the rate of unemployment in the United Kingdom was 6·2 per cent. compared to an EEC average of 9·1 per cent. Over the past two years the unemployment rate in the United Kingdom has fallen faster than in any other major industrialised country.

66. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the fall in the numbers of long-term unemployed in the latest month for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The number of claimants in the United Kingdom unemployed for 12 months or more fell by 62,000 between July 1989 and October 1989. Long-term unemployment continues to fall at a faster rate than total unemployment.

67. Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are now in employment in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The work force in employment in the United Kingdom was 26,341,000 in June 1989; that is the latest figure available, and is at its highest level ever.

69. Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the fall in the rate of unemployment in the United Kingdom over the last two years; what were the figures in other OECD countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The table shows for the United Kingdom and for each other OECD country, the change in the standardised unemployment rate, over the latest available two-year period. Over the past two years unemployment has fallen faster in the United Kingdom than in any other major industrialised country.

73. Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which region in the United Kingdom recorded the greatest fall in the rate of unemployment in the last quarter.

Mr. Nicholls: Scotland.

75. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on employment levels in the north of England.

Mr. Nicholls: In the three regions, north, north-west, and Yorkshire and Humberside, the civilian work force in employment was 6,126,000 in June 1989, an increase of 403,000 or 7 per cent. in the last five years.

76. Mr. Barry Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what measures his Department has taken to help further reduce unemployment in Merseyside; how successful these have been; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: My Department, through its employment service and Training Agency, operates a wide range of employment, enterprise and training measures, which are all available in Merseyside, as well as elsewhere.

In addition, as in other inner city areas, a number of initiatives have been adopted aimed at helping unemployed people in Liverpool to find employment, and at encouraging employers to recruit local unemployed people. Since April the Liverpool city action team has approved 29 employment and training projects which will create almost 800 jobs and training places, and improve the facilities for nearly 1,300 training places.

During the 12 months to November 1989 unemployment in Merseyside county has fallen by 16,166—16·4 per cent. of the November 1988 figure.

79. Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the increase in jobs in the north-west in the most recent five-year period for which figures are available.

Mr. Nicholls: The civilian work force in employment in the north-west has increased by 202,000 (8 per cent.) from 2,570,000 to 2,772,000 over the five years from June 1984 to June 1989.

Mr. Lee: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the percentage unemployment reductions in Lancashire travel-to-work areas since June 1987.

Mr. Nicholls: The information is available in the Library. Percentage changes in unemployment between June 1987 and November 1989 for all travel-to-work areas covering the county of Lancashire were:

Local Offices

26. Mr. Archer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on staffing levels in jobcentres and unemployment benefit offices.

Mr. Eggar: During November 1989 the equivalent of approximately 7,643 full-time staff were working in jobcentres on placing people into jobs. A total of 17,382 full-time staff were working on benefit payments in unemployment benefit offices. A further equivalent of 3,791 full-time staff were employed on counselling functions.

Wages Councils

27. Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what research his Department has commissioned into the removal of wages councils.

58. Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what research his Department has commissioned into the rates of pay set by statutory wages councils.

Mr. Nicholls: I refer the hon. Members to the reply given to the hon. Member for Halifax (Mrs. Mahon) on 21 July 1989, Official Report, column 390.

42. Mr. Jack Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received concerning his plans to abolish the wages councils.

Mr. Nicholls: I refer to the hon. Member to the replies given to my hon. Friends the Members for Mid-Kent (Mr. Rowe) on 21 March, Official Report, columns 555-56, for Luton South (Mr. Bright) on 28 July, Official Report, column 1037, and to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) on 23 March, Official Report, columns 798-802.

68. Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on research he has commissioned into the effects of removing young people from wages council protection.

Mr. Nicholls: There is clear evidence in studies both in the United Kingdom and internationally on the link between pay and jobs, especially for young people. These findings are supported by indications from employers that their freedom since 1986 to offer jobs at rates they can afford has resulted in the engagement of young people who would not otherwise have been recruited. Further research is therefore unnecessary.

Wales

30. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what responsibilities he has for employment policy in Wales.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State is responsible for formulating policy on employment and training matters throughout Great Britain, in consultation with colleagues, including the Secretaries of State for Wales and Scotland, as appropriate.

Inner Cities

28. Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of the reduction of unemployment in inner cities.

Mr. Nicholls: The table shows the fall in unemployed claimants in the 57 local authority areas in England within which the Government target inner city programme aid. The sustained fall in unemployment in these areas is very encouraging and reflects the success of our action for cities package. My Department's programmes are continuing to equip unemployed inner city residents in Wolverhampton and elsewhere with the skills, confidence and motivation to compete for jobs.

Closed Shop

29. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he is taking in relation to the closed shop; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The Employment Bill published on 21 December 1989 makes it unlawful to refuse to employ a person because he is, or is not, a trade union member and provides that any person refused employment for such a reason may complain to an industrial tribunal. This measure, together with the protections afforded by the 1988 Employment Act, will make all forms of the closed shop unenforceable in law.

49. Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received about the abolition of the closed shop; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: My Department continues to receive letters that describe difficulties experienced as a result of the operation of closed shop arrangements. The majority of these letters support measures against the closed shop. The Employment Bill published on 21 December 1989 will make it unlawful to refuse anyone employment because he is, or is not, a member of a trade union and this, together with the protections already afforded under the 1988 Employment Act, will make all forms of the closed shop unenforceable in law.

55. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has held any recent meetings with his EEC counterparts to discuss the legal and practical aspects of trades union closed shop procedures in the member states.

Mr. Nicholls: Neither my right hon. and learned Friend nor his predecessor the right hon. Member for Sutton Coldfield (Sir N. Fowler) has held any such meetings recently.

Part-time Workers

32. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how his Department intends to extend protection at work for part-time workers.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. and learned Friend has no current plans to extend the employment protection legislation.

Industry Training Boards

33. Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what progress is being made with the privatisation of industry training boards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend the Member for Sutton Coldfield (Sir N. Fowler) announced on 8 November that the majority of the remaining industry training boards would move towards independent status as soon as possible. This process is proceeding satisfactorily.

Vocational Qualifications

34. Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the progress of implementing the national vocational qualifications framework.

Mr. Nicholls: The council's task of rationalising and reforming our vocational qualification system is well under way. Over 165 qualifications have now been accredited within the first four levels of the new national vocational qualifications framework.

In discussion with relevant professional bodies, the council has also begun to prepare the ground for extending its work to higher level qualifications.

Details of the council's work are contained in its annual report, a copy of which is in the Library.

Child Care

35. Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what discussions he has had with employers' organisations regarding the provision of child care.

Mr. Nicholls: I have had discussions on child care with representatives of the CBI at my advisory committee on women's employment. This committee also includes the EOC chair, my hon. Friend the Member for Broxbourne (Mrs. Roe), the hon. Member for Barking (Ms. Richardson), representatives of the TUC and the Women's National Commission.

I also attended the CBI conference, "Tomorrow's Workforce: practical employment policies in a changing labour market", where child care was one of the major topics. I am also a member of the ministerial group on women's issues which has been looking at the whole question of child care.

Recruitment

36. Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what further measures he will introduce to encourage employers to recruit people over 50 years of age; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: My Department is taking a range of steps to encourage employers to recruit people over 50 years of age, including publicising the implications of the declining numbers of young people, questioning upper age limits on vacancies notified to jobcentres, and making all adult employment and training programmes available to people over 50. There are no current plans to introduce further measures, but the position will be kept under review.

If employers in the 1990s are to deal with the consequences of demographic changes, it will be essential for them to utilise fully the talents of people over 50.

Ballots

37. Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received about the code of practice for trade union ballots for industrial action; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: Over 50 responses were received on this draft code of practice during the public consultation period which followed its publication in November 1988. A modified draft was laid before Parliament last year, and the next stage is to seek approval by resolution of each House.

Health and Safety

38. Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proposals he has to improve health and safety conditions in the workplace.

Mr. Nicholls: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Members for Wansbeck (Mr. Thompson) and for Stretford (Mr. Lloyd), Official Report 5 December 1989, column 186.

Training

39. Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of the adult work force currently receives some form of training; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: It is estimated that in 1986-87, 48 per cent. of employees received some job-related training from their employer. More recent figures from the labour force survey show that in the spring of 1988, 12 per cent. of all economically-active adults were taking part in job-related training in the four weeks prior to the survey—an increase from 8 per cent. in 1984. It is vital for our international competitiveness that this upward trend continues. The primary responsibility lies with employers and with the new training and enterprise councils to take the lead in promoting training locally.

40. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the appointment of the national training task force.

Mr. Nicholls: The national training task force was established to advise my right hon. and learned Friend in carrying out his training responsibilities throughout Great Britain and he very much values its contribution.

It is the best team ever put together on training and my right hon. and learned Friend is pleased that it has been further strengthened recently with the appointment of Andrew Collier, chief education officer for Lancashire county council.

60. Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received about the Confederation of British Industry's vocational education and training task force; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: A number of representations have been received concerning the CBI's vocational education and training task force and the publication of its report "Towards a Skills Revolution—a Youth Charter".

The report makes a number of timely and important recommendations. New arrangements have been announced for youth training to take effect later this year (Official Report, 5 December 1989 column 196.) Youth training incorporates a number of the recommendations, including demanding targets for the achievement of qualifications by young people and a key role for training and enterprise councils.

The Government are giving close attention to other recommendations in the report.

72. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what measures he intends to implement to ensure that all young people in employment under the age of 18 years should receive some form of training; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: It is primarily for employers to ensure that young people receive quality training in order to meet the challenges of technological change and the need to achieve greater international competitiveness at a time when the number of school leavers is falling sharply. The Government will continue to help employers to respond effectively to these challenges through the training and enterprise councils (TECs), the introduction of the new youth training arrangements and the compacts initiative. Our aim is to move to a position where every young person under 18 years of age in this country is in full-time education, or a job with training, or training leading to a job.

Disability Advisory Service

51. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how he intends to improve the working of the disability advisory service.

Mr. Eggar: The working of the employment service's disablement advisory service is being considered as part of the internal review of services for people with disabilities which my Department is currently undertaking. A consultative document covering the conclusions of the review will be published soon.

Women Workers

52. Mrs. Currie: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what further measures he will take to encourage the return of women to the work force; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The Government are already taking many steps to facilitate the re-entry of women to the labour market, and will continue to do so. We also recognise that women who choose not to take paid work are doing an equally valuable job in looking after the family at home.

The Government are encouraging employers to adapt traditional working practices to accommodate the needs of women. This means more flexibility in hours of work and in holidays, job sharing, career breaks, part-time working and, where possible, help with child care costs.

All Government schemes to help the unemployed, to help inner cities and to help people set up their own businesses are open equally to women and men. Women returning to the labour market and certain single parents on order books can enter employment training, full or part-time, without fulfilling the usual six-month unemployment eligibility condition. All lone parents on employment training can qualify for a child care allowance.

My Department's employment service has produced a special leaflet to tell women interested in returning to work about available opportunities and schemes.

My Department is also jointly undertaking a major project with BBC radio's "Woman's Hour" aimed at providing information and practical assistance to women returners. The project, which will be called "Back to the Future", will consist of eight conferences, each attended by 120 women on the following subjects: Being Personally Effective; Selling Yourself; Retraining; Working for Yourself; Getting that Job; Managing Money; Flexible Working and Childcare; Planning Your Life. The conferences, the first of which takes place in London on 22 January, will be run in tandem with "Woman's Hour" programmes, publicity material, visits by the Employment Department action bus and a national telephone helpline.

Manual Workers, London

53. Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his estimate of the number of manual workers who travel to London every Sunday night to work and leave again on Friday.

Mr. Nicholls: These figures are not collected by my Department and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

EPCOT Centre

54. Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to visit the EPCOT centre at Disney World in Florida.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. and learned Friend has no such plans.

School-Industry Compacts

57. Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many applications have been received for development funding for school-industry compacts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: In England, all but four of the 57 urban programme authority (UPA) areas have applied for development funding for compacts. My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales have received eight and seven applications respectively.

These applications have led to 29 compacts becoming operational, and a further 11 are currently in their development phase. This is an excellent start and the response of employers, young people, parents and the schools has been very enthusiastic. I am therefore announcing today additional funding of £12 million to support the introduction of further compacts. This brings total Government support for the initiative to £28 million, and means that by next year all urban programme authority (UPA) areas currently without a compact will be able to set one up.

Seven inner city areas are to be offered immediate funding to set up compacts. They are Barnsley, Burnley, Lambeth, Nottingham, Rotherham, Wandsworth and Wigan.

The remaining inner city areas eligible to receive compact funding are being encouraged to develop proposals. Funding will be made available to them from April 1990.

Low Pay, Yorkshire and Humberside

59. Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what measures he will introduce to eradicate the problem of low pay in Yorkshire and Humberside.

Mr. Nicholls: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Barnsley, West and Penistone (Mr. McKay) on 16 May 1989, Official Report column 164.

Picketing

62. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received about picketing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The Government receive various representations on all aspects of industrial relations law including matters relating to picketing.

Youth Training Scheme

65. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many YTS places in Scotland remained unfilled at the most recent date.

Mr. Nicholls: There were 13,000 unfilled YTS places in Scotland at the end of November 1989.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the costs of production of the YTS video entitled "YTS—Designed for You".

Mr. Nicholls: The YTS video "YTS—Designed for You" cost £30,000 to produce.

Factory and Agriculture Inspectors

74. Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the latest number of factory and agriculture inspectors in the Health and Safety Executive.

Mr. Nicholls: On 1 January 1990, 624·5 factory inspectors and 172 agricultural inspectors were in post in the Health and Safety Executive.

Multi-lingual Staff

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many staff at his Department's offices in (a) Doncaster and (b) Mexborough, speak (i) Urdu, (ii) Punjabi, (iii) Bengali, including the Sylheti dialect, (iv) Chinese, (v) Farsi, (vi) Hindi, and (vii) Gujerati.

Mr. Eggar: None of the Employment Department's staff in the jobcentres and unemployment benefit offices in Doncaster and Mexborough speaks any of the languages or dialects referred to.

Wage Rates

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the wage rates and cost of living rates (a) in Northamptonshire and (b) the county in the south-east region with the lowest rates.

Mr. Nicholls: Information is not available in the detail requested.

Small Businesses

Mr. Grylls: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the actions taken by the Government since 31 December 1988 to encourage small and medium-sized businesses.

Mr. Eggar: [holding answer 15 January 1990]: In 1989 the Government continued their efforts to create and foster a climate in which small businesses can flourish and to provide incentives for enterprise by minimising the burdens of taxation, regulation and red tape.

Last year's Budget raised the small companies' profit limit for corporation tax, the limit for marginal relief and the VAT registration threshold. The Companies Act 1989 enabled private companies to opt out of certain provisions of the Act which are of concern only to shareholders, by means of unanimous written resolutions and the agreement of shareholders.

In November 1989 improvements were announced in the conditions of the VAT cash accounting scheme, widening eligibility for small businesses.

Two booklets promoting good purchasing practice and equal opportunities in Government procurement for small firms were launched—"Think Big, Buy Small", aimed at Government purchasing officers, and "Tendering for Government Contracts".

There was a high level of demand for the Government's services to small firms, showing that they meet a real need. The services generally are described in the new report "Small Firms in Great Britain" issued by my Department last December. In 1989 the main developments were:

The launch of Business Growth Training, a major new package of training available for small business managers and their staff;

Improvements to the Enterprise Initiative, including greater flexibility under the Consultancy Initiatives, the relaunch of the Export Initiative, the introduction of the Managing into the 90s programme, and a second Small Firms Merit Award for Research and Technology (SMART). A special Action Guide to the Single Market for the smaller firm was also introduced; and

An increase in the limit for loans under the Loan Guarantee Scheme.

In addition the 1989 Employment Act has prepared the ground for the introduction of training and enterprise councils. They will be responsible for the delivery and development of training and other support services for small businesses and will be able to ensure that these meet the needs of local business communities.

Disabled People (Training)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what arrangements he is making in the establishment of training and enterprise councils to ensure that disabled people do not experience undue delays in receiving training.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 10 January 1990]: Training and enterprise councils will set out their training proposals in their business plan. My Department will need to be satisfied that these proposals meet the training needs of the local community and that all clients including people with disabilities have ready access to training.

Written Answers to Questions

Wednesday 17 January 1990

TRANSPORT

Merchant Shipping

146. Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the future of British merchant shipping capacity.

Mr. McLoughlin: There are encouraging signs that the worst of the decline in world shipping in recent years is over. British operators are among the most entrepreneurial and cost-effective and should be well placed to take advantage of the improved opportunities.

Hydrography

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list the cost of hydrographic work carried out on behalf of his Department by (a) the Royal Navy and (b) the private sector;

(2) if he will list the number of marine surveys ordered by his Department for the last five years.

Mr. McLoughlin: In 1989-90 the civil hydrographic survey programme is expected to cost about £6·3 million, of which about £2·1 million represents contracts let to the private sector, £2·8 million surveys undertaken by the Royal Navy survey flotilla, and £1·4 million work undertaken by the Royal Navy personnel in commercially chartered ships. The numbers of surveys undertaken in the last five years are 1985—21; 1986—18; 1987—21; 1988—20; 1989—15.

NAVTEX

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those countries whose NAVTEX is fully operational and those which are not, together with the implementation dates.

Mr. McLoughlin: NAVTEX services are fully operational in the following countries: Argentina, Belgium, Brazil, Chile, Cyprus, Greece, Hong Kong, Iceland, Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Saudi Arabia, Sweden, Turkey, United Kingdom and Yugoslavia.

NAVTEX services are operational in parts of, or under trial in, the following countries: Bulgaria, Canada, China, Egypt, France, United States of America and USSR.

NAVTEX services are planned in the following countries, with an indication of the implementation date, where known: Bahrain, Bermuda, Cameroon, German Democratic Republic, India, Israel, Italy (1990-93), Korea (August 1993), Japan, Spain (1990), Thailand and Uruguay.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to ensure that EEC countries implement the NAVTEX broadcast requirements.

Mr. McLoughlin: The United Kingdom, through its participation in the worldwide navigation warning system and membership of the International Maritime Organisation NAVTEX co-ordination panel, is actively encouraging the development of NAVTEX both within the EEC area of interest and on a worldwide basis.

Pilotage Commission

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the Pilotage Commission to be wound up.

Mr. McLoughlin: For reasons beyond its control the Pilotage Commission is not yet able to complete the winding up of the former pilotage authorities' affairs. It is therefore not yet possible to say when the commission itself will be wound up. The Department and the commission are considering what can be done to expedite the process.

Horne Report

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what studies his Department has made of the effects of pot-holes and poor road standards upon cyclists; if he will reconsider his decision not to implement the Horne report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The Department has not undertaken specific studies of this sort. It did publish a local transport note last June entitled "Making Way for Cyclists", which gives detailed guidance to local authorities and others on a range of planning, design and legal aspects of providing for cyclists, and emphasises the importance of proper inspections and maintenance.

King's Cross Railways Bill

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with British Rail about how it proposes to justify to him, for investment authorisation, expenditure on the works covered by the King's Cross Railways Bill; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: British Rail's investment at King's Cross will need to be justified according to the normal criteria agreed between the Department and the board.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information British Rail has presented to him, for investment authorisation purposes, in relation to its anticipated revenues in connection with expenditure on the works contained in the King's Cross Railways Bill, in relation to (a) projected revenues from additional services on existing lines to King's Cross and (b) revenues from planned services on new lines for which parliamentary approval will be required and has yet to be sought; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: British Rail has not yet sought authorisation from the Secretary of State for its proposed investment at King's Cross.

Departmental Policies

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he is taking to assess the environmental friendliness of his Department's policies.

Mr. Atkins: The Department pays close attention to the environmental implications of its policies and many have a directly beneficial effect. For example, we are taking steps to control vehicle emissions; we build new roads to relieve congestion and bypass communities; and we are supporting massive investment in public transport. We shall be making an important contribution to the White Paper on the environment to be published later this year.

A5 Bypass

Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he is now able to say when he expects to announce the preferred route for the north-south A5 Dunstable bypass; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Comments made during public consultation and the new national road traffic forecasts have made it necessary to reconsider our original proposals. Further consultation may be necessary, but we hope to announce a preferred route for the bypass by the autumn.

Severn Estuary

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the latest timetable for the construction of a second highway crossing of the Severn estuary.

Mr. Atkins: We are currently considering tenders and remain on course to provide the second crossing by the mid-1990s.

THE ARTS

Arts Funding

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will estimate the contribution to arts in the metropolitan area of (a) the Arts Council and (b) the London local authorities; upon what items this money is principally spent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: I am advised that in 1987-88, the last year for which complete records are available, the Arts Council's grants to arts bodies in the London area (excluding the national companies) was £26·7 million. This sum was spread across the entire spectrum of art forms: music, drama, dance, literature, and the visual arts. Figures for local authority spending on the arts are more difficult to isolate. The Policy Studies Institute, however, has estimated that spending by local authorities on the arts in London for 1988-89 totalled some £42 million, of which £28 million went to arts premises and promotions, and £14 million in grants to arts organisations.

Televised Performances

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Minister for the Arts what discussions he has held with national opera houses and theatres on increasing the number of televised performances.

Mr. Luce: It is for the companies themselves to decide on these matters. It is, however, the policy of the Arts Council to encourage the televising of performances in order to promote access to the arts. In addition, many new operatic productions are now broadcast on the radio. Between the two media, there were 15 broadcast productions in 1989; nine from the royal opera house, and six for English national opera.

EDUCTION AND SCIENCE

National Curriculum

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science pursuant to his answer of 8 January, Official Report, col, 487, what guidance he has issued to the National Curriculum Council about how much of a school's curriculum it should prescribe in its circulars to schools.

Mrs. Angela Rumbold: None. The Education Reform Act requires all maintained schools to provide a basic curriculum consisting of the national curriculum for all pupils of compulsory school age and religious education for all registered pupils at the school. Neither my right hon. Friend nor the National Curriculum Council has the power to prescribe what else is taught in schools, nor how the timetable is arranged.

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received on circular No. 6 of October 1989 from the National Curriculum Council on the subject of the whole curriculum.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has received one representation concerning the place of religious education and worship in the whole curriculum.

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to change the remit of the National Curriculum Council.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has no plans to change the remit of the National Curriculum Council which is set out in section 14 (3), (5) and (6) of the Education Reform Act 1988.

Teachers' Pay

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any long-term plans to improve teacher remuneration.

Mr. Rumbold: The Government's policy is that teachers' pay should be such as to enable the maintained school system to recruit, retain and motivate sufficient teachers of the required quality, within what can be afforded.

Teacher Shortages

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are his Department's current figures for teacher shortages in England and Wales; and if he will set out his answer in tabular form giving details for individual local education authorities.

Mr. Alan Howarth: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply my right hon. Friend gave on 21 December 1989 to the hon. Member for Blackburn (Mr. Straw) at columns 353-55. Data for Wales are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

WALES

Earnings

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what his estimate is of the average earnings in the valley communities.

Mr. Peter Walker: Information is not available below county level.

Language Teachers

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many qualified teachers there are in the high schools of the local education authorities in Wales of (a) Welsh, (b) German, (c) French, (d) Spanish, (e) Italian and (f) Latin; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Provisional estimates of the numbers of secondary school language teachers holding a post A-level main subject qualification are shown in the table:

Subject	Number of Teachers
Welsh	1,100
German	300
French	1,000
Spanish	100
Italian	100
Classical Languages	200

Teachers possessing a qualification in a particular subject will not necessarily be teaching that subject. The figures are obtained from the Welsh secondary staffing survey conducted in February and March of 1989.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will call a conference of local education authorities' parent-teacher associations and teacher unions to consider the need to increase the number of qualified foreign language teachers in Welsh high schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: No. The future pattern of demand for language teachers can be clearly determined in the light of the provisions of the national curriculum.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he has taken to increase the number of qualified secondary teachers of (a) Welsh, (b) German, (c) French, (d) Spanish, (e) Italian and (f) Latin; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The future demand for language teachers is being taken fully into account when setting the intakes to initial teacher training, in the revision of the criteria for initial teacher training courses and in planning the LEA in-service training grant scheme and education support grants.

Business Rate

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the arrangements for the levying of the uniform business rate in Wales on properties open for only part of the year as a result of seasonal trade.

Mr. Peter Walker: Such property will be liable for non-domestic rating for the days on which it is used for non-domestic purposes and is entered on a local non-domestic rating list. Property used for non-domestic purposes can include property which is open all the year around, and also property where paying guests are not admitted out of season but where rooms are maintained in preparation for non-domestic use in the next holiday season. Where, however, the off-season use becomes domestic (for example, where the proprietor's family occupies the property for domestic purposes), the property is not rateable and should be deleted from the rating list for that period.

Valuation of seasonally operated properties will take into account seasonal patterns of trade. The assessment of a hotel or guest house in an isolated tourist location can take into account the likelihood that winter trade may be minimal or non-existent. The pattern of trade is taken into account by the valuation officer in his valuation of a range of properties including hotels, guest houses, public houses and holiday cottages.

Occupiers of seasonally operated properties which are liable to rates for any period will have their rate liabilities calculated in accordance with the Welsh non-domestic rating multiplier for the year. For the financial year 1990-91 that multiplier has been set at 0·368, or 36·8p in the pound.

Mental Health Strategy

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what arrangements are under consideration for the all-Wales mental health strategy at the conclusion of the current 10-year programme.

Mr. Grist: We assume that my hon. Friend is referring to the all-Wales mental handicap strategy, as our all-Wales mental illness strategy was launched only last year and does not have a set 10-year programme. The Welsh chapter of the Government's White Paper "Caring for People" indicates that there will be a full review of service development and of the framework provided by the mental hanicap strategy in 1991-92. This review will help to inform consideration of future arrangements for mental handicap services.

A465

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the timetable for making the A465, the Heads of the Valleys road, a continuous dual carriage highway throughout its entire length.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: There are no plans for dualling the Heads of the Valleys section of the A465. The position is being reviewed as part of the south Wales traffic study, which will be completed towards the end of 1990.

A470

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the timetable for the completion of the Pentrebach bypass, and other bypass work, to take the A470 round Merthyr Tydfil.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The A470 Pentrebach-Cefn Coed improvement is programmed to start in the period April 1991 to March 1994. Construction is expected to take two years.

Agricultural Land

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the average price paid for the following agricultural land in Wales during 1989 (a) lowland, (b) marginal and (c) hill land; what were the corresponding figures for each of the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: Information is available only on the basis of land grade. The average price paid for agricultural land of five or more hectares in vacant possession is shown in the table:

Average land prices (£): Reported in 12 months ended September

	Grades 1 and 2	Grade 3	Grades 4 and 5
1979	2,593	2,368	1,607
1980	4,351	3,240	2,181
1981	4,504	3,117	2,027
1982	3,353	3,119	1,792
1983	3,002	3,443	2,079
1984	4,801	3,816	2,427
1985	5,512	3,705	2,070
1986	4,238	3,642	2,213
1987	3,292	3,171	2,196
1988	4,376	2,906	1,604
1989	5,065	3,680	3,627

Note: Grades 1, 2 and 3 approximate to the lowland areas, grades 4 and 5 to the less-favoured areas of marginal and hill land. There is a lag between agreeing a sale and reporting it which means that prices reported in the 12 months ended 30 September generally related to sales agreed in the previous calendar year.

ENVIRONMENT

Disabled People (Housing)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the need for purpose-built bungalows for disabled people.

Mr. Chope: No such estimates are made. Generally the Government favour the design of housing, of whatever kind, which is accessible to the disabled and convenient for them to use. We aim to enable people with disabilities to lead, as far as possible, an independent and active life without having to move to specialised accommodation or institutional care. New grant arrangements coming into effect in April will facilitate adaptation and improvement works to help those who become disabled to remain in their existing homes.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to prohibit the disposal of consumer durables containing chlorofluorocarbons to landfill.

Mr. Trippier: The Government have at present no plans to do so, although the Department of Trade and Industry has commissioned an intensive study of the problems associated with the use of CFCs which is being carried out by Coopers and Lybrand. Further action will be considered in the light of that report. In addition, various pilot schemes are being undertaken by individual local authorities, some in conjunction with industry.

EC Housing Ministers

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a statement on the meeting of EEC Housing Ministers held in Lille in December.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The meeting was arranged by the French Government with a view to establishing direct links between Housing Ministers from the EC member states. Almost all member states were represented, most at ministerial level, and discussions were cordial and productive. At the conclusion of the meeting it was unanimously agreed that similar meetings should be arranged annually, by the country holding the EC presidency for the second half-year, and that national Administrations should make the necessary arrangements to prepare for them.

Pollution

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list by (a) location and (b) water authority the sites that suffered from toxic pollution due to blue-green algae, caused by phosphates and nitrogen from sewage and farming entering public reservoirs; and if any successful prosecutions have been made.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: There were 53 sites in England where blooms of toxic blue-green algae were identified in 1989. The causes of the blooms have not yet been determined, but the National Rivers Authority is investigating the issue.

Drought Orders

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list by (a) water company and (b) location those areas where drought orders still remain in force in England and Wales.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The table lists, by water company area, the drought orders currently in force in England (and that part of Wales served by Severn Trent Water), the locality or water supply source affected by each order and its expiry date. Orders affecting the supply area of Welsh Water are a matter for the Secretary of State for Wales.

War Memorials

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what financial assistance his Department has given to the joint project being carried out by the imperial war museum and the royal commission on the historical monuments of England towards the national inventory of war memorials.

Mr. Trippier: The proposed joint project by the imperial war museum and the royal commission on the historical monuments of England is being supported by grants from the Leverhulme Trust, the Western Front Association and the Imperial War Museum Trust. With this support, the museum and the royal commission expect to be able to meet the full cost without the need to seek any additional funding from the Department of the Environment or any other Government source. The royal commission's day-to-day operations are, of course, largely funded through the grant-in-aid from the Department, which in 1990-91 will be £6·07 million. The grant-in-aid in 1990-91 to the imperial war museum from the Office of Arts and Libraries will be £9·6 million.

Home Improvements

Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment in which 10 local authority areas in the United Kingdom the Government have provided the largest sums of money for home improvement since 1979.

Mr. Chope: The table shows those local authorities in England which, between the financial years 1981-82 and 1988-89, received the largest total amount of Exchequer contribution towards the cost of loan charges incurred by them in giving home improvement grants. Information for years prior to 1981-82 is not readily available. I refer my hon. Friend to the Secretaries of State for Wales, for Scotland and for Northern Ireland for information relating to the rest of the United Kingdom.

Public Footpaths and Bridleways

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to make regulations under sections 150 and 151 of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989 to provide for charges to be made for anything done by a local authority in connection with public footpaths and bridleways.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: We are presently considering whether, and if so how, the enabling power in the Act might be used in respect of charging for public path orders. No regulations will be made without full consultation with interested parties.

Environmental Assessment Directive

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment to whom his Department has let the contract for monitoring the implementation of the environmental assessment directive.

Mr. Moynihan: My Department is currently considering tenders which have been received from invited organisations.

Town and Country Planning

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he plans to introduce legislation to consolidate town and country planning legislation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: It is hoped to introduce consolidating legislation prepared by the Law Commission into Parliament shortly.

Bathing Water Survey

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library a copy of the "Bathing Water Survey" (1989 results).

Mr. Trippier: The results are at present being collated. I expect to place a report in the Library shortly.

Drinking Water

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the use of ozone as a purifier of drinking water within the EEC.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I understand that ozone is used to some extent in most member states while it is used extensively in France.

Houseboats

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration he has given to the desirability of introducing legislation to afford protection to those who reside on houseboats on canals and rivers; what recent representations he has received on this matter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The Department occasionally receives letters from hon. Members and the public about security of moorings for houseboat residents. We have no plans to introduce legislation providing statutory security of tenure for them.

Migrant Households

Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which data source is used to determine the number of households headed by migrants from the new Commonwealth and Pakistan in determining levels of rate support grants for local authorities.

Mr. Chope: The data source for the number of households headed by migrants from the New Commonwealth and Pakistan is the 1981 Census.

Homelessness

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any proposals to deal with the causes of homelessness.

Mr. Chope: The review of the homelessness legislation, published in November 1989, sets out the Government's proposals for tackling homelessness. Copies are in the Library.

Competitive Tendering, Kirklees

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made by Kirklees metropolitan council in implementing the provisions of the Local Government Act 1988 in relation to compulsory competitive tendering of (a) refuse collection, (b) cleaning of buildings, (c) other forms of cleaning, (d) catering in schools and welfare roles, other forms of catering, (f) grounds maintenance, and (g) repair and maintenance of vehicles; what are the projected annual savings as a result of competitive tendering for each of the services; and when the successful tenderers will commence operating each of the services.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The dates by which local authorities are required to expose their services to competition under the terms of part I of the Local Government Act 1988 are prescribed in the Local Government Act 1988 (Defined Activities) (Competition) (England) Regulations 1988 (SI 1988 No. 1371). The dates by which Kirklees metropolitan borough council is required to expose services to competition in this way, and the progress in implementing those requirements is as follows:

(a) refuse collection—the date prescribed was 1 January 1990. I understand that the contract was awarded to the authority's Direct Service Organisation (DSO) and commenced on that date. The authority estimate that net savings of approximately £½ million or 10 per cent. have been achieved;

(b) cleaning of buildings—the date prescribed is 1 January 1991 and I understand that the authority is taking steps to ensure that competition is introduced in accordance with that timetable;

(c) other cleaning—the date prescribed is 1 August 1990. I understand that the authority is currently considering applications from persons wishing to be included on its select tendering list and intends to commence the contract in accordance with the timetable;

(d) catering for purposes of schools and welfare—the date prescribed is 1 January 1992. I understand that the authority is taking steps to ensure that competition is introduced in accordance with that timetable;

(e) other catering—the date prescribed is 1 August 1991. I understand that the authority is taking steps to ensure that competition is introduced in accordance with that timetable;

(f) grounds maintenance—the regulations require that authorities should expose a first tranche of 20 per cent. of this work to competition by 1 January 1990, and subsequent tranches of 20 per cent. at six monthly intervals thereafter. I understand that the contract comprising the first 20 per cent. tranche was awarded to the authority's DSO and commenced on 1 January and that a further contract comprising an additional 20 per cent. tranche of work was also won by the DSO and will commence on 1 April. The authority estimate that no net savings will be achieved from those contracts;

(g) repair and maintenance of vehicles—the date prescribed in Regulations for competition was 1 August 1989. I understand that the contract was awarded to a private contractor and commenced on that date. The authority estimate that net savings of approximately £50k or 2 per cent. will be achieved.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the research projects commissioned by his Department in the past 10 years on rural matters, giving details of cost, publication and follow-up action on recommendations.

Mr. Trippier: Annual expenditure under the Department's countryside research programme and lists of publications resulting from it are given in the Department's periodic reports on research and development, published by HMSO, copies of which are in the Library. The individual research projects are listed in the annual surveys of research prepared for the countryside recreation research advisory group by the school for advanced urban studies at the university of Bristol, copies of which are obtainable from the school. It is usually left to the contractor to make the final report on a research project available to others on request. Such reports do not normally include recommendations for action.

Water Companies

Mr. Lee: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many employees of each of the recently privatised water companies became shareholders; and what percentages of the total work forces this represented.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: A total of 37,488 employees, representing 85·57 per cent. of the eligible work force of the 10 companies, have successfully applied for shares in the companies under free and matching offers.

The figures for each company are as follows:

	Employees	Per cent. of workforce
Anglian	3,723	82·97
North West	6,379	87·09
Northumbrian	1,298	89·46
Severn Trent	6,486	88·53
Southern	2,453	80·56
South West	1,496	82·15
Thames	6,778	83·17
Welsh	3,280	85·73
Wessex	1,495	85·38
Yorkshire	4,100	88·59

In addition, some of the small number of employees not eligible for the free and matching offers will have successfully applied for shares, but exact figures could not be provided without disproportionate cost.

Recycled Material

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to introduce a standard symbol to denote material which has been recycled; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My right hon. Friend announced on 9 January that, following consultation, the Government are to set up an advisory group to develop an eco-labelling scheme to reflect the key characteristics of a product's environmental impact from design to disposal or "cradle to grave". Thus the extent to which a product includes recycled material and can itself be recycled will be taken fully into account.

Business Rates

Mr. Richard Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of profits and trading surpluses the unabated post-revaluation uniform business rate represents for each standard region.

Mr. Chope: The information from which to make such estimates is not available.

Association of County Councils

Sir Charles Morrison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition relating to the centenary of the Association of County Councils to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. David Hunt: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Services Committee, arrangements have been made with the authorities of the House for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from Monday 5 February to Friday 9 February.

Hazardous Waste

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he proposes to respond to the report of the Environmental Protection Agency of the United States of America in regard to the hazardous waste material which remains in Wath upon Dearne; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him on 15 January, Official Report, column 111.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the transfrontier shipment of toxic waste within the European Community.

Mr. Trippier: Transfrontier shipment of hazardous waste into, out of or within the Community is subject to control under existing EC directives. Discussion is taking place in Brussels to revise these directives and to implement the Basel convention on transfrontier shipment. It is the Government's view that international waste movements should be reduced to the environmentally justified minimum and those that are necessary should be subject to effective monitoring and control.

Nature Conservancy Council

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Wyre (Mr. Mans) of 23 November 1989, Official Report, column 16, he will give the likely cost of creating a joint co-ordinating committee for the restyled nature conservancy bodies and the estimated annual cost of serving it; and what is the overall annual impact on public expenditure of the proposed reorganisation.

Mr. Trippier: Preparatory work to establish the new conservation agencies, including the joint committee, is likely to cost £1·5 million in 1990-91. Some additional costs are likely to be incurred thereafter in operating the new agencies and servicing the committee. It is too early to give an estimate of these costs, as several issues, such as the staff complement of each agency and the programme of the joint committee, are still under detailed consideration by the Government and the Nature Conservancy Council.

Waste Disposal

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy on the siting of large toxic waste disposal plants in the middle of major conurbations.

Mr. Trippier: The siting of waste disposal facilities is determined by local planning authorities in dealing with relevant planning applications. Any planning appeal to my right hon. Friend would be considered in relation to the circumstances of the case.

Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce a decision concerning the appeal by Thomas Brown of Whinfield farm, Pennington, against revocation of his waste disposal licence by Cumbria county council, submitted in summer 1988.

Mr. Trippier: Written representations have been completed on this appeal, lodged on 16 September 1988, and an official from the Department will make a site visit on 20 February. The Secretary of State hopes to be able to determine the appeal once he has received the site visit report.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has yet established the criteria he will use for community charge capping.

Mr. Chope: If authorities insist on budgeting excessively my right hon. Friend will not hesitate to cap them, but it would not be right to speculate on the detailed operation of any charge-capping scheme which might be needed.

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if the measures announced by the Minister for Local Government and Inner Cities in October 1989 to limit the increase in the amount of the community charge to not more than £3 per week will apply to charge payers in the London borough of Hillingdon; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The community charge transitional relief scheme will apply in all charging authority areas. In properties containing one or two community charge payers, relief will be paid where there is a difference of £156 a year (£3 a week) or more between the assumed rates bill and the community charges which would be set if local authority spending were in line with the Government's assumptions for this purpose. For properties with more than two charge payers relief will be based on a comparison between the assumed rates bill and two assumed community charges and distributed equally among the chargepayers. Elderly and disabled people who were not former ratepayers or the partners of former ratepayers will be entitled to relief to reduce their assumed community charge to £156. As was made clear in the announcement, however, relief will not cover any excess of the actual community charge over the assumed community charge.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department is considering measures to ensure that his recommendation that seafarers out of the country for more than six months are eligible for exemption from community charge will be complied with; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 15 January 1990]: Guidance on the treatment of Royal Navy personnel was contained in the community charge practice note No. 9 "UK Service Personnel". This advised that married seagoers might be regarded as having their residence with their family except for continuous absences in excess of six months, that single seagoers who are householders might be treated in the same way, and that single seagoers with no permanent home address need not be registered for the personal community charge except during periods of shore leave in excess of 61 days. My Department issued further guidance which suggested that merchant seamen might be treated in broadly the same way as their service counterparts. It is for community charges registration officers to determine liability taking into account all the circumstances of any individual case. Anyone dissatisfied with a determination may appeal to a valuation and community charge tribunal.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest estimate of the poll tax for Nottingham.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 15 January 1990]: If each authority seeks to raise from its residents an amount consistent with its behaviour in 1989-90 and with total standard spending of £32·8 billion for 1990-91, its community charge will be that shown in table 2 of the revised exemplifications which my right hon. Friend laid in the Library on 11 January. In the case of Nottingham that would be £254.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish an up-to-date list of all the regulations in respect of the community charge setting out the area each regulation covers, the primary legislation giving rise to each regulation, the date each came into force, details of amendments to the regulations and the number of pages of each regulation.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 15 January 1990]: The information is as follows:

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what were the sums raised by the London borough of Newham from its industrial and commercial ratepayers for the financial year 1989-90 (a) in total and (b) per expected payer of the community charge; and what is the sum he expects to pay the borough in respect of the uniform business rate for the financial year 1990-91 (i) in total and (ii) per community charge payer.

Mr. Chope: I estimate that in 1989-90 industrial and commercial ratepayers will pay about £32·2 million in non-domestic rates to the London borough of Newham. This is £201·64 per community charge payer. Under our proposals for 1990-91 the share of the non-domestic rate pool paid to Newham will be £46·7 million. This is £292·51 per chargepayer. The two figures are not directly comparable. The relevant population calculation for Newham is 159,694.

Dangerous Substances

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he has taken to ensure compliance with European Community quality objectives for list I dangerous substances in water; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Surface Waters (Dangerous Substances) (Classification) Regulations 1989 (SI 1989 No. 2286) came into force on 1 January 1990. These contain the quality standards for surface waters for each of the list I dangerous substances for which Communitywide standards have been set. My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for the Environment and for Wales have now issued a notice to the National Rivers Authority under section 105 of the Water Act 1989 establishing these standards as statutory water quality objectives. They have also issued directions to the authority under section 146 of the Act requiring it, with effect from 8 January, to implement the quality standards in the regulations, to undertake the necessary monitoring and to supply the Secretaries of State with the appropriate information. Copies of the notice and direction to the National Rivers Authority have been placed in the Library.

Land Reclamation

Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce a decision concerning the Crooklands Brow, Dalton-in-Furness, derelict land reclamation scheme.

Mr. Moynihan: The application for derelict land grant in respect of this scheme is currently receiving consideration. It is hoped to issue a decision within four weeks.

Council Grants

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what grant gain has resulted for the London boroughs of (a) Brent and (b) Ealing as a consequence of the reduction in the standard spending assessment of those boroughs; and on what basis the assessment was reduced.

Mr. Chope: The standard spending assessments (SSAs) for Brent and Ealing published on 11 January are lower overall than those published on 6 November 1989 primarily because of reductions in the highway maintenance SSA (in the case of Brent) and in the highway maintenance and capital financing SSAs (in the case of Ealing).

The increase in the estimated revenue support grant entitlements for Brent and Ealing for 1990-91 (before safety net adjustments) flowing from the reports laid on 11 January as compared with our 6 November proposals is £1·004 million and £5·763 million respectively. This is primarily attributable to changes in our figures for estimated population and for the Metropolitan police budget.

City of London Heliport

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he intends to make an assessment of the noise impact upon the Palace of Westminster arising from helicopter movements using the proposed City of London heliport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 21 December 1989]: No.

Refuse-Derived Fuel and Humus

Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy in respect of grant aiding future research into refuse-derived fuel and refuse-derived humus; and what priority will be given to industry-led and funded research.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 15 January 1990]: A substantial programme funded by my Department of research into combustion of refuse derived fuel is drawing to a close. Industry has developed techniques for solid waste composting. The reclamation and recycling group set up by my Department and the Department of Trade and Industry is currently looking at barriers to the increased use of recycled compostibles.

Water Privatisation

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the outcome of the water privatisation share issue.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 15 January 1990]: Over 2·7 million applications for shares in the 10 water plcs were received. The public offers were nearly 5·7 times oversubscribed. After clawback of shares from institutional and overseas offers, almost 47 per cent. of the shares available were allocated to the public. Nearly 1·35 million registered customers applied for incentives and preference in their local company. We allocated to registered customers 57·5 per cent. of the shares available to the public.

The response from the public represents the second-highest level of applications for any privatisation. This is a privatisation that will bring benefits for the environment, for customers and for the 10 water plcs.

National Rivers Authority

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the record of the National Rivers Authority since it was established.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 15 January 1990]: The NRA fully assumed its responsibilities on 1 September 1989. Since then regional rivers advisory committees, regional fisheries advisory committees and regional flood defence committees have been established in the 10 NRA regions together with regional advisory boards chaired by the regional board members. Priorities for future action are currently being set by the authority and will be set out in its corporate plan. The authority has already embarked on a number of reviews of policy areas. In addition, the authority has successfully prosecuted a number of offenders under its pollution control powers against offenders.

Pollution Inspectorate

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number of times per year since 1979 that Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution officials have inspected each of the following waste disposal sites (a) Rechem Incinerator, Pontypool, (b) Leigh Interest, Stubbers Green, Walsall, (c) Leigh Interests, Lumshill quarry, Matlock and (d) Leigh Interests, Killamarsh, Sheffield.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 15 January 1990]: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution and its predecessors have inspected the Rechem incinerator at Pontypool at least 12 times in 1981 and in 1982 and between 15 and 18 times in each subsequent year. No inspections have been made of Lumshill quarry, Matlock by the inspectorate. The sites at Killamarsh and Walsall were inspected as follows:

	Killamarsh	Walsall
1981	23	—
1982	20	—
1983	8	1
1984	14	—
1985	30	—
1986	9	1
1987	13	—
1988	39	—
1989	26	1

Leigh Interests plc

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received regarding the plan by Leigh Interests plc to build a toxic waste incinerator at Kirk Sandall.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 15 January 1990]: Various representations have been received from hon. Members and the public about this proposal which is to be the subject of a public local inquiry in April.

Thermally Stable Plastics

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what are the products of combustion from thermally stable plastics used in the medical industry during combustion in hospital-type incinerators;

(2) what studies have been carried out by his Department of the problems experienced by the combustion of plastic clinical waste in hospital incinerators within the United Kingdom;

(3) whether there is a requirement placed upon the suppliers of thermally stable plastics to provide a thermal analysis of their products to enable the combustion characteristics of such plastics to be understood.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 16 January 1990]: The products will include carbon dioxide and water and may include hydrochloric acid, hydrofluoric acid, sulphur dioxide, metal oxides and halides and a range of organic materials. Some of these chemicals may be removed from the exhaust gases by scrubbing equipment. Because the quantities of plastics used in the medical industry are increasing and the compositions are changing, my Department has placed a research contract with the Warren Spring Laboratory to study combustion of them. The chemical compositions of these plastics are well known and no purpose would be served by requiring suppliers to provide thermal analyses.

Tin Cans

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will consider prohibiting mixing of metals in tin cans where consumer safety does not require it, in order to allow recycling.

Mr. Forth: I have been asked to reply.

No. The mixed composition of some cans does not inhibit their recycling. Indeed, the aluminium contained in the ends of certain steel cans is beneficial to current reprocessing operations.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will list in rank order, by number of questions, the 20 right hon. and hon. Members who asked the most parliamentary questions during the 1988-89 Session.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The information is as follows:

		Number
1.	Mr. Ron Davies	775
2.	Dr. Dafydd Elis Thomas	717
3.	Mr. Graham Allen	707
4.	Mr. Martin Redmond	699

16.	Mr. Henry McLeish	347
17.	Mr. Jimmy Wray	342
18.	Mr. Jeremy Corbyn	337
19.	Mr. Barry Jones	327
20.	Mr. Tam Dalyell	326

Note: The figures include oral, written and private notice questions but exclude supplementary questions and unreached oral questions asking the Prime Minister to list her engagements.

Select Committees

Mr. Redmond: To ask the the Lord President of the Council what extra seating facilities for the general public are being made available, following the admission of television cameras to Select Committee meetings; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The arrangements for televising Select Committees are at an experimental stage and I understand that the two temporary camera stands can take up space for some eight seats previously available to the general public. Every effort is made to make maximum use of space for those persons wishing to attend sittings of Select Committees and I understand that, in some cases, Chairmen have agreed to make available for the public parts of the Committee Room previously available to hon. Members.

The Select Committee on Televising of Proceedings of the House will consider the availability of seating in Committee Rooms during its review of the experimental period.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Shops Act 1950

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make it his policy to give a favourable response to any application by a local authority for his fiat to a relator action in pursuance of its statutory duty to enforce the Shops Act 1950.

The Attorney-General: The statutory duty of local authorities to enforce the Shops Act 1950 is not subject to the consent of the Attorney-General. Local authorities act independently in the exercise of the duty.

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Attorney-General what (a) assistance or (b) guidance he is proposing to give local authorities on the taking of measures to secure compliance with the Shops Act 1950 in the light of the recent decision of the European Court of Justice on 23 November.

The Attorney-General: Section 71 of the Shops Act 1950 places a clear duty on local authorities to enforce the provisions of the Act. That duty has not been altered by the judgment of the European Court of Justice in case 145/88.

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Attorney-General what representations he has received from the chairman of the Keep Sunday Special Campaign on the enforcement of the Shops Act 1950 in the light of the European Court decision on 23 November; if he will publish his response in the Official Report; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The chairman of the Keep Sunday Special Campaign asked to see me with a group of trade representatives from the retail trade. I found the meeting helpful. It was useful to hear at first hand the problems of the enforcement of the Shops Act 1950 as they are perceived by some members of the trade.

It is now for the domestic courts to apply the judgment of the European Court of Justice in case 145/88. Parliament has conferred the responsibility for enforcing the legislation on local authorities and I am not persuaded that it is appropriate for me to take an initiative on either a local or a national basis at present.

Ko Hsuan School

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Attorney-General if he will investigate the charitable status of Ko Hsuan school in north Devon; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: I have caused investigations to be made and can inform my hon. Friend that the Ko Hsuan school in north Devon is not a registered charity.

Accident Compensation

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list by category the United Kingdom's accident compensation payment laws, when they were last brought up to date in line with inflation; and if he intends a further update in line with the current rate of inflation.

The Attorney-General: With the exception of the statutory provisions relating to damages for bereavement under the Administration of Justice Act 1982, which apply in England and Wales and Northern Ireland, it is not clear to what provisions the hon. Member may be referring, and there is, therefore, no further specific information which I am able to give. As to the position in relation to bereavement damages, I refer him to the reply which I gave to a question from the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill (Mr. Alton) on 12 January 1990 at column 774.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Four Winds Park (Flooding)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he has received any complaints about flooding at the rear gardens of dwellings at Four Winds park, Castlereagh; what proposals he has to remove the cause of this flooding; what works were carried out at the location of this flooding during the month of December 1989; what assessment he has made of the dangers to young children living at Four Winds park due to this flooding; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A complaint was received by the Department of Agriculture on 16 December 1989. Flooding was caused by an obstruction in a culverted section of the watercourse to the rear of the dwellings and the Department deployed pumps to alleviate the flooding and removed debris from the entrance to the culvert.

Responsibility for the efficiency of the watercourse lies with riparian occupiers. The culvert, which in any case is inadequate to discharge storm flows, was installed without the consent of the Department and in 1986 residents were asked to have it upgraded in size: householders will again be advised of their responsibilities.

Telecommunications

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what groups comprise the task force established in April 1989 by the Department of Economic Development to promote awareness of, and stimulate demand for, the new telecommunications services as a result of the launch of the STAR programme;

(2) what steps have been taken by the task force established in April 1989 by the Department of Economic Development to promote awareness of and stimulate demand for the new telecommunications services as a result of the launch of the STAR programme.

Mr. Needham: The STAR task force comprises representatives of the Department of Economic Development, the Industrial Development Board, the Local Enterprise Development Unit, the Technology Board for Northern Ireland, Queen's university of Belfast and the university of Ulster. To date £328,360 of grant aid from the European regional development fund has been committed to 10 projects in Northern Ireland aimed at promoting awareness and use of the new telecommunications infrastructure. These cover promotional seminars, feasibility studies and demonstration projects. Additional projects are being developed.

Cystic Fibrosis

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans the Northern Ireland Department of Health and Social Services has to establish an institute for those suffering from cystic fibrosis similar to the one in Peto in Hungary.

Dr. Mawhinney: I understand that conductive education as practised in the Peto institute in Budapest is not appropriate for the treatment of cystic fibrosis.

However, the Government have agreed to contribute to the funding of a new international institute to be established in Hungary. Detailed discussions with the Hungarian Government on this project are continuing and it would not be appropriate to take decisions on proposals for similar provision in Northern Ireland until those discussions are concluded.

Parliamentary Boundary Commission for Northern Ireland

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will announce the membership of the Parliamentary Boundary Commission for Northern Ireland.

Mr. Cope: Mr. Speaker is the chairman of the Boundary Commission. The other members are as follows:

Members	Appointed by
Deputy Chairman
The Hon. Mr. Justice Higgins	The Lord Chief Justice of Northern Ireland
Members
Mr. P. G. Duffy	The Secretary of State
Mr. D. J. Clement	The Secretary of State

Wounded Soldiers (Compensation)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the sums payable in compensation to officers, non-commissioned officers and soldiers wounded on service in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Cope: They depend in each case on the seriousness of the injuries received.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what sums are payable in compensation to the families of officers, non-commissioned officers and soldiers killed on service in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Cope: They depend in each case on the amount of pecuniary loss suffered and expenses actually and necessarily incurred by the families as a result of the victim's death.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the total number of ACE placements in each district council area in Northern Ireland.

Youth Training

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the total number of youth training placements in each district council area in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 16 January 1990]: The information is not available in the form requested. However, the table shows that 10,184 full-time training places, broken down by job market area, were occupied at 29 December 1989. In addition, 2,415 young people were receiving employment with training under YTP work scheme across the province at the same time.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total amount allocated for (a) major works and (b) minor works by the Department of the Environment's roads service to each of the district offices in each division of the Northern Ireland roads service in each year since 1985.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 16 January 1990]: Allocations for major works and minor works are primarily made on a divisional basis as follows:

HOME DEPARTMENT

Birmingham Pub Bombings

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last discussed the Birmingham pub bombings case with the assistant chief constable of West Yorkshire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. and learned Friend has not discussed this case with the assistant chief constable of West Yorkshire, Mr. Shaw. However, Home Office officials have maintained close contact with the Police Complaints Authority, which is supervising Mr. Shaw's investigations into the West Midlands serious crime squad. We will consider carefully whether anything emerges from this investigation which might cast doubt on the safety of the convictions of the Birmingham Six.

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects the investigations into the Birmingham Six to be concluded; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. and learned Friend is considering very carefully the further material which has been presented to him by a solicitor on behalf of the Birmingham Six, and will decide as soon as possible whether it justifies any intervention on his part.

Bingo Clubs

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to exclude bingo clubs from section 42 of the Gaming Act to allow them to advertise; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Licensed bingo clubs already advertise freely as social clubs, and specific games of bingo, and certain prizes in them, are already advertised on the front of club premises. The principal effect of section 42 of the Gaming Act 1968 on bingo clubs is to prohibit the wider advertising of the specific locations of the clubs as places where gaming takes place. We have informed the Bingo Association of Great Britain (BAGB) that we cannot accept its campaign for the complete removal of the controls on the advertising of bingo clubs, but that it is open to them to resume discussions with the Gaming Board for Great Britain on the scope, if any, for some relaxation of the controls.

Boundary Commissions

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement of progress on the work of the boundary commissions on parliamentary constituencies; and when he expects the new boundaries to take effect.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The boundary commissions have a duty to keep the distribution of seats under continuous review. They are also required to present reports on the whole country 10 to 15 years after their previous report. The English commission's next such report is due between 1993 and 1998. I understand that the commission is likely to begin work in 1991. At present the commission is reviewing the Buckingham and Milton Keynes constituencies; revised draft proposals were published in November 1989, and in due course it will report. New parliamentary constituency boundaries come into effect at the general election following Parliament's approval of the commission's recommendations and the making of an Order in Council.

Nuclear Bunkers

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list, by local authority, how many nuclear bunkers have been built or provided by local authorities to date; and how many additional bunkers are being planned.

Mr. John Patten: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas) on 18 December 1989 at columns 18-19.

Sunday Trading

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many retail outlets in England and Wales have been prosecuted for trading on Sundays during each of the last four years; and if he will make a statement on the steps he is taking to secure widespread agreement to a reform of the existing law.

Mr. Mellor: Figures are not yet available for 1989. Those for the previous four years 1985-88 show that the number of prosecutions for Sunday trading offences in England and Wales were 647, 724, 646 and 536 respectively. The Government accepted the findings of the Auld committee that there was no satisfactory solution short of total deregulation. Since the defeat of the Shops Bill, the Government have made clear that they are prepared to consider reform short of total deregulation if a solution can be found which is widely accepted, enforceable, practicable and likely to command a parliamentary majority. No such solution has yet emerged.

Bail Lodging Places

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will undertake a review of the number of bail lodging places since the coming into force of the Social Security Act 1988.

Mr. John Patten: I see no need for such a review at the moment in the light of other measures we are already taking to increase the accommodation available for bailees. The target for the bail hostel development programme has been considerably increased to 1,000 new places by April 1993. Planned expansion in bail information schemes should allow the number of courts being served to increase from the current 45 to 100 courts by April 1992. We are also examining ways of increasing accommodation in the community for bailees and how bail information schemes and accommodation networks can best be developed.

Prostitution

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many men were convicted of kerb crawling in each of the last five years at (a) the South Western magistrates court and (b) courts in England and Wales;

(2) how many men were sent to prison for (a) kerb crawling and (b) living on immoral earnings in each of the last five years by the South Western magistrates court;

(3) how many men were sent to prison for (a) living on immoral earnings and (b) kerb crawling by courts in England and Wales in each of the last five years;

(4) how many times the maximum fine has been imposed on men convicted (a) at the South Western magistrates court and (b) courts in England and Wales of kerb crawling in each of the last five years;

(5) how many women were convicted of soliciting (a) at the South Western magistrates court and (b) in England and Wales during each of the last five years.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is given in the tables:

Planting of Evidence

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases of alleged planting of evidence were made last year against the police in England and Wales; and how many of these resulted in prosecutions.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Such information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will bring forward amendments to the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 in order to guard against the planting of evidence on suspects by police.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No. Such conduct, if proved, already constitutes an offence under the police discipline code, and I see no justification for amending the Act along the lines suggested.

Police Complaints Authority

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the findings of the Hertfordshire police, acting on behalf of the Police Complaints Authority, in the series of cases relating to PC Judd, and other officers, in Notting Hill in 1984-85.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No. I understand that the report of the investigation carried out under the supervision of the authority is under consideration by the authority. Home Office Ministers have no role in the process.

Message Switch Systems

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list, by region, the sites of all new message switch systems that have been installed in local authority emergency centres.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the manufacturers which have installed message switch equipment for local authority emergency centres; and what assessment has been made of their relative merits.

Mr. John Patten: The equipment is being supplied and installed by Chernikeeff Telecommunications Ltd. Installations are subject to technical acceptance by Home Office engineering staff.

South Yorkshire Police

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total number of additional posts applied for by South Yorkshire police authority since 1980; how many he has approved in this period; what was the basis on which he declined to accept the totals requested; and what assessment he has made of the effects of manpower levels on (a) morale and (b) crime prevention in South Yorkshire.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Applications have been made and approvals given in the years set out in the table.

Year	Posts applied for	Posts approved
1980-81	278	120
1983-84	[1]54	—
1985-86	9	—
1986-87	213	50
1987-88	52	20
1988-89	50	20
1989-90	50	27
1990-91	50	[2]20

[2] Approved subject to the police authority confirming willingness to meet its share of the cost.

Applications have been considered within the limits of the police growth which is affordable year on year, and with advice from Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary on the evidence of need and the ability to release police posts by recruiting civilian staff. We are not aware of any morale or crime prevention considerations which would justify different treatment of the police authority's manpower applications.

Refugees

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he is taking to assist refugees arriving at Heathrow and Gatwick airports who are without (a) food and (b) money.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: In October we agreed in principle to Home Office grant being made available to strengthen the voluntary sector assistance given to asylum seekers arriving at Heathrow and Gatwick who have no other means of support. An emergency fund to provide destitute asylum seekers with food and initial accommodation is now operated by the refugee arrivals project and the Refugee Council and the need for additional staff and strengthened reception arrangements is under consideration.

Gallows

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if gallows are still kept at any prison in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Mellor: One set of gallows is kept at Her Majesty's prison, Wandsworth.

John McCarthy

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from or on behalf of the Friends of John McCarthy, with respect to their ineligibility for charitable status; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: We have received no representations. I understand that in June 1988 the Charity Commission had correspondence about the question of charitable status with solicitors acting on behalf of the Friends of John McCarthy.

Betting Offices

Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when and how he intends to conduct the deregulation review of the opening hours of licensed betting offices; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The opening hours of licensed betting offices would be likely to be among the matters considered by an inquiry into the financing of horse and greyhound racing, since the racing and betting industries are interlinked. My right hon. and learned Friend is at present considering whether or not to establish such an inquiry. If in due course it seems right to conduct separately the review of betting office opening hours, the review will itself be conducted within the Government's policy on gambling, with no prior assumption about whether or not the hours should be varied, and in consultation with outside interests, including, for example, organisations representative of off-course and on-course bookmakers, betting office employees, horse racing and greyhound racing, the betting office licensing authorities, the police, the local authorities and those concerned with the study of gambling.

Animal Procedures Committee

Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he intends to make further appointments to the animal procedures committee; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: Following his appointment as the Vice-Chancellor of Cambridge, the chairman of the committee, Professor David Williams, has resigned from 31 December 1989. I am pleased to be able to announce that Lord Nathan has agreed to succeed him.

I am pleased to be able to announce further that Professor Barry Bridges, of Queen's university, Belfast; Dr. Fiona Broughton-Pipkin, of the Queen's medical centre, Nottingham; Dr. Susan Iversen, of Merck Sharp and Dohme Research Laboratories; and Professor Michael Spyer, of the Royal Free Hospital medical school, London, have also accepted appointments as members of the committee.

I should like to place on record my appreciation of the excellent way in which Professor Williams has chaired the committee since its formation following the passage of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986. I am grateful to Lord Nathan and the other new members for agreeing to serve on this committee.

PRIME MINISTER

National Trust Silver

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Prime Minister how much National Trust silver she has at Downing street; and when she intends to return the 20 pieces to Belton house, near Grantham, for the benefit of the nation.

The Prime Minister: There are 22 pieces of National Trust silver on loan to 10 Downing street from Belton house. This will be returned as and when requested by the National Trust.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Hazardous Waste

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what dates representations were made, and to whom, in respect of the drums of toxic waste currently in the constituency of Wentworth which are to be returned to the United States of America.

Mr. Maude: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution has been in close touch on this subject with the United States Environment Protection Agency since July 1989, most recently on 3 January 1990. Similarly, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and the Department of the Environment have been in contact with the United States embassy in London and a representative of the embassy was invited to call on the FCO for talks on 22 December.

Hong Kong

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many people emigrated from Hong Kong in each of the years from 1980 to date; and how many of these were heads of households.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 16 January 1990]: According to Hong Kong Government statistics, the estimated figures for emigration were as follows:

	Number
1980	22,400
1981	18,300
1982	20,300
1983	19,800
1984	22,400
1985	22,300
1986	19,000
1987	30,000
1988	45,800
1989	42,000

It is not possible to state how many emigrants were heads of household.

EMPLOYMENT

New Businesses

143. Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many new businesses were started over the past year.

Mr. Eggar: In 1988, the latest year for which figures have been published, the net increase in the number of VAT-registered businesses was 64,000, an average of just over 1,200 per week. This was the net result of 230,000 new registrations and 166,000 deregistrations.

ENERGY

Non-fossil Fuel Obligation

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has received details from area boards of how many non-nuclear projects have sought to be included within the non-fossil fuel obligation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: My Department has been informed of nearly 300 such applications. This is a very encouraging response.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what percentage of the national budget in each of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries is spent on Government-funded research into renewable energy sources.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The table sets out the percentage of the national budget in each of the OECD countries spent on Government-funded research, development and demonstration into renewable energy sources in 1988, the latest year for which information is available. The information was derived from published OECD reports (Energy Policy and Programmes of IEA Countries: 1988: OECD Outlook, December 1989; and OECD Main Economic Indicators, December 1989).

Note: Data on renewables expenditure are not available for Australia, New Zealand, Denmark, France, Ireland, Finland, and Turkey.

North Sea

Mr. Caborn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the extent of operations in the North sea, British section, by South African-owned or controlled companies.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Two South African-owned companies hold small interests in a total of four United Kingdom offshore petroleum production licences.

Plutonium

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his policy towards the control of the transportation of plutonium (a) by air, and (b) by sea from Sellafield to its major customers in Japan and West Germany.

Mr. Baldry: The transport of plutonium is covered by stringent international regulations. Transport options for returning the plutonium arising from the reprocessing of spent nuclear fuel at THORP are still under consideration. Before any decision is taken, all necessary safety and security aspects will be carefully considered.

HEALTH

Medical Instruments (Imports)

144. Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the percentage of the home market of medical instruments supplied by imports.

145. Mr. Orme: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the percentage of the home market of medical instruments supplied by imports.

Mr. Freeman: About 50 per cent. The United Kingdom remains a net exporter of medical equipment.

NHS Reform

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the area health authorities where members have taken a vote to consider the proposals for opting-out by hospitals in their area; and what were the results obtained.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department has not sought or recorded the results or deliberations by health authorities to date on self-governance and other NHS review issues. Formal applications for NHS trust status will not be invited until Parliament has given approval to the necessary legislation. At that time health authorities will have an opportunity to comment on individual applications for trust status as part of the formal consultation process.

Chickens

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of frozen whole chickens examined by the central public health laboratory and the percentage of them affected by salmonella in each year since 1980.

Mr. Freeman: The results of two surveys carried out by the food hygiene laboratory and division of enteric pathogens of the public health laboratory service on the frequency of salmonella in uncooked frozen chickens purchased by environmental health officers from supermarkets, butchers and other shops in north and west London are given in the table. There is no reason to believe that the samples were unrepresentative of the national picture.

Year	Number examined	Number positive	Percentage positive
1979-80	100	79	79
1987	101	65	64

Illegal Abortions

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his estimate of the number of illegal abortions based on statistics for maternal deaths, admissions to hospital following septic abortion, prosecutions for procuring illegal abortion and cases known to the police for the periods from 1960 to 1967, 1968 to 1975, 1976 to 1983 and 1984 to the most recent date.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Not all the information is available in the form requested. No meaningful estimate of illegal abortions can be derived from the available statistics on maternal deaths or treatment in hospital for septic abortion.

The available information on maternal deaths for the period requested is as follows:

Number of deaths from criminal abortion in England and Wales

1961-63	77
1964-66	98

Preliminary investigation shows no evidence of deaths for the period 1985-87.

Self-governing Hospitals

Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will describe the process by which a hospital decides to show an interest in becoming self-governing.

Mrs. Bottomley: The Government's proposals for enabling hospitals and other NHS units and services to achieve NHS trust status are set out in the NHS and Community Care Bill. The process was also described in our White Paper "Working for Patients" CM 555, and NHS review working paper 1—"Self-Governing Hospitals" published earlier last year. More details were also given in "Self-governing Hospitals: An initial guide" published last July, copies of which are available in the Library.

Smoking-related Diseases

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his latest estimate of the annual cost to the National Health Service of treating smoking-related diseases; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: It is not possible to estimate these costs accurately, but they may be of the order of £500 million each year. This figure relies on the proportion of mortality from different diseases attributed to smoking. These "attributability factors" are applied to the NHS expenditure on treating these diseases to derive a cost for smoking to the NHS.

Welfare Milk

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will reconsider the changes in the welfare milk scheme due to take effect on 28 January.

Mr. Freeman: No. The decision to implement the revised price structure was taken after an extensive period of negotiation, consultation and consideration. It takes account of the fact that the Department is a major buyer of liquid milk and reflects our policy of securing value for money in Government purchasing. The entitlement of beneficiaries to free welfare milk is not affected by this change.

Hospital Beds

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many of the various categories of hospital beds there are at present; and how many there were for the equivalent categories 10 years ago.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is given in the table.

Average daily number of available beds by sector NHS Hospitals, England, 1979 and 1988-89

	1979	1988-89
All specialties	361,670	282,937
Acute	148,725	123,484
Geriatric	55,139	51,042
Mental illness	89,045	62,999
Mental handicap	50,122	30,045
Maternity (General Practice and Obstetric)	18,640	15,367

Ambulance Dispute

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will hold further talks with National Health Service management on ways of ending the ambulance men's dispute.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Ministers meet National Health Service management regularly in order to discuss the ambulance dispute.

Hospital Grounds (Development)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospital grounds have been sold for development during 1985, 1986, 1987, 1988 and 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The information held by the Department does not differentiate between sales of hospital grounds and sales of hospital buildings nor between property sold for development or non-development.

Total sales of NHS properties in England are as follows:

	Acres realising	£ million
1985-86	1,085	84·9
1986-87	861	149·0
1987-88	886	204·0
1988-89	1,028	273·3

All proceeds are retained by health authorities for reinvestment in the service.

Consultants

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what opportunities there will be in 1990 for district health authorities to bid for additional consultants and their associated teams.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have no current plans for a further central initiative inviting district health authorities to bid for new consultant posts in 1990.

Ambulance Stations (Visits)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what date he last visited an ambulance station.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I opened Hexham ambulance station on 21 October 1988.

Generic Medicines

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what requirements exist for imports of generic medications to include an instruction leaflet in the English language.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Medicines (Leaflets) Regulations require that if a leaflet is supplied with any medicine it is to be in English. It is not mandatory under United Kingdom law to supply a leaflet, but European Community (EC) directive 89/341 introduces such a requirement effective in 1992, unless the necessary information is on the label. The content of leaflets to be supplied under directive 89/341 is to be laid down by a further directive which is expected to be discussed this year.

Training and Staffing

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what additional resources are being made available to local authorities to assist with training and staffing for the additional duties contained in the Children Act 1989 and the National Health Service and Community Care Bill.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We will take into account local authorities' additional responsibilities arising from these legislative changes in determining their grant entitlement for future years. We will also be making available grants for training in respect of the Children Act totalling £4 million over two years. This is in addition to the other training grants we make for staff working with the elderly, with children, and managerial personnel which will total nearly £17 million in 1990-91, all of which will have a role to play in preparing staff for new responsibilities. We have also announced our intention to introduce a further grant for local authorities from 1991-92 to assist them to develop services for the mentally ill.

NHS Maintenance

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the value of backlog maintenance for National Health Service properties in the Yorkshire regional health authority (a) in total and (b) by district health authority, for the latest available year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms. Harman) on 10 January at columns 666-69.

Myalgic Encephalomyelitis

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research is currently taking place into myalgic encephalomyelitis.

Mr. Jackson: I have been asked to reply.

The Medical Research Council, which receives its grant-in aid from this Department through the science budget, is not currently funding any research specifically into myalgic encephalomyelitis. It is, however, funding a study at the Institute of Psychiatry which is to investigate chronic fatigue in general practitioner attenders. The council also supports work in immune responses to the muscle, nerve cells and related structures which may have some relevance to the understanding and treatment of this condition. The Medical Research Council is always willing to consider soundly based scientific proposals in competition with other applications.

SCOTLAND

NHS (Savings Schemes)

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of savings to the health boards from every saving scheme.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information in the detail requested is not available centrally.

Works of Art

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will list (a) German expressionist, (b) 20th century Scottish, (c) Piccassos, (d) Dutch 17th century, (e) Italian renaissance, and (f) French impressionist works of art in Scotland, owned by the state; how much was paid by the state for each painting; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will list the works of art produced in (a) 1945 to 1964, (b) 1965 to 1977, (c) 1978 to 1987 and (d) 1988 to 1989 owned by the state; if he will indicate which of those were produced either partly or wholly by public funding; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I have no direct responsibility for any works of art in any of the categories listed. Information on items in these categories which may be held by non-departmental public bodies in Scotland, such as the National Galleries of Scotland, is not held centrally, but may be obtainable direct from them. Works of art held in the Government art collection are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Arts.

Job Creation

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library the latest notes of guidance issued on (a) the calculation of leverage ratios as per page 48 of "Public Expenditure to 1991-92: A Commentary on the Scotland Programme", (b) the calculation of cost per job created or safeguarded, gross, (c) the calculation of cost per job created or safeguarded, net, (d) the estimation of job displacement, (e) the rules about additionality when projects are aided by European Community funds and (f) the public expenditure treatment of such receipts.

Mr. Lang: There are no formal guidance notes on these matters. A full examination of value for money was carried out as part of the 1987 review of the Highlands and Islands Development Board, a copy of which can be found in the Library. This covered indicators (a) to (d). The report includes information on these indicators and the methods of calculation adopted. On item (e), the relevant European Community legislation governing the new structural funds regime, including additionality, is article 9 of regulation No. 4253/88. On item (f), the principle governing the public expenditure treatment of European Community receipts is that the expected level of such receipts is taken into account by Departments when public expenditure plans are prepared. General guidance on European Community finance questions is given in chapter 4 of "Government Accounting", which is in the Library.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report an analysis of any definition or classification changes which affect comparisons between (a) the table for programme 15.2 and 15.3 on page 40 of "Public Expenditure to 1991-92: A Commentary on the Scotland Programme" and (b) the table appended to the Secretary of State's statement to the House on 6 December, Official Report, columns 330-33.

Mr. Lang: There are no such changes.

Forestry Commission

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland under what circumstances permission is given by the Forestry Commission to allow the collection of money from the general public in respect of activities other than those provided by or promoted by the Forestry Commission.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Where, with the Forestry Commission's permission, organisations or individuals offer a service to visitors on commission land, charges for these services may be allowed under a variety of arrangements including leases and permits. Charitable bodies may also be given permission to make collections on commission property.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the policy of the Forestry Commission on the use of mountain bikes on Forestry Commission land; and whether any conditions are imposed restricting such use to (a) roads, bridleways and footpaths and (b) other land.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Forestry Commission places no restriction on the riding of mountain bikes on public rights of way, unless these are limited solely to pedestrian use. The commission also makes other routes available to cyclists, for use on a permissive basis.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the Forestry Commission has any policy to impose prohibitions on the use of cameras or video cameras on Forestry Commission land.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Restrictions are not imposed on the use of cameras or video cameras on Forestry Commission land for private purposes unless they are used in such a manner as to cause annoyance to any other person. However, if the cameras are to be used for commercial purposes the commission will normally make a charge.

Natural Heritage Agency

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which staffing posts of the proposed Natural Heritage Agency he intends to accommodate in the Nature Conservancy Council's existing headquarters at Life terrace, Edinburgh.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It is too early to decide on the headquarters location of the proposed agency or the distribution of its staff within Scotland.

Radioactive Waste Disposal

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how his Department intends to use the findings of the European Commission's PAGIS assessment of the suitability of Scottish geology for high-level radioactive waste disposal;

(2) if he will make a statement on the findings of the European Commission's PAGIS study into the suitability of Scottish geology for high-level radioactive waste disposal;

(3) what account he will take of the European Commission's PAGIS study findings in determining Government policy on the disposal of high-level radioactive waste in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to her on 16 January at column 144 by my hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment and Countryside.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what contribution his Department made to the European Commission's PAGIS study into the suitability of Scottish geology for high-level radioactive waste disposal.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Development Department was not represented on the PAGIS steering committee; the United Kingdom's representatives were drawn from the Department of the Environment and the National Radiological Protection Board.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of individuals have (a) registered for community charge in Scotland and (b) paid the charge.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It is estimated that over 99 per cent. of people liable for registration have been registered for the community charge. Information about the number of people who have paid the community charge is not held centrally, but we estimate that in most regions 85 per cent. to 95 per cent. of those liable have made some community charge payment with a figure of 98 per cent. in one region.

Civic Government (Scotland) Act

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether his Department has undertaken any review into the operation of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The operation of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 has been monitored since the Act came into force and a formal review of the Act is currently under way. We intend to publish a consultation paper later this year setting out our proposals for changes to the Act.

Sunday Trading

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has as to the number of shops trading on Sundays since the removal of restrictions on Sunday trading; and if he will make a statement on the effect on the Scottish economy.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It would not be possible to make such an estimate since, with a minor exception relating to hairdressers and barbers, statutory restrictions on Sunday trading such as those set out in the Shops Act 1950 did not and do not apply in Scotland.

Mentally Ill People

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what plans he has to provide additional support for mentally ill patients recently discharged from institutions and now living at home;

(2) what plans he has to provide extra community psychiatric nurses and social workers to provide for those with serious mental illness who are to live in the community;

(3) what plans he has to supply carers to patients with serious mental illness;

(4) what steps he proposes to take to ensure that mentally ill patients who were discharged from institutions have suitable accommodation with carers or relatives.

Mr Lang [holding answer 15 January 1990]: Local authorities have statutory responsibilities both for the care and support of persons in the community who suffer from mental illness and for the aftercare of persons discharged from hospital. Health boards have similar responsibilities in relation to Health Service provision for such persons and there are well-established arrangements for co-operation between health and social work services in the community.

In such cases local authorities must decide whether help is required with accommodation needs, including supported accommodation, and what other measures of assistance may be appropriate. Where continuing care or support is deemed to be necessary for persons living on their own, the need for home care services alongside the availability of any informal carer will commonly be considered. Decisions on the nature and extent of assistance to be provided in particular cases are for authorities themselves having regard to the resources available to them.

The recently published White Paper "Caring for People" (Cmd. 849) makes clear the intention of building on existing guidance on the discharge of patients from mental illness hospitals by requiring health boards and local authorities to prepare joint care plans for such persons on the basis of a full assessment of individual needs before discharge takes place.

Staffing at professional and other levels will be an important element in the community care plans which local authorities and health boards will be required to produce by 1 April 1991. As the White Paper makes clear, there will be central monitoring of progress in the implementation of these plans.

"Inside Intelligence"

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he is now in a position to give the total cost of all stages of the Lord Advocate v. The Scotsman and others in relation to "Inside Intelligence" by Anthony Cavendish.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 15 January 1990]: My right hon. Friend is not yet in a position to give the total cost of all stages of the legal action the Lord Advocate v. The Scotsman Publication and others relating to the book "Inside Intelligence".

Scottish Development Agency

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what is the cost for 1989-90 and 1990-91 of the central functions of the Scottish Development Agency listed on pages 89-90 of the Scottish Development Agency's annual report for 1988;

(2) what is the cost for 1989-90 and 1990-91 of the regional functions of the Scottish Development Agency listed on pages 90-92 of the Scottish Development Agency's annual report for 1988.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 15 January 1990]: There are no agency functions for which expenditure decisions are taken exclusively in the regional offices and information has not therefore been collected on the basis of a central-regional demarcation. Details of the agency's planned expenditure by activity in 1990-91 will appear in the commentary on the Scottish programme which will be published in February.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Disposable Incomes

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish figures detailing the disposable incomes of (a) single-earner married couples with two children aged under 11 years, and (b) lone mothers with two children aged under 11 years, assuming rent of £21·80 and rates of £9·00 in each case (i) when not in paid work and receiving income support, and (ii) when in full-time paid work earning (1) £80, (2) £100, (3) £120, (4) £140 and (5) £160 per week.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The information requested is set out in the table. The position of lone parents on housing benefit and community charge benefit will improve from October 1990 with a change in the earnings disregard from £15 to £25.

2. For earnings level £160 separate calculations have been done, but using the same assumptions and methods as in the Tax Benefit Model Tables.

Family Credit

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish figures showing the family credit ceilings for one and two-parent families of different sizes, with children of different ages in April 1988 and 1989, at constant and current prices and as percentages of average male and average female manual earnings, as appropriate.

Income Support

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the number of working families with children and a mortgage, whose net incomes, adding in child benefit, family credit and rate rebates as appropriate, but deducting income tax, National Insurance contribution, local authority rates and mortgage payments are (a) less than they would receive after 16 weeks on income support, (b) less than 20 per cent. above what they would receive after 16 weeks on income support, and (c) less than 40 per cent. above what they would receive after 16 weeks on income support.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: This information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Low-income Families

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether low-income families who apply for community charge benefit will be assumed to be getting all the family credit to which they are entitled; and whether the families will be informed about any such assumptions.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The community charge benefit regulations will allow a source of income that would be available to a claimant if he or she were to apply for it to be taken into account as a notional source of income. If a community charge benefit claimant appears to meet all the conditions for family credit but has not yet claimed that benefit, the local authority will advise them to claim it. In assessing the claim for community charge benefit, family credit will not be taken into account for 25 working days, which will allow the family credit claim to be determined. After this period family credit will be assumed to be in payment. In cases where family credit has already been claimed it will not be taken into account until actually received.

The notice of determination issued by the local authority will inform the claimant of any assumptions made about family credit and remind them of their duty to report all changes of circumstances, which include the receipt of family credit.

Benefit Claims

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will introduce the necessary amendments to enable those persons in full-time employment, who are laid off temporarily, to claim benefit in the manner available prior to changes in regulations recently introduced; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: We are monitoring the effects of recent changes to unemployment benefit rules on all those who claim. We have no plans to introduce special arrangements for this particular group.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Trade Deficit

130. Mr. Patchett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he intends to take to improve Britain's manufacturing trade deficit.

135. Mr. Stott: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he intends to take to improve Britain's manufacturing trade deficit.

137. Mr. Turner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he intends to take to improve Britain's manufacturing trade deficit.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The manufacturing trade deficit will narrow as the Government's tight monetary and fiscal policies continue to slow domestic demand.

131. Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the trade deficit.

136. Mr. Ted Garrett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on Britain's current trade deficit.

138. Mr. McCartney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on Britain's current trade deficit.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The latest information on the United Kingdom deficit in visible trade was published on 29 December 1989 in table 1 of the monthly press notice on the current account of the balance of payments, copies of which are available in the Library.

Nationalised Industries (Subsidy)

132. Mr. Hanley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much total subsidy was paid to the 10 largest nationalised industries in 1979; and how much was paid in the last full financial year to as many of them as remain nationalised.

Mr. Lilley: The 10 largest nationalised industries received subsidies of £684 million in 1978-79. Five of these have now been privatised. The remainder received £1,013 million in subsidy in 1988-89. These figures exclude capital grants and public dividend capital which, as they are not payments for current expenditure, do not fall within the national accounts or public expenditure survey definition of subsidy.

Manufactured Goods

129. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the balance of trade in manufactured goods; and if he will make a statement.

133. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the balance of trade in manufactured goods; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The information was published on 29 December 1989 in table 12 of the monthly press notice on the current account of the balance of payments, copies of which are available in the Library.

Interest Rates

134. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from British businesses regarding the present levels of interest rates.

Mr. Ryder: My right hon. Friend and I have received a number of such representations.

West Germany

139. Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current trade deficit with West Germany.

140. Dr. Reid: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current trade deficit with West Germany.

141. Ms. Short: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current trade deficit with West Germany.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current trade deficit with West Germany.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Information from which crude trade balances[1] may be derived can be found in the monthly review of external trade statistics, available from the Library of the House or on the Central Statistical Office databank which may be accessed through the Library.

[1] Crude balances slightly overstate deficits (or understate surpluses) since the value of imports, but not that of exports, includes insurance and freight.

Share Ownership

142. Sir George Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the numbers of new shareholders since 1979; and whether he intends to promote measures further to encourage the growth of individual share ownership.

Mr. Lilley: I have been asked to reply. The joint Treasury and stock exchange survey carried out in January and February 1989 estimated that approximately 9 million people own shares—20 per cent. of the adult population; a threefold increase since 1979.

Civil Servants (Living Costs)

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to assess how living costs in Sussex and the south-east affect Civil Service recruitment in those areas.

Mr. Ryder: None. Long-term pay agreements already cover over 95 per cent. of the Civil Service, and provide for variations in pay by location. Pay rates are determined in the light of the need to recruit and retain staff within what can be afforded.

Manufacturing Deficit

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what measures his Department is currently working on to decrease the manufacturing deficit.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The manufacturing trade deficit will narrow as the Government's tight monetary and fiscal policies continue to slow domestic demand.

Whisky

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the total tax and duty payable in the United Kingdom on a 1-litre, 40 per cent. proof bottle of (a) Japanese whisky or other spirit, and (b) Scotch whisky.

Mr. Ryder: The precise total amount of duty and tax depends on the value of the whisky. In both instances, each litre bottle bears United Kingdom excise duty of 630·8p plus value added tax at 15 per cent. of the price inclusive of all duties (equivalent to 3/23rds of the retail selling price). In the case of the Japanese products only, import duty of 12·8p per litre is charged under the common customs tariff of the European Community.

Exchange Rates

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, further to his reply dated 4 December 1989, Official Report, column 22, concerning the effect on manufacturing industry of the increase in the value of £ sterling against the deutschmark, whether the figure of 38 per cent. refers to volume or value.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The figure of 38 per cent. referred to the increase in the volume of manufacturing investment between the first quarter of 1987 and the third quarter of 1989.

Taxation

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much money was spent by the Inland Revenue on legal fees in connection with cases in the High Court for the recovery of tax revenues in each of the last five years in respect of (a) successful cases, (b) unsuccessful cases and (c) in total; whether the unsuccessful cases have been reviewed in each year by the Inland Revenue with a view to promoting legislation to avoid further loss of revenue; and whether he has identified the extent of tax evasion and avoidance which is taking place through the creation of business transactions carried out solely or mainly for tax reasons by United Kingdom based trusts, companies and individuals and trusts, companies and individuals based in (a) Jersey, (b) the Isle of Man, (c) Guernsey, (d) the Netherlands Antilles, (e) the Cayman Islands and (f) Liechtenstein.

Mr. Lilley: The amounts spent on legal fees for High Court cases could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The outcome of each case is reviewed for its legal implications. Because of their nature it is not possible to estimate reliably the extent of tax evasion or avoidance.

Departmental Relocation

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress Departments have made under the Government's relocation policy.

Mr. Ryder: On 9 February 1989 the then Paymaster General informed the House that over 34,000 Civil Service posts had been reported in the 1988 public expenditure survey as under review for location or relocation away from the south-east in accordance with the policy which had been announced on 31 March 1988. This policy does not involve any central targets for the number of posts relocated nor propose specific locations. Departments have instituted systematic review programmes to cover the location of all their work, with a view to taking advantage of the value for money benefits and advantages for staff and management which relocation can bring, and the benefits for our regional and inner-city policies of relocating work away from the south-east. It was emphasised that many reviews were then still at the earliest stage and that not all the posts would move.

Since early in 1988 decisions have been taken and announced to relocate well over 16,000 posts generally over the next two or three years. These include 3,700 by Inland Revenue, 2,550 by Ministry of Defence, 1,900 by Customs and Excise, 1,850 by Department of Social Security, over 1,100 each by Department of Trade and Industry, Home Office and the Department of Employment, and 1,000 by the Department of Health. About 9,000 posts have been found to be unsuitable for relocation in the short term, and Departments have extended their reviews to include some 6,000 additional posts, leaving nearly 14,750 in the review process. Nearly all the decisions announced so far involve moving work to areas which are the focus of the Government's regional or inner-city policies. Further announcements can be expected in due course.

These figures may be compared with the 12,000 posts moved or created outside London and the south-east between 1979 and 1987, and less than 5,000 moved between 1974 and 1979.

Successful relocation requires careful planning; Departments have therefore exchanged experience and, where appropriate, co-ordinated action with other relocating Departments, found alternative posts for some staff not wishing to move, and made good use of increased flexibility in the personnel management field.

Separate Taxation

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he will take to ensure that charities do not suffer a loss of income from covenants from married couples where one of the spouses is not paying income tax as a result of the introduction of separate taxation as from 1 April 1990.

Mr. Major [holding answer 21 December 1989]: A charity's claim to refunds of tax on payments received under covenants does not depend on whether the covenantor is, or is not, liable to pay tax on his or her own income.

A covenantor making a covenant payment to a charity deducts basic rate tax and pays over to the charity only the net amount. The charity is entitled to claim back that tax from the Inland Revenue.

If the covenantor is liable to tax on an equivalent amount of his income, he gets basic rate relief for the covenant payment by retaining the tax he has deducted from it. If he is not liable to tax on an equivalent amount of his income, he has to pay over to the Inland Revenue the tax he has deducted.

The introduction of independent taxation for married couples with effect from 6 April 1990 will mean that a husband and wife will become separate taxpayers. If one of them will not be liable to tax, the effect on his or her covenants will be no different from what happens now when a covenantor is a non-taxpayer—the payements will continue to be made net of tax to the charity, but the tax withheld will have to be paid over to the Revenue.

For the past year, Inland Revenue publicity material has drawn attention to the fact that couples who find themselves in this situation may want to review their covenant arrangements. That is a matter between covenantors and the charities that they support.

Uniform Business Rate

Mr. Richard Shepherd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what estimates he has made, on the basis of latest figures of the number of companies where profits and trading surpluses are lower that the unabated uniform business rate for each standard region;

(2) what estimates he has made, on the basis of latest figures, of the impact that the uniform business rate will have on companies' profits and trading surpluses for each standard region.

Mr. Chope: I have been asked to reply.

I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave him earlier today.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Salmonella

Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many incidents of salmonella cultured from individual, intact eggs have occurred in the past year.

Mr. Curry: These figures are not held centrally.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of domestic refrigerators in preventing the growth of salmonella-causing bacteria; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: I shall make an assessment when research currently being funded by my Department has been completed. Comprehensive advice to consumers on using domestic refrigerators has already been issued in the Government's food safety booklet, a copy of which I am sending to the hon. Member.

Cetaceans

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to require drift nets to be equipped with miniature electronic devices to help protect cetacean populations.

Mr. Curry: We have no evidence that drift nets cause a threat to cetacean populations in our waters. Nevertheless the Fisheries Departments are planning a general monitoring scheme on the incidental capture of cetaceans in United Kingdom fisheries, so that we can keep the matter under closer review.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the occurrence of ghost nets in fishing waters around Britain and their implications for populations of cetaceans.

Mr. Curry: We do not keep records of the numbers of nets lost at sea. Our scientific advice is that floating nets lost soon sink and—like bottom-set nets which are lost—quickly become entangled on the sea bed. We have no evidence that such nets have any implications for the incidental capture of cetaceans or thus for their populations.

Oil Spills

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list those vessels that carry or can be converted to carry oil spill dispersant which his Department operates.

Mr. Curry: Nine vessels of the Royal Navy fishery protection squadron, which carry out fishery protection duties for my Department, are equipped to spray oil dispersant. MAFF's two research vessels are not so equipped, but could transport drummed dispersant.

Knacker Industry

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will list the proposals he has put to the EEC on the knacker industry;

(2) what is the Government's policy on the knacker industry;

(3) what representations he has had from the United Kingdom's knackermen.

Mr. Maclean: Commission proposals for the disposal of animal waste including dead and casualty stock have recently been presented to Council. They could have serious implications for the means by which casualty animals are disposed of in the United Kingdom. I will be seeking a solution which adequately reflects both the needs of the industries concerned and the requirements of animal and public health. Organisations representing the industry have been consulted on the proposals and are being kept fully informed of developments.

Soft Fruit

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the total tonnage of soft fruit imports by country to (a) the United Kingdom and (b) Scotland in each of the past five years.

Mr. Curry: The total tonnage of soft fruit imports (mainly strawberries, raspberries and blackcurrants, both fresh and semi-processed) by country, for the United Kingdom in each of the past five years for which complete figures are available is listed in the table. No separate figures are available for Scotland.

Fishermen

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what schemes exist under which fishermen who have lost employment following agreements with other countries on fishing grounds may be compensated.

Mr. Curry: None.

Food Irradiation

Mr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he intends to investigate further the national consequences and toxicological effects of irradiation on food prior to its introduction; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: No. International expert committees and our own advisory committee on irradiated and novel foods (ACINF) have advised that the irradiation of food up to an overall average dose of 10 kilograys presents no toxicological hazard and introduces no special nutritional problems. This view was reaffirmed by the ACINF in its further advice to Ministers given after considering technical representations made during consultation. However, the ACINF recommended that the consumption and nutrient content of irradiated food should be monitored. We have already made it clear that we intend to implement this recommendation.

Meat Exports

Mr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which countries refuse to accept (a) imported beef or (b) imported cattle, respectively, from the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 12 January 1990]: The information requested is as follows:

(a) Japan (because of import regulations concerning foot and mouth disease) and Papua New Guinea (only fresh meat originating in Australia or New Zealand may be imported).

(b) All EC Member States in relation to cattle born before 18 July 1988, Australia, Finland, Israel, New Zealand, Sweden and the United State of America (because of concerns about Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy).

In addition, Germany has imposed restrictive certification requirements on trade in beef from the United Kingdom which I do not believe are justified by Community rules.

Simplesse

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food why the low-calorie fat product Simplesse was not subject to clearance by either the committee on toxicity or the advisory committee on novel foods and processes.

Mr. Freeman: I have been asked to reply.

Simplesse is made from traditional food ingredients (egg and milk proteins) and as such is subject to the controls of the Food Acts. It was considered by the advisory committee on novel foods and processes at its meeting on 23 September 1989. The committee concluded that the product did not constitute a novel food since neither the raw materials nor the production process are novel. It was considered that the potential use of the product may have nutritional implications and these remain under consideration.

DEFENCE

Low Flying

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many copies of the United States Air Force in Europe document entitled "USAF Tactical Fighter Low-level Flying Training in the Federal Republic of Germany Data Book" of December 1988 his Department has obtained; what was their distribution; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: Sufficient copies of this document are available to my Department and have been widely distributed. The contents of the document are a matter for the United States authorities.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many low-flying sorties have been carried out by (a) the Royal Air Force and (b) other North Atlantic Treaty Organisation air forces over the Don Valley constituency for the last year for which he has figures.

Mr. Neubert: Records are not kept of the number of military low-flying sorties carried out over individual constituencies.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) for Royal Air Force aircrew and (b) other North Atlantic Treaty Organisation air forces' aircrew, the chances of survival factors, when flying (i) under 100 ft, (ii) between 100 ft and 200 ft and (iii) over 200 ft.

Mr. Neubert: While studies into the survivability of Royal Air Force aircraft in combat have been carried out by the Ministry of Defence, the results are classified. However, it is generally accepted throughout the NATO air forces that as height decreases, survivability against hostile defence forces increases; and that survivability at very low levels is a balance between the risk from hostile defence forces and the risks arising from proximity to the ground and obstacles and that the latter risks can be reduced by adequate and realistic training to the extent possible in peacetime.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list by type and mark the current jet aircraft used by the Royal Air Force in low-flying sorties.

Mr. Neubert: The strike-attack, offensive support and reconnaissance aircraft of the Royal Air Force listed in the Statement on the Defence Estimates 1989 Cmd. 675-I (page 59) have a primary low-level role. Other Royal Air Force jet aircraft may also need to carry out a proportion of their training at low level in peacetime.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list by year since 1984 (a) the percentage of low flying, (b) the percentage of sorties and (c) the average flying duration time, carried out by (i) Buccaneer, (ii) Jaguar, (iii) Tornado and (iv) Harrier aircraft, used by the Royal Air Force.

Mr. Neubert: The information requested cannot be provided without disproportionate cost.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list by year since 1984 the number of confirmed cases of (a) unlawful low flying and (b) flying to cause annoyance by pilots of military jet aircraft; and what action was taken in each case.

Mr. Neubert: There have been two cases since 1984, both in the Royal Air Force, of unlawful low flying and flying to cause annoyance by pilots of military jet aircraft. Both cases were dealt with by court martial; the details are given in the following table:

Year	Number of cases	Section of Air Force Act	Charge	Sentence
1985	1	51	Unlawful low flying	£300 fine and severe reprimand
		52	Flying in a manner likely to cause unnecessary annoyance
1989	1	51	Unlawful low flying	Forfeitence of 18 months seniority and severe reprimand
		52	Flying in a manner likely to cause unnecessary annoyance

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the strategic requirements for Royal Air Force low-flying sorties during (a) daytime flying and (b) night-time flying; and what restrictions are imposed.

Mr. Neubert: I refer the hon. Member to the background information on low flying training provided in the Statement on the Defence Estimates 1988 Cmd. 675-I (page 30).

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the number of low-flying missions over Northumberland for each of the last five years for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: Records are not kept of the number of military low-flying sorties carried out over individual counties.

Hunting

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list by locations the actual sites where his Department's land is used for hunting with hounds.

Mr. Neubert: I refer the hon. Member to my hon. Friend's reply to him on 27 October 1989 (column 653). Records of actual sites where Ministry of Defence land has been used for hunting with hounds are not held centrally. This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

RAF Display Teams

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the programmes for the (a) Red Arrows display team and (b) other Royal Air Force display teams and aircraft during 1990.

Mr. Neubert: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces will write to the hon. Member as soon as the finally agreed list is available.

Skyguard

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the service branch and units which are, and which will be, operating the Skyguard monitoring equipment.

Mr. Neubert: When the Skyguard fire control radar system is used in the low-flying monitoring role, it is operated by 2729 Squadron Royal Auxiliary Air Force Regiment in conjunction with the RAF police. There are no plans to change these arrangements.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library the results of the Skyguard monitoring of low-flying military jet aircraft; what follow-up action will be taken; and how often these reports will be published.

Mr. Neubert: No. It is not the intention to publish detailed reports on individual Skyguard deployments, on which may depend disciplinary action. Each deployment will, however, be followed up and appropriate disciplinary or other action taken where appropriate. Three deployments of the Skyguard radar system in the low-flying monitoring role took place in 1989, all in conjunction with the Royal Air Force police. These deployments were at:

Knaresborough—27 to 29 June 1989
Penrith—1 to 3 August 1989
Alnwick—3 to 5 October 1989

While further analysis of the results is continuing, no evidence was found during those deployments of any deliberate or flagrant breaches of the United Kingdom low-flying regulations and they confirmed that aircrew have a healthy respect for the regulations. Information on further deployments will be made available to the House from time to time.

Airfields

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list, by location, the number of joint military/civil airfields there are in the United Kingdom;

(2) if he will list, by location, the number of joint military/civil airfields in the United Kingdom that are proposed or under consideration during the next five years;

(3) if he will make a statement, in the light of the 1992 European single market, on expanding the use of joint military and civil airfields in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Neubert: The operation of joint military/civil airfields is not possible under United Kingdom aviation regulations. However, some use of civil airfields is made by military aircraft, and civil aircraft can use military airfields, in some cases on a regular basis, subject to such flights being compatible with operational considerations. A number of proposals for additional civil use of military airfields are under consideration at present, but it is unlikely that the single European market will have a significant effect upon this activity.

Combat Body Armour

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement as to in what circumstances combat body armour will be issued to service personnel.

Mr. Neubert: Combat body armour will be issued to service men as an item of personal equipment as supplies become available.

WE177 Free-fall Bombs

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the life expectancy of the United Kingdom's WE177 free-fall bombs, before they become unserviceable.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The WE177 is subject to regular inspection, maintenance and refurbishment. It will remain in service for as long as it meets requirements for safety and serviceability.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of warhead development costs it is estimated would be spent in (a) the United States of America, and (b) the United Kingdom, for (i) the Trident warhead and (ii) the warhead for a tactical air-to-surface missile to replace the WE177 free-fall bomb.

Mr. Alan Clark: It has been the policy of successive Governments not to reveal details of this nature. For a broad indication on Trident, I refer the hon. Member to the fifth report of the Defence Committee (Session 1988-89, pages 38 and 39). On a replacement for the free-fall bomb, no decision has yet been taken.

RAF Finningley

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether there are any plans to change the current restrictions on the weight of civil aircraft using RAF Finningley.

Mr. Neubert: There are no specific weight restrictions on civil aircraft wishing to use RAF Finningley, providing they come within the pavement load classification group of the runway and aircraft manoeuvring areas. The strength of these surfaces permits the operation of most types of modern aircraft.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether there are any plans to change the flight paths of (a) military and (b) civil aircraft (i) taking off or (ii) landing at RAF Finningley.

Mr. Neubert: No.

Nuclear Warheads

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action he is taking to assess the security of long-term supply of special nuclear materials for his nuclear warhead production programme.

Mr. Alan Clark: Arrangements for the supply of all special nuclear materials are kept under regular review to ensure that the requirements of defence nuclear programmes are fully met.

Mid-air Collision (Hexham)

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will ensure that the findings of the board of inquiry into the mid-air collision near Hexham on 9 January will be made public; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if, in the light of the mid-air collision near Hexham, on 9 January, he will undertake a review of the training of air crews; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if, in the light of the mid-air collision near Hexham, on 9 January, he will undertake a review of the effectiveness of RAF co-ordination and information of low-flying exercises over each area at any particular time; and if he will make a statement;

(4) if, in the light of the mid-air collision near Hexham, on 9 January, he will ensure that every aircraft involved in a low-flying mission contains a device to monitor the height of the aircraft throughout the exercise, and that this is recorded for subsequent inspection; and if he will make a statement;

(5) when he expects the board of inquiry to report its findings on the mid-air collision near Hexham on 9 January; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: The board of inquiry into the mid-air collision near Hexham on 9 January 1990 will make its report as soon as it has completed its investigations. A summary of the board's findings will be published in the usual way. We shall take whatever action we consider necessary in the light of the board's report to minimise the risk of such an accident recurring.

Birth Defects

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what information he has on the rate of birth defects among the children of (a) personnel who have served on board Royal Navy nuclear-powered submarines and (b) personnel who have worked for the Atomic Weapons Establishment;

(2) what is the total number of children of service men who have served on board Royal Navy nuclear-powered submarines.

Mr. Neubert: The information is not available in the form requested.

Atomic Weapons Research Establishments

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will state what the current shortfall of staff is at the atomic weapons research establishments at Burghfield, Cardiff and Foulness among (a) administrative, executive, and clerical staff, (b) specialist staff, (c) craft industrials and (d) non-craft industrials.

Mr. Neubert: The current staff shortfalls at the AWE sites at Burghfield, Cardiff and Foulness broken down by category are as follows:

	Burghfield	Cardiff	Foulness
Administrative, Executive and Clerical Grades	10	10	1
Specialist Staff	—	2	30
Craft Industrials	34	—	14
Non Craft Industrials	8	—	13

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what financial criteria will be used to monitor the performance of the management contractors to be appointed at the atomic weapons research establishments.

Mr. Neubert: These details have yet to be decided.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the shortfalls of staff were at each of the four atomic weapons research establishments at the end of each year since 1980 for (a) administrative, executive and clerical staff, (b) specialist staff, (c) craft industrials and (d) non-craft industrials.

Mr. Neubert: The information is as follows:

	Aldermaston	Burghfield	Cardiff	Foulness
1 January 1988
Administrative, executive and clerical	100	12	5	1
Specialist	54	—	2	21
Craft industrials	29	26	—	5
Non-craft industrials	—	35	—	—
1 January 1989

	Aldermaston	Burghfield	Cardiff	Foulness
Administrative, executive and clerical	103	14	6	1
Specialist	155	5	1	21
Craft industrials	53	33	—	11
Non-craft industrials	52	18	—	6
1 January 1990
Administrative, executive and clerical	36	10	10	1
Specialist	135	—	2	30
Craft industrials	72	34	—	14
Non-craft industrials	60	8	—	13

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which firms have expressed an interest in bidding for the initial management contract at the atomic weapons research establishments.

Mr. Neubert: To date, expressions of interest in the initial management contract at atomic weapons establishments have been received from British Aerospace (Dynamics); British Nuclear Fuels; Brown & Root; Vickers; GEC; Hunting Engineering and Rolls-Royce.

Trident

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the atomic weapons research establishment, Aldermaston, has the capacity to undertake production of warheads for the Trident programme and for the tactical air-to-surface missile replacement for the WE177 free-fall bomb simultaneously.

Mr. Alan Clark: No decisions have yet been taken on a replacement for the existing free-fall nuclear bomb. It would not be in the national interest to discuss in detail the production capacity of the atomic weapons establishment.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Confederation of British Industry

16. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he next expects to meet the president of the Confederation of British Industry to discuss manufacturing industry.

Mr. Ridley: I look forward to a continuation of constructive dialogue with the president of the CBI on matters relevant to the well-being of British industry.

Information Technology

17. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what training his Department offers to its staff in the applications of information technology.

42. Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what training his Department offers to its staff in the applications of information technology.

Mr. Forth: A great deal of training on and about IT is available for all departmental staff. This includes general awareness, specific application skills, specialist and technical training, all of which is reinforced and supplemented by "at the desk" tuition.

64. Mr. Michael J. Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the United Kingdom's current balance of trade in information technology.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: According to provisional figures published by the Central Statistical Office, the United Kingdom has a crude trade deficit (i) in electronics and information technology manufactured goods (ii) of £3·0 billion for the year to June 1989.

Notes:

(i) Exports (fob) less Imports (cif)

(ii) Principal Products of Activity Headings 3301, 3302, 3441, 3442, 3443, 3444, 3453 and 3454 of the Standard Industrial Classification (Revised 1980).

61. Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how he proposes to support future academic research and development in information technology.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: DTI supports industrially relevant collaborative research in IT. Academic partners in projects are eligible for DTI support on the same basis as industrial partners under the terms and conditions of the research and technology initiative. However, funding for academic IT research is usually provided through the science and engineering research council and the United Kingdom funding contribution of EC programmes. DTI has no plans to change these arrangements.

38. Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will take steps to provide a more detailed analysis of the balance of trade in information technology.

118. Mr. Allen Adams: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will take steps to provide a more detailed analysis of the balance of trade in information technology.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Government already provide a considerable amount of detailed information on trade in information technology. The Central Statistical Office (CSO) publishes details of United Kingdom exports and imports of electronics and information technology manufactured goods in the Business Monitor PQ series as well as in Business Monitors MQ10 "Overseas Trade analysed in terms of industries" and MQ12 "Import penetration and export sales ratios for manufacturing industry". More detailed information is published in Business Monitor MM20 "Overseas Trade Statistics of the United Kingdom". HM Customs and Excise has appointed a number of marketing agents who can provide further detailed analyses. Export statistics for computing services, including software, are published by the CSO in Business Monitor SDQ9 "Computing Services". Information on imports of computing services is not readily available because of the inherent nature of the trade.

Manufactured Goods

18. Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the current balance of trade in manufactured goods with West Germany.

Mr. Redwood: In the first 11 months of 1989 imports of manufactures from the Federal Republic of Germany exceeded United Kingdom exports to that country by £9·0 billion.

82. Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the increase in import penetration of manufactured goods from 1979 until the most recent date for which figures are available.

73. Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the increase in import penetration of manufactured goods from 1979 until the most recent date for which figures are available.

116. Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the increase in import penetration of manufactured goods from 1979 until the most recent date for which figures are available.

Mr. Redwood: Import penetration in manufacturing industry rose from 27 per cent. in 1979 to 36 per cent. in the year ending March 1989.

22. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what has been the growth in imports of manufactured goods from the European Community since 1979.

77. Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what has been the growth in imports of manufactured goods from the EEC since 1979.

78. Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what has been the growth in imports of manufactured goods from the European Economic Community since 1979.

80. Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what has been the growth in imports of manufactured goods from the EEC since 1979.

Mr. Redwood: Imports of manufactured goods from the European Community have risen from £16·0 billion in 1979 to £45·7 billion in 1988, an increase of £29·7 billion.

86. Mr. Leadbitter: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will estimate the percentage of the home market of footwear supplied by imports.

121. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will estimate the percentage of the home market of footwear supplied by imports.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A total of 56 per cent. by value, in the first half of 1989.

West Midlands

21. Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what interest is being shown by foreign businesses in becoming established in the west midlands.

Mr. Forth: Foreign businesses are showing great interest in the west midlands. In 1988, 66 investment decisions were recorded involving projects by foreign companies in the region. These were forecast to create 3,656 new jobs. This made the west midlands the most popular area in the country in terms of the number of new projects. Interest remains high and while statistics are not yet available for 1989 it is expected that the 1988 figure will be exceeded.

Industry and Services (North-West)

23. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proposals he has for industry and service trade development in the north-west of England.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Through regional selective assistance and the consultancy and export initiatives, my Department will continue to support the development of industry and service trade in the north-west of England and throughout the United Kingdom.

Export Credits Guarantee Department

24. Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to visit Cardiff to inspect the work of the Export Credits Guarantee Department.

68. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to visit Cardiff and inspect the work of the Export Credits Guarantee Department.

Mr. Ridley: My right hon. and noble Friend the Minister for Trade has already visited Cardiff. I intend to do so shortly.

52. Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what consideration he gave to EC requirements in reaching his decision to privatise the Export Credits Guarantee Department; if he will list them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: In arriving at its decision on ECGD's future status and organisation, referred to in the written answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Eastwood (Mr. Stewart) on 18 December 1989, the Government were particularly concerned by the need (a) for ECGD to be able to respond effectively to the business opportunities created by the single European market; and (b) to ensure that ECGD would be able to maintain its intra-EC business in the event that the future development of Community law made the continued provision of Government support for short-term trade credit within Europe impossible.

If ECGD's insurance services group is to maintain and continue the improvements in performance and service for customers made over the past three years, the Government believe that it must be free to compete with all other insurers in Europe and that this can best be done by converting it into a private sector company.

29. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will make it his policy to ensure no loss or transfer of employment at the Insurance Service Group headquarters at Export Credits Guarantee Department ensues from the Export Credits Guarantee Department's privatisation announced on 18 December.

Mr. Ridley: I believe that the changes that I have announced offer the best prospects of securing jobs for the future. I do not expect any significant change in the numbers employed in ECGD Cardiff as a result of the change of status. Thereafter the number of people in the organisation will depend mainly on its success in expanding its business.

27. Mr. John Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received on the future of the Export Credits Guarantee Department.

75. Mr. McWilliam: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received on the future of the Export Credits Guarantee Department.

111. Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received on the future of the Export Credits Guarantee Department.

Petrol Retailing

25. Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has considered the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report into the petrol retailing industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: I am at present considering the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on the supply of petrol. I shall report to the House when it is published.

Mr. Redwood: All except Portugal, Greece and Spain were in one or other category in 1988, the latest year for which complete figures are available.

94. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which five industrial sectors have the most adverse balance of trade in 1989 between the United Kingdom and the rest of the European Community on the latest available figures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Defining industrial sectors as divisions of the Standard International Trade Classification Revision 3, information for the first 11 months of 1989 is:

Division		Deficit (£ million)
78	Road Vehicles	5,567
05	Vegetables and Fruit	1,204
65	Textile Yarn, Fabrics, Made-up Articles and Related Products	1,067
72	Machinery Specialised for Particular Industries	906
57	Plastics in Primary Forms	777

91. Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the EEC countries with which the United Kingdom has a manufacturing trade deficit.

106. Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the EC countries with which the United Kingdom has a manufacturing trade deficit.

108. Mr. Buchan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the EEC countries with which the United Kingdom has a manufacturing trade deficit.

114. Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the EEC countries with which the United Kingdom has a manufacturing trade deficit.

Mr. Redwood: In the first 11 months of 1989 the United Kingdom had a manufacturing trade deficit with the following countries: France, Belgium/Luxembourg, Netherlands, Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Denmark and Portugal.

Trade Deficit (OECD)

95. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries have either a trade surplus or a smaller trade deficit as a proportion of gross domestic product than the United Kingdom.

101. Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which OECD countries have either a trade surplus or a smaller trade deficit as a proportion of gross domestic product than the United Kingdom.

30. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he next plans to meet his EEC counterparts; and what subjects will be discussed.

49. Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he next plans to meet his EC counterparts; and what subjects will be discussed.

122. Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he next plans to meet his EEC counterparts; and what subjects will be discussed.

Mr. Redwood: I continue to keep in close contact with my EC counterparts on a whole range of matters.

Single Market

31. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any new initiatives to assist British industry to prepare for 1992.

48. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any new initiatives to assist British industry to prepare for 1992.

59. Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any new initiatives to assist British industry to prepare for 1992.

71. Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any new initiatives to assist British industry to prepare for 1992.

Mr. Redwood: My Department's "Europe Open for Business" campaign provides the most comprehensive information service available to business anywhere in the Community, including a 24-hour telephone hotline, and extensive written and audio-visual material. This is constantly updated and expanded to take account of developments in Brussels. We also encourage business to take advantage of the growing range of specialist help and advice available from private sector sources.

125. Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement regarding the deficit in the balance of payments and on the competitiveness of British industry for the single European market.

Mr. Redwood: The main reason for the balance of payments deficit has been the rapid growth in both investment and consumption in the United Kingdom. The strong growth in investment will in time produce additional capacity and enable industry to meet more of the demands placed on it. In the meantime it has been necessary to tighten monetary policy to encourage additional spending and to slow down the growth of spending. There are a number of indications that the tightening is having a significant impact.

The improved competitiveness of the United Kingdom since the 1970s can be seen in the fact that since 1980 manufacturing productivity growth in the United Kingdom has been faster than in all other major industrialised countries and since 1983 we have maintained our share of the value of world trade in manufactures after decades of decline. Further progress in liberalising financial services in Europe should help our internationally famous financial services sector gain further access to the EEC market.

97. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on merger and monopoly policy in the light of the single European market in 1992.

Mr. Redwood: The Government believe that improvement to the rules by which the European Commission examines mergers and the reduction or elimination of barriers to takeover throughout the Community are both essential aspects of the single European market programme. At the December Internal Market Council, major breakthroughs were achieved in both areas. The Council adopted the merger control regulation, which sets out Community powers to regulate large mergers with a Community dimension. The regulation will come into force in September 1990. In addition, the Commission proposed—and the Council accepted its proposal—to bring forward an action plan to tackle barriers to takeover by March 1990, which should help level the playing field for takeovers in the Community. Both developments are beneficial to United Kingdom industry and commerce, and an important step towards the completion of the single market.

British Steel (Golden Share)

32. Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received about his use of the golden share in British Steel.

72. Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received about his use of the golden share in British Steel.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A total of 57 per cent. by number in 1989.

Trade Deficit (Japan)

35. Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the current trade deficit with Japan; and how much of the deficit is accounted for by manufactured goods.

44. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the current trade deficit with Japan; and how much of the deficit is accounted for by manufactured goods.

62. Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the current trade deficit with Japan; and how much of the deficit is accounted for by manufactured goods.

Mr. Redwood: In the first 11 months of 1989 the deficit in total visible trade was £4·6 billion. In the same period the deficit for manufactured goods was £4·7 billion.

FIMBRA

36. Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on FIMBRA.

110. Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on FIMBRA.

Mr. Redwood: The Financial Intermediaries, Managers and Brokers Regulatory Association is one of five self-regulating organisations recognised by the Securities and Investments Board under the Financial Services Act 1986. It is responsible for authorising independent investment intermediaries to conduct investment business and monitoring their compliance with the rules and regulations made under the Financial Services Act. In common with other Financial Services Act regulators, FIMBRA is in the process of reviewing certain aspects of its own rulebook in the light of changes to the Financial Services Act contained in the Companies Act 1989. Questions regarding the recognition of FIMBRA are matters for the Securities and Investments Board.

Consumer Protection

37. Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has plans to strengthen legislation on consumer protection.

51. Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has plans to strengthen legislation on consumer protection.

Mr. Forth: We intend to improve the protection given to consumers in a number of ways, including the introduction of an order under the Prices Act 1974, as amended, on price indications and unit pricing, and changes to other legislation affecting consumers' interests.

Rover Group

39. Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a further statement about the sale of Rover to British Aerospace.

Mr. Ridley: I have nothing to add to my statement of 30 November 1989.

Waste Management

40. Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to encourage industry to reduce the volume of its waste.

Mr. Forth: The promotion of waste minimisation is one of the objectives of my Department's environmental programme launched in May last year. This and certain other aspects of the programme are being developed by the Department's business and the environment unit (BEU), which was formed in June. A business guide to waste minimisation, entitled "Cutting Your Losses", was published by the BEU in November. To date there have been over 4,000 inquiries for the guide. A conference on waste minimisation, organised jointly by my Department, the CBI and the Department of the Environment, was also held in November and a series of regional seminars is planned for 1990. The programme of action is being developed further and I am confident that, together with the Department's work to promote the economic recycling of industrial and domestic waste materials, it will make a significant contribution to the reduction of waste in the United Kingdom.

Securities and Investments Board

41. Mr. Eadie: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he next plans to meet the chairman of the SIB; and what will be discussed.

Mr. Redwood: My right hon. Friend and I meet the chairman of the Securities and Investments Board as frequently as is necessary. I expect to meet him shortly when a range of topics concerning the regulation of financial services will be discussed.

55. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received concerning the Securities and Investments Board and its associated bodies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: My right hon. Friend and I have received a considerable number of representations on a variety of subjects relating to the regulation of financial services.

Building Societies

4. Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has any plans to limit mergers and tied insurance arrangements involving building societies.

Mr. Redwood: Mergers and proposed mergers involving building societies come within the scope of the normal competition legislation. Under the Fair Trading Act 1973, the Director General of Fair Trading has a duty to keep himself informed of merger activity and to advise the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on whether or not particular mergers should be referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission for investigation. I have powers under the Fair Trading Act to prevent a merger only if I have referred it to the commission and the commission has concluded that the merger would operate against the public interest.

In addition, the Director General of Fair Trading has powers under the Fair Trading Act and the Competition Act 1980 to initiate investigations into complaints about abuses of monopolies and anti-competitive practices. If the hon. Member has any evidence to suggest that tied insurance arrangements involving building societies are an abuse of a monopoly or an anti-competitive practice he should bring it to the attention of the director general.

Post Offices

45. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he next proposes to meet the chairman of the Post Office to discuss the Post Office network in rural areas.

Mr. Forth: I meet the chairman of the Post Office regularly to discuss a wide range of issues of mutual interest and concern.

Industries (Rural Areas)

47. Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to assist industries in rural areas.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Government's policies are designed to assist industry in all parts of the country. Specific measures of support to industry in rural areas are the responsibility of my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for the Environment and for Wales and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Textiles

50. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the balance of trade in textiles in the last available quarter.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Imports of textiles (SITC division 65) exceeded exports by £372 million in the third quarter of 1989.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assistance he is proposing to give to support the British textile industry.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Firms in the United Kingdom textile and clothing industry are eligible for assistance under approved general aid schemes and, if located in assisted areas, regional aid schemes. A wide range of practical help is also available from my Department under the enterprise initiative. The European Commission has operated a ban on sectoral aid schemes for the industry since 1985.

65. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the wool textiles industry in West Yorkshire.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The industry makes a significant contribution to the prosperity of the region. Since the early 1980s the United Kingdom wool textile industry as a whole has made a good recovery, recording significant gains in productivity and achieving an excellent exports performance. United Kingdom exports reached a record £613 million in 1988, with a new record likely in 1989; the industry also enjoys a favourable balance of trade.

West Germany

53. Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the level of United Kingdom trade with West Germany.

76. Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the level of United Kingdom trade with West Germany.

Mr. Redwood: Imports from West Germany into the United Kingdom between January to September 1989, when compared with the same period in 1988, rose from £12·9 billion to £14·8 billion, an increase of 14·7 per cent. Total United Kingdom exports to the Federal Republic increased in the same period from £7 billion to £7·9 billion, an increase of 12·9 per cent. United Kingdom non-oil exports rose from £6·3 billion to £7·2 billion, an increase of 14·3 per cent.

93. Mr. Jack Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the current balance of trade in manufactured goods with West Germany.

8. Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what Britain's manufacturing trade balance with West Germany was at the end of 1989 or at the latest date available.

Mr. Redwood: In the first 11 months of 1989 imports of manufactures from the Federal Republic of Germany exceeded United Kingdom exports to that country by £9·0 billion.

Certification and Standards (EC)

54. Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to ensure consumer representation on committees dealing with standards and certification in Europe.

74. Mr. Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to ensure consumer representation on committees dealing with standards and certification in Europe.

81. Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to ensure consumer representation on committees dealing with standards and certification in Europe.

Mr. Forth: Such committees are made up of representatives of the national standards bodies of Europe, not interest groupings. In the case of the United Kingdom, it is therefore for the British Standards Institution (BSI) to determine the composition of the delegation, which acts in accordance with a brief previously agreed by the relevant BSI committee.

My Department provides a measure of financial support to help consumer representatives take part in BSI committee work and in European standards work, should they be selected to form part of the delegation.

Recycling

56. Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what further steps he is taking to promote the recycling of plastics, metals and paper.

92. Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what further steps he is taking to promote the recycling of plastics, metals and paper.

107. Mr. James Lamond: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what further steps he is taking to promote the recycling of plastics, metals and paper.

Mr. Forth: Ministers and officials continue to encourage the economic recycling of a wide range of materials, including plastics, metals and paper, through participation in conferences, seminars and exhibitions, and by the preparation and publication of information brochures and education packs. The recycling advisory group, set up late last year, is currently deliberating upon the best means of securing significant increases in the amounts of domestic and industrial waste being recycled in the United Kingdom, and the Environmental Protection Bill now before the House also contains measures to encourage recycling.

Retailing

57. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will institute a departmental study into problems in the United Kingdom retailing sector.

Mr. Forth: No.

Retail Goods (Safety)

58. Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps his Department is taking to monitor the safety of retail goods.

99. Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps his Department is taking to monitor the safety of retail goods.

123. Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps his Department is taking to monitor the safety of retail goods.

Mr. Forth: My Department works closely with the trading standards departments of local authorities, which have the statutory duty to enforce consumer safety legislation, notably in the development of modern, computer-based information systems that enable the details of hazardous products to be made available urgently throughout the country. My Department also monitors the accident statistics obtained through the home accident surveillance system (HASS).

Barlow Clowes

60. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received from, or on behalf of, Barlow Clowes investors since his statement on 19 December.

Mr. Ridley: I have received a number of representations from, or on behalf of, Barlow Clowes investors since my statement on 19 December. The majority of investors have expressed their complete satisfaction with the decision that I announced.

Citizens Advice Bureaux

63. Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he last met representatives of the citizens advice bureaux to discuss their future funding requirements.

103. Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he last met representatives of the citizens advice bureaux to discuss their future funding requirements.

115. Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he last met representatives of the citizens advice bureaux to discuss their future funding requirements.

124. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he last met representatives of the citizens advice bureaux to discuss their future funding requirements.

Mr. Forth: The funding of individual citizens advice bureaux is a matter for local decision, and my Department is not involved in those discussions. I have, however, met representatives of the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux and of Citizens Advice Scotland in recent months and among the topics discussed was their funding requirements.

Regional Policies

67. Mr. Robert Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he has taken to ensure that the south-west is benefiting from regional policies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My Department has opened satellite offices in Dorset and Wiltshire, in addition to the offices in Avon, Cornwall and Devon, to ensure a greater and more local delivery of DTI services to the business community. In addition, the Department, in conjunction with others, has sought to maximise aid from the European Community to eligible areas in the south-west and continued to provide regional grants to businesses operating in or setting up in the assisted areas. Within Devon and Cornwall we have, with financial support, helped establish a South West Export Federation and in Avon, Devon and Dorset are providing funding for export development advisers. Both those initiatives are designed to increase the volume of exporting by south-west companies. My Department is the largest contributor to the Devon and Cornwall development bureau, supports the activities of English Estates in the south-west and, through my regional office, promotes and supports numerous other initiatives aimed at improving the economic performance of businesses in the south-west.

105. Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received on regional policy.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I receive regular representations on regional policy issues.

Merchant Shipbuilding

69. Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the future of British merchant shipbuilding capacity.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow (Dr. Godman) on 9 January, Official Report, column 598.

100. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many orders for merchant vessels were placed with United Kingdom shipyards in 1989.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Complete information for 1989 is not yet available. According to departmental records, 27 new orders for merchant vessels were placed with United Kingdom shipyards in the first 10 months of 1989.

Ireland

70. Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what are the present trends in value of imports from, and exports to, the Republic of Ireland.

Mr. Redwood: Present trends indicate rising imports from Ireland and likewise rising exports to the Republic of Ireland from the United Kingdom.

In 1988 the value of United Kingdom exports to the Republic of Ireland was £4,057 million. In the first 11 months of 1989, the figure was £4,316 million.

The value of Irish exports to the United Kingdom in 1988 was £3,879 million. The figure for the first 11 months of 1989 was £3,941 million.

Over the past four years exports to Ireland have risen at a slower rate than imports, therefore the balance has contracted. Figures available for 1989, however, suggest a reversal in this trend.

Britain maintains a significant share of the Irish market —over 42 per cent. in 1988—double that of our main competitor and Ireland's second largest supplier, the United States of America. Ireland meanwhile has a 3·6 per cent. share of the United Kingdom market.

Channel Tunnel

79. Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to ensure that businesses in the regions of England and in Scotland and Wales benefit from the increased trade expected to result from the completion of the Channel tunnel.

Mr. Redwood: The DTI regularly receives representations from business about the importance of adequate road and rail links to the Channel tunnel if the United Kingdom is to derive full benefit from the tunnel and the single market. These are matters on which I and my colleagues make our views known to our right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport.

Science and Technology Parks

83. Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action he is taking to assist the development of science and technology parks.

96. Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action he is taking to assist the development of science and technology parks.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Science parks grew very rapidly in the 1980s. Regional development agencies and local authorities helped finance this growth, but increasingly private sector funding is being channelled into the continuing expansion and development of science parks, and I see no need for a central Government initiative.

Mining Engineering Exports

84. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he last met representatives of Britain's mining engineering companies to discuss assistance with their export performance.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Since taking office I have not met representatives of Britain's mining equipment manufacturing companies.

Supersonic Airliners

85. Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement about research and development into the next generation of supersonic airliners.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I believe that it is widely accepted that a next generation supersonic transport (SST) would involve a major international collaborative effort because of the very substantial investment which would be needed. It is for industry to decide whether a new SST could be a sound commercial, environmental and technological project—and to initiate the necessary research in collaboration with international partners.

My Department has limited funds available to promote collaborative civil aeronautical research projects, and consideration could be given to their use to help United Kingdom industry take advantage of opportunities in this area. Research into the environmental implications would be of particular importance.

HOTOL

87. Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a further statement on the future of HOTOL.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The future of HOTOL is a matter for the United Kingdom companies concerned. The Government remain ready to assist the companies to find suitable international collaborators.

Stock Exchange

98. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he next plans to meet the chairman of the stock exchange; and what will be discussed.

109. Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he next plans to meet the chairman of the stock exchange; and what will be discussed.

Mr. Redwood: My right hon. Friend and I meet the chairman of the international stock exchange whenever appropriate to discuss financial services topics of mutual interest.

Washing Machines

102. Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will estimate the percentage of the home market of washing machines supplied by imports.

117. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will estimate the percentage of the home market of washing machines supplied by imports.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A total of 37 per cent. by value, in the first half of 1989.

Korea

104. Mr. Archer: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will introduce an embargo on imports from Korea.

Mr. Redwood: No.

Trade Barriers

113. Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action he is taking to ensure that the EEC does not erect protectionist trade barriers.

Mr. Redwood: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer which I gave him on 6 December 1989, at column 290.

Bankruptcies

119. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what are the latest figures for bankruptcies among small businesses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Information on the size of businesses going into bankruptcy is not available.

Industrial Investment

120. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent representations he has received regarding industrial investment.

Mr. Redwood: I have received a number of recent representations on industrial performance and the Government's policies towards industry. Investment is one of the main subjects covered in most of these representations.

City Task Forces

126. Mr. Robert Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many inner-city task force projects were approved in 1989.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A total of 611 projects designed to assist in the economic regeneration of the communities in inner-city task force areas were approved in 1989.

Research Council

127. Mr. Lord: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the outcome of the European Community Research Council held on 15 December 1989.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I represented Her Majesty's Government at the meeting of the Community's Council of Ministers (Research) in Brussels on 15 December.

The council reached a unanimous agreement on a new framework programme for 1990-94. The total level of funding agreed was 5·7 becu (£4·2 billion), comprising 2·5 becu (£1·8 billion) for 1990-92 and 3·2 becu (£2·3 billion) for 1993-94. The programme will cover Community R and D activities in the following six main areas:

1. Information and communications technologies
2. Industrial and materials technologies
3. Environment
4. Life sciences and technologies
5. Energy
6. Human capital and mobility

Specific proposals will now be put forward by the Commission under the 15 separate programme lines that were established by the Council.

Her Majesty's Government regard this as a very satisfactory outcome of the negotiation on the new framework programme, both as regards the overall level of resources and the technical contents, for which there are clear priorities and objectives. We have also ensured that the decision will not prejudice the review of the current inter-institutional agreement on budgetary discipline.

The Council agreed that it would be logical to conduct future R and D at the Community level on the basis of interlocking rolling programmes. These would have the advantage of allowing additional flexibility in the management of specific programmes in the light of full and effective evaluation carried out as part of a mid-term review.

In addition, the Council adopted a research and technical development programme, under the current 1987-91 framework programme, in the field of management and storage of radioactive waste covering the period 1990-94. This programme has a budget of 79·6 mecu (£58 million): the objective being to develop systems for radioactive waste management which ensure the safety of the public and the protection of the environment.

Also under the 1987-91 framework programme, the Council agreed a common position on the human genome analysis programme.

The Council agreed a statement on the possibility of research co-operation with eastern Europe and invited the Commission to come forward with specific proposals.

Privatisation

128. Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many companies have been returned to the private sector by his Department since 1979.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) on 9 January [columns. 517—18]. My Department had primary responsibility for returning seven companies to the private sector.

Exporters

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what measures he is taking to help British exporters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: My Department and the Foreign and Commonwealth Office provide, through the export initiative, a wide range of help, advice and support to United Kingdom exporters at each stage of the exporting process. It is, however, for individual firms to decide whether they should export. Our role is to help them reach these decisions and to provide the services they require to help them enter export markets.

It is encouraging to see that the volume of non-oil exports in the three months to November 1989 was 13 per cent. higher than a year earlier.

Renovations

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any conveniently available figures for the (a) value and (b) size of his Department's property being renovated by the Property Services Agency and as to how much priority one Department of Trade and Industry property is not being renovated owing to shortage of funds.

Mr. Forth: (a) Department of Trade and Industry occupies approximately 406,000m² of the Civil Service estate, but figures are not conveniently available for the value of these occupations.

(b) Responsibility for maintenance of the civil estate, under the Property Repayment System (PRS) arrangements, is shared between PSA and Departments. On 24 May 1989, Sir Gordon Manzie, chief executive of PSA, informed the Environment Committee that, at current funding levels, it should be possible to clear the backlog of priority maintenance work on the civil estate as a whole by 1995-96. (HC 403 (1988-89) EV.p.24). There is, however, no readily available information relating the backlog to individual Department occupations.

Eastern Europe

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) how many United Kingdom firms have current commercial contracts with Yugoslavia; and what is his estimate of the value of those contracts in £ sterling;

(2) how many United Kingdom firms have current commercial contracts with the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics; and what is his estimate of the value of those contracts in £ sterling;

(3) how many United Kingdom firms have current commercial contracts with Hungary; and what is his estimate of the value of those contracts in £ sterling.

(4) how many United Kingdom firms have current commercial contracts with Poland; and what is his estimate of the value of those contracts in £ sterling;

(5) how many United Kingdom firms have current commercial contracts with Czechoslovakia; and what is his estimate of the value of those contracts in £ sterling;

(6) how many United Kingdom firms have current commercial contracts with Romania; and what is his estimate of the value of those contracts in £ sterling;

(7) how many United Kingdom firms have current commercial contracts with Bulgaria; and what is his estimate of the value of those contracts in £ sterling.

Mr. Redwood: The Government do not have comprehensive information about the number or value of commercial contracts with the east European countries listed by the hon. Member. Such information as my Department receives about individual contracts is commercially confidential and cannot, therefore, be revealed.

Missile Technology Control

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list all companies in the United Kingdom producing components or information which came under the terms of the missile technology control regime.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 15 January 1990]: This information is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. G. J. Mulcahy

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the positions currently held by Mr. G. J. Mulcahy who has served as a Government-appointed director on British Telecom plc from 19 October 1988.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 16 January 1990]: Details of the current directorships of all of the directors of British Telecom plc are publicly available from the register of directors maintained by the company in accordance with section 288 of the Companies Act 1985. Details are also publicly available from the Register of Companies. Any other positions currently held by Mr. Mulcahy are a matter for him.

Manufacturing

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the increase in manufacturing output less food, since 1973 and 1979, respectively, and the increase in the volume of manufactured imports.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested on manufacturing output, less food cannot be provided without incurring disproportionate cost. Volume indices of manufactured imports can be found on the CSO databank, which is accessible through the House of Commons Library.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

European Single Market

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list which of the 300 steps necessary for the achievement of the single market in 1993 have been transported into legal form in all member states; and which have yet to be dealt with.

Mr. Redwood: I have been asked to reply.

Commission Communication (Section (89) 2098 on 4 December 1989) presented to the Internal Market Council on 21 December identified the following 10 directives that have been implemented in all member states. They include a number of measures which have time derogations in limited member states. For a more detailed picture of the state of play on implementation, I refer the hon. Gentleman to my answer of Tuesday 9 January to my hon. Friend the Member for Corby (Mr. Powell).

Various Controls

1. Duty free fuel contained in fuel tanks of commercial motor vehicles Directive 85/347.

Veterinary and phytosanitary controls

2. Hormone growth promoters Directive 85/358.

3. Antibiotic residues Directive 86/469.
—control of residues Directive 469.

4. Control of foot and mouth disease Directive 85/511.

5. Amendments to Directive 77/93 (plant health) Directive 85/547.

6. Amendment of Directive 79/117 (ethylene oxide) Directive 86/355.

Pharmaceuticals and high-technology medicines

7. Amendment to Directive 65/65 concerning medical specialities Directive 87/21.

Food Law

8. Sampling and methods of analysis Directive 85/591.

Capital Movements

9. Operations such as transactions in securities, admission of securities and long-term commercial credits Directive 86/566.

10. Units in collective investment undertakings for transferable securities Directive 85/583.

Romania

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what evidence the Government have about food supplies in Romania; what amount of food and medical aid has been sent to Romania since the revolution; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We do not yet have any reliable statistics on food supplies in Romania. The Romanian authorities have requested several hundred thousand tonnes of food from western countries. A European Commission team examined these needs in Bucharest on 15 and 16 January and we expect proposals for a food aid package soon.

Substantial quantities of urgent medical aid have already been sent to Romania from both public and private sources. The United Kingdom is providing immediate help in the form of medical equipment and literature, but figures for the total quantity are not yet available. We are now considering how best we can, in co-operation with other donors, respond to Romania's longer-term needs.

China

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the Chinese Government about the lifting of martial law in China and the continuation of martial law in Tibet; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: We have suspended normal ministerial contacts with the Chinese Government in line with the declaration on China at the Madrid European Council. We welcome the lifting of martial law in Peking as a positive move in the right direction. We hope the Chinese Government will now take further steps to strengthen the protection of human rights throughout China, including the lifting of martial law in Tibet.

Eastern Europe

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what advice his Department is giving to those people considering travel to East European countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Department's general advice to those who inquire is that there is no reason not to visit eastern European countries but that visitors should if possible avoid demonstrations and large crowds. Petrol may be in short supply.

The Department has published a warning to travellers considering visiting Romania that many facilities, in particular medical facilities, are stretched and may not be readily available.

Hong Kong

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has entered a reservation to CITES on behalf of Hong Kong to allow the current ivory stockpile in the Crown Colony to be placed on the market.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in the House on 17 January.

TRANSPORT

Traffic Congestion

65. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimates he has made of the costs to business of traffic congestion in the south-east.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimates he has made of the costs to business of traffic congestion in the south-east.

64. Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimates he has made of the costs to business of traffic congestion in the south-east.

63. Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimates he has made of the costs to business of traffic congestion in the south-east.

Mr. Atkins: There is no way of making accurate overall estimates of the cost to business of traffic congestion in the south-east.

Vehicles (Energy Consumption)

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what percentage of total energy consumed by transport in the United Kingdom was accounted for by commercial goods vehicles and vehicles other than private cars annually, for 1985 to 1989 inclusive;

(2) what percentage of total energy consumed by transport in the United Kingdom was accounted for by private cars annually for 1985 to 1989 inclusive.

Mr. Atkins: Data for 1989 are not yet available. Estimates for 1985 to 1988 are as follows:

Estimates of energy used by road vehicles as a percentage of all energy used in transport in the United Kingdom

Percentage

Vehicle	1985	1986	1987	1988
Cars	50·4	51·0	51·3	51·4
Goods vehicles	22·7	22·7	23·1	23·7
Other vehicles	6·2	5·9	5·4	4·7

Locomotives

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of total energy consumed by transport in the United Kingdom was accounted for by (a) electrically powered locomotives and (b) diesel-powered locomotives annually, for 1985 to 1989 inclusive.

Mr. Portillo: Data for 1989 are not yet available. Estimates for 1985 to 1988 are as follows:

Energy used by rail as percentage of all energy used in transport in the United Kingdom

Percentage

Energy	1985	1986	1987	1988
Electricity	0·6	0·6	0·6	0·6
Petroleum	2·2	2·0	1·8	1·7

Note: These figures will include some energy which was not used for powering locomotives.

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what percentage of the total rail freight traffic was hauled annually by (a) electrically powered locomotives and (b) diesel-powered locomotives for 1985 to 1989 inclusive;

(2) what percentage of total rail passenger traffic was hauled annually by (a) electrically powered locomotives and (b) by diesel-powered locomotives for 1985 to 1989 inclusive.

Mr. Portillo: This information is obtainable from table 3.7 on page 137 of the "1978-88 Transport Statistics Great Britain", a copy of which is held in the Library.

Domestic Flights

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of total energy consumed by transport in the United Kingdom was accounted for by United Kingdom domestic flights annually for 1985 to 1989 inclusive.

Mr. McLoughlin: This information is not available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

British Rail

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the objectives of his policy for the future of British Rail.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend set out the Government's objectives for British Rail in his statement to the House on 19 December.

Road Improvements

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list all the trunk road improvement schemes which are due to start in England in 1990-91; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: It is too soon to provide a list. The composition of the new starts programme will depend on the completion of outstanding procedures on individual schemes and on price movements over the coming months.

Scottish Lowland Airports

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what considerations of policy he has taken into account in deciding the timing of his forthcoming announcement of the results of his review of Scottish lowland airports policy; and if he will make a statement;

(2) when he expects to announce his decision on the review of Scottish lowland airports policy.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. Friend has said that he expects to be able to announce his decision on future policy for the Scottish lowland airports early this year. That remains the position. We recognise the need to end uncertainty over the policy, but we shall not be reaching a decision until the views expressed in the over 1,100 responses received during the consultation have been carefully considered. My right hon. Friend has written to my hon. Friend to stress that there is no question of external considerations being allowed to affect either the decision itself or its timing.

Household Refuse

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will consider requiring special licences for the transportation by road or rail of partly decomposed household refuse from controlled local authority tips.

Mr. Atkins: There are no specific guidelines. The road transport of dangerous goods, including wastes, is governed by national regulations and related approved codes of practice. All goods carried by rail are subject to BRS conditions of carriage and conditions of acceptance, which include specific conditions for dangerous goods, including wastes. The Control of Pollution (Amendment) Act 1989 will require the registration of any person, unless exempted by regulation, carrying controlled waste, including household waste, in the course of his business.

Railway Lines

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will consult outside interested parties on his proposed terms of reference for his departmental committee to establish a noise standard for new railway lines.

Mr. Portillo: No. The object will be to establish the standard at a level which equitably relates to the standard set by regulation for new highways.

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will include outside members on his departmental committee to set a noise standard for railway lines; and whether the committee will consult outside interested parties before reaching its conclusions.

Mr. Portillo: Outside members will be included and there will be consultation. It will be for the committee to decide at what stage to consult outside interested parties.

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport why he has decided that his Department's new noise standard for railway lines should relate to the standard set for new highways, and what account he has taken of the particular characteristics and pattern of noise from railway lines.

Mr. Portillo: I consider it right to aim for a noise insulation standard for new railway lines which is comparable with the standard currently set by regulation for new highways in order to be even-handed. It would not be right to discriminate in favour of or against people living near new railway lines as opposed to people living near new roads. It will be for the departmental committee to consider and take account of the characteristics and pattern of noise from railway lines.

Test Bores, Eccles

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport for what purpose test bores 2069, 2070 and 2071 were carried out on land at Grange farm, Eccles, under section 290(3) of the Highways Act 1980.

Mr. Atkins: Preliminary investigations associated with the proposed widening of the M62 between junctions 12 and 18 prior to the White Paper "Roads for Prosperity".

Greater Manchester Relief Road

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many route options were produced by consultants in respect of the M6 to M56 section of the proposed Greater Manchester western and northern relief road.

Mr. Atkins: Five. All but one were eventually rejected for environmental reasons.

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the total length of new motorway envisaged in each section of the Greater Manchester western and northern relief road, M6 to M56, M56 to M62 and M62 to M66.

Mr. Atkins: The information is as follows:
M6 to M56—6 miles
M56 to M62; M62 to M66—It is too early in the planning process to say what lengths of new motorways are envisaged.

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the total length of road widening to existing roads envisaged in each section of the Greater Manchester western and northern relief road, M6 to M56, M56 to M62 and M62 to M66.

Mr. Atkins: The information is as follows:
M6 to M56—None
M56 to M62; M62 to M66—It is too early in planning process to quantify the total length of existing roads to be widened.

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the consultants' brief in respect of the Greater Manchester western and northern relief road includes consideration of a new motorway crossing of the Manchester ship canal.

Mr. Atkins: Yes.

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the road widening of the M62 between junctions 12 and 18 is regarded as part of the proposed Greater Manchester western and northern relief road.

Mr. Atkins: We expect there to be a need for a new route on the north side of Manchester.

Oil Spills

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will outline what research is being undertaken in respect of new methods to deal with oil spills; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The marine pollution control unit (MPCU) of the Department of Transport undertakes a continuing programme of counter-pollution research including new or improved methods of dealing with oil slicks. Research is currently being undertaken into the use of demulsifiers as a means of inhibiting formation of emulsions and promoting natural dispersion of oil; satellite remote sensing for the detection of oil slicks; techniques for cleaning oil from shingle beaches; the resources and methods required to clean different types of beach; and possible methods of cleaning contaminated salt marshes and mud flats.

These projects are part of the wider overall programme of progressive research into methods of dealing with oil and chemical spills which the MPCU has been undertaking for a number of years at an annual cost of about £1 million. This has resulted in the successful development and introduction into service of aerial dispersant spraying techniques; a mechanical recovery system; increased identification and refinement of the correct techniques to apply in dealing with oil pollution at sea and on various types of shoreline; detailed knowledge of the behaviour of oil at sea; a straw baler machine which produces straw booms for use in protecting sensitive areas of coastline; aerial surveillance; and various information systems and manuals.

The results of the research are made available to relevant authorities in the United Kingdom and abroad as part of the United Kingdom's contribution to interna tional co-operation in counter-pollution.

Taxis

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will fund research on the personal security of passengers travelling in private hire cars and taxis.

Mr. Portillo: The Suzy Lamplugh Trust is commissioning research into the actual and perceived risks to personal security of travelling in minicabs in London which are not licensed, compared with taxis in London which are licensed: and whether minicab licensing, as practised outside London, alters the position.

The trust has sought a contribution from the Government towards funding and I have agreed that the Department of Transport will provide half the cost of the research, up to a ceiling of £20,500. I understand that the other half of the funding will come from the Suzy Lamplugh Trust and the Police Foundation which are jointly seeking additional funds from the private sector for that purpose; and that the research should be completed in about a year's time.

Hazardous Chemicals

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will take steps to end the practice of allowing barrels of hazardous chemicals to be carried on open-sided lorries;

(2) what steps he has taken to assess the implications for regulations relating to the transport by road of hazardous wastes of the recent accident at Burton-upon-Trent in which sodium cyanide was spilt in a residential area from an open lorry.

Mr. Atkins: The Health and Safety Executive has been made aware of details of the incident. It will consider any change to the procedures as part of the practice of regularly reviewing the relevant regulations.

River Thames

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether any further consideration has been given to a comprehensive set of regulations governing navigation in the tidal Thames following the Marchioness disaster.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Port of London Authority has already incorporated within its general direction for navigation the main navigational measures recommended by the interim report of the marine accident investigation branch. It is considering, with the Department the further recommendation with respect to the segregation of commercial and passenger traffic on the river.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Examination Results

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list all local education authorities in England in rank order of expenditure per secondary pupil per year, starting with the highest spending authority, together with their position in the table of examination results for school leavers achieving grades A to C at GCSE in 1988 and 1989.

Mrs. Rumbold: The table gives the net institutional expenditure per secondary school pupil in the financial year 1987-88, and averaged examination results for the three years 1985-86 to 1987-88. The purpose of averaging is to reduce sampling error within the derived percentages. Comparable information is not yet available for 1988-89.

[1] The figures in the table have not been adjusted to take account of variations in LEA's socio-economic circumstances.

[2] Net institutional expenditure includes the cost of salaries and wages, premises, and certain supplies and services. It does not include the cost of school meals, central administration and inspection, debt charges or revenue contributions to capital outlay.

[3] The unit spending figures are based on LEA expenditure returns to the Department of the Environment for the financial year 1987-88, and pupil number returns to DES. Data for four authorities are not available.

[4] The examination data are aggregated from the results of a sample survey for the academic years 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88. The survey is based on a 10 per cent. sample of pupils in maintained and independent schools (excluding special schools) who have reached the minimum school leaving age. The percentages quoted do not reflect the achievements of pupils at O-level, CSE or GCSE after leaving school; nor their attainments in examinations leading to vocational or other qualifications at school or elsewhere.

[5] Includes grades A-C at O-level and CSE grade 1.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the number of children sitting (a) GCSE and (b) A-level examinations in each local education authority in England as a percentage of the total number in the relevant year groups for 1988; and if he will list by each local education authority in England the number of children achieving (i) GCSE grades A to C, (ii) GCSE grades C to F and (iii) A-level grades A and E as a percentage of the total number of pupils in the relevant year in 1988 and 1989.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information is not readily available in the form requested. The table gives sampled examination results for school leavers, averaged over the academic years 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88. The purpose of averaging is to reduce sampling error within the derived percentages. Comparable information is not yet available for 1988-89.

Mr. Jackson: The terms of reference are to review the justification, role and functions of the council. My right hon. Friend expects to receive the report by the summer, and to publish it.

66. Mr. Haynes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will provide further details of the costs of the Government's proposals on top-up loans for students announced in his Autumn Statement.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will provide further details of the costs of the Government's proposals on top-up loans for students announced in his Autumn Statement.

67. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will provide further details of the costs of the Government's proposals on top-up loans for students announced in his Autumn Statement.

68. Mr. Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will provide further details of the costs of the Government's proposals on top-up loans for students announced in his Autumn Statement.

Mr. Jackson: The Government's spending plans include £109 million in 1990-91, £179 million in 1991-92 and £204 million in 1992-93 for the introduction of the top-up loans scheme from September 1990, subject to the passage of the necessary legislation. Provision for the administration costs of the loans scheme will be added when the figures are available. The loan rates will be as set out in the White Paper "Top-up loans for Students". (Cm. 520).

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much money will be allocated to Durham education authority for student loans in 1990.

Mr. Jackson: Student Loans Company Ltd. will provide loans directly to students. The funds will not be allocated to or through local education authorities.

Polytechnics (North-East)

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many members of the governing bodies of (a) Newcastle polytechnic, (b) Sunderland polytechnic and (c) Teesside polytechnic receive remuneration for their position; what is the amount of that remuneration: and what criteria are used to determine that remuneration.

Mr. Jackson: Information is not collected centrally on these matters which are within the discretion of individual higher education corporations under schedule 7 to the Education Reform Act.

Education Support Grant

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what allocations will be made to local education authorities under the education support grants programme for 1990-91; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: My Department is today writing to all local education authorities in England to inform them of the level of expenditure which I have approved for each activity in the education support grants (ESG) programme for 1990-91. The programme is summarised in the following table.

The expenditure supported by ESGs in 1990-91 will total £141 million. This is over £15 million higher than the 1989-90 programme. Of the £141 million total, £50 million will support new activities and the extension of existing activities, while £91 million will support the continuation of projects begun in earlier rounds.

As in previous years, there has been great interest in the education support grants programme, with LEAs submitting a wide range of bids. I am pleased to say that all LEAs in England will be participating in the 1990-91 programme, which is the largest so far.

The activities targeted on implementing the Education Reform Act include major programmes to support local management of schools (LMS) and the national curriculum. We will be supporting over £36 million of spending on LMS, helping local authorities to install management information systems in schools, to train staff for their new responsibilities, and to provide central support.

A range of other activities will help schools get the national curriculum into place, including those on information technology in schools, English language, primary science, and mathematics, as well as the activity on the basic curriculum and assessment. Together, these activities will support some £55 million of spending.

We shall also be allocating grant for a range of other priorities, including schemes to recruit former teachers and mature entrants into teaching, and to help schools cope better with their most difficult pupils.

This ESG programme represents a substantial package of assistance for schools, colleges and LEAs. It will help target resources where they are most needed, and particularly on the implementation of the Education Reform Act. In total, ESGs will support over £110 million of spending in 1990-91 on activities related to the ERA.

For the future, I want to see the ESG programme focus even more closely on our key priorities. I shall wish in particular to concentrate future support on the implementation of our main ERA reforms, especially in the areas relating to the national curriculum and local management of schools. I shall also wish to consider what more can be done to help authorities to recruit teachers in the light of experience of the programme I am announcing today. The bids for the teacher recruitment activity showed that many authorities have some way to go in developing strategies for stimulating recruitment.

Teacher Shortages

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what action has been taken by his Department to improve teacher recruitment;

(2) what action his Department has taken to improve teacher numbers in shortage subjects.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Since 1986 the Department has undertaken a range of measures to improve teacher supply. These include new initial and in-service training courses; the establishment of the teaching as a career unit to undertake national advertising and publicity; taster courses for those considering a career change; support for local initiatives to attract mature new entrants and former serving teachers; and the licensed and articled teacher schemes.

The measures have also included bursaries for initial teacher training students, and retraining courses, which have concentrated on the shortage subject areas.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Household Incomes

15. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of the average household income is devoted to national and local taxation; and what was the comparable percentage in 1979.

Mr. Norman Lamont: A married man with two children on average male earnings will pay approximately 36 per cent. of his earnings in taxes in 1989-90, about one percentage point more than in 1978-79. Over the same period he has enjoyed an increase in real take-home pay of 32 per cent.

Business Investment

16. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the latest figures indicating the share of gross domestic product taken by business investment.

Mr. Major: Business investment as a proportion of gross domestic product was 14·6 per cent. in 1988. The Industry Act forecast projected total business investment to grow by 9¼ per cent. in 1989. As a share of GDP, in 1989 business investment is likely to be one of the highest since the war.

54. Mr. Marlow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the latest figures indicating the share of gross domestic product taken by business investment.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given earlier today by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor to my hon. Friend the Member for Dorset, South (Mr. Bruce).

Taxation

17. Miss Hoey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the composite rate of tax for 1990-91.

Mr. Lilley: The composite rate of tax for 1990-91 is 22 per cent.

32. Mr. Franks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if it remains his policy to achieve lower rates of direct taxation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Wirral, South (Mr. Porter).

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, pursuant to his answer of 11 January, he will list those reasons which are known to the Inland Revenue other than for the sole or main purpose of avoiding or evading United Kingdom taxation, that United Kingdom-based individuals, companies and trusts enter into transactions with persons or organisations based in tax havens; and whether he will carry out studies with a view to estimating the current loss of revenue through business transactions involving tax havens.

Mr. Lilley: The Inland Revenue does not make judgments as to the motives of individuals, companies or trusts entering into transactions with persons or organisations based in tax havens. There is no reliable means of estimating the tax loss through avoidance and evasion in connection with tax haven transactions.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he has any proposals to prevent tax avoidance and tax evasion by satellite television companies entering into business transactions with connected or associated companies, individuals and trusts based in (a) Jersey, (b) the Isle of Man, (c) Guernsey, (d) the Netherlands Antilles, (e) the Cayman Islands and (f) Liechtenstein for the sole purpose of avoiding or evading the payment of taxation in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lilley: If my hon. Friend has evidence of tax avoidance or evasion in this field perhaps he will write to me.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the effect on the total revenue received of abolishing the upper income tax bands.

Mr. Lilley: The 1988 financial statement and budget report estimated the cost of abolishing higher rates above 40 per cent. at £965 million in 1988-89 and £2,070 million in 1989-90. These estimates did not include behavioural effects.

59. Mr. Hanley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the growth in total investment since 1983.

23. Mr. Eadie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate for growth in 1990.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The latest forecast for GDP growth in 1990 is 1¼ per cent., as published in the Autumn Statement.

33. Mr. Sillars: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to revise (a) his forecast of growth made in the Autumn Statement, and (b) the assumption upon which he then worked.

48. Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to revise (a) his forecast of growth made in the Autumn Statement, and (b) the assumption upon which he then worked.

53. Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to revise (a) his forecast of growth made in the Autumn Statement, and (b) the assumption upon which he then worked.

Mr. Ryder: Yes.

44. Mr. Knox: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the current level of interest rates.

55. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a further statement on the current level of interest rates.

Mr. Ryder: Bank base rates are 15 per cent.

46. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last discussed with other EEC Finance Ministers matters affecting domestic interest rate policies.

Mr. Ryder: The Ecofin Council met in Brussels on 18 December 1989. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer represented the United Kingdom. The Council discussed a range of issues of mutual interest including economic and monetary matters.

61. Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received on the effect of high interest rates on small businesses.

Mr. Ryder: My right hon. Friend and I have received a number of such representations.

Balance of Payments

25. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the latest figures for the balance of payments (a) for visibles and (b) for invisibles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: In the three months to November 1989, the visible trade deficit was £5·2 billion, the smallest deficit since the three months to June 1988. Preliminary estimates for invisibles for the third quarter of 1989, the latest period for which figures are available, show a surplus of £0·2 billion.

26. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many European countries have higher inflation rates than the United Kingdom.

Mr. Ryder: Four EC countries have higher inflation rates than the United Kingdom when estimates of owner-occupier housing costs are excluded so as to bring the published figures on to a more comparable basis.

30. Mr. Fearn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the latest figure that he has for inflation in the United Kingdom; and what is the average inflation rate for countries that are full members of the European monetary system.

Mr. Ryder: Excluding mortgage interest payments United Kingdom inflation was 6·1 per cent. in November 1989. The latest, more comparable, inflation rate for members of the exchange rate mechanism of the EMS was 4·4 per cent. in October 1989.

67. Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the effect of the growth of average earnings over the last six months on the rate of inflation.

Mr. Major: Excessive pay settlements primarily threaten job prospects. The Government will not bail out employers who do not control their costs.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the latest inflation figure.

Mr. Ryder: The all-items RPI annual inflation rate in November was 7·7 per cent. The underlying rate of inflation, as measured by the RPI excluding mortgage interest payments, was 6·1 per cent.

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest forecast for inflation for the last quarter of 1990.

Mr. Ryder: The Autumn Statement forecast is for RPI annual inflation to fall to 5¼ per cent. by the fourth quarter of 1990.

36. Mr. Gill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received regarding the future of capital gains tax.

Mr. Lilley: The Government have received a number of different representations, which will be borne in mind in the run-up to the Budget.

Share Ownership

37. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by how much the number of shareholders in the United Kingdom has increased during the 1980s.

Mr. Lilley: The joint Treasury and stock exchange survey carried out in January and February 1989 estimated that approximately 9 million people own shares —20 per cent. of the adult population. This represents a threefold increase since 1979.

Mr. Lilley: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the corporation tax rate in the United Kingdom and other OECD countries.

Bank of England

45. Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last met the Governor of the Bank of England; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Ryder: My right hon. Friend meets the Governor of the Bank of England from time to time to discuss a variety of matters.

Self-Employment

47. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he has any further plans to encourage self-employment.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Self-employment has increased by over 60 per cent. since 1979 as a result of the Government's policies to encourage enterprise. These policies will ensure continued growth in the future.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he has any plans to amend the definition of self-employed for taxation purposes.

Mr. Lilley: No. The Government have reviewed on a number of occasions whether there should be a statutory definition of self-employment. The existing criteria laid down by the courts seek essentially to answer the question "Are you in business on your own account?" We believe this is the right approach.

Northern Ireland

49. Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last made representations to the European Commission to have the restrictions on the movement of Irish shoppers into Northern Ireland removed.

Mr. Major: I assume that the right hon. Member is referring to the Irish Government's withdrawal in March 1987 of travellers' allowances from persons who have been out of the Republic for less than 48 hours. Her Majesty's Government made it clear at the time both to the European Commission and to the Irish Government that they believed these restrictions to be contrary to EC law. The United Kingdom has intervened accordingly in support of the proceedings instituted by the Commission against Ireland in the European Court of Justice. The hearing is due to take place in February.

North-East

51. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the present state of the economy in the north-east of England.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Government's economic policies have created the conditions for greatly increased prosperity in the north-east. The fall in the unemployment rate over the last year has been one of the fastest in the United Kingdom.

Stamp Duty

52. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to raise the level of property values on which stamp duty is payable.

Mr. French: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to abolish stamp duty on home and share purchase.

Mr. Lilley: I cannot anticipate my right hon. Friend's Budget statement.

Debt Repayment

56. Mr. William Powell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the saving in debt interest costs of the public sector debt repayment over the last three years.

Mr. Ryder: In the three years to 1989-90 the Government are expected to make a net public sector debt repayment of £30·4 billion, saving nearly £3 billion a year in debt interest costs.

European Monetary System

58. Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the average inflation rate of countries participating in the exchange rate mechanism of the European monetary system.

Mr. Ryder: On a more comparable basis, the average inflation rate of members of the exchange rate mechanism of the EMS was 4·4 per cent. in October 1989.

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much was invested in manufacturing industry in the 10 years to January 1979 and the 10 years since, net of capital consumption and expressed in terms of 1985 prices.

Mr. Norman Lamont: In the decade to the end of 1978, gross domestic fixed capital formation by the manufacturing industries is estimated to have been £95 billion at 1985 prices. In the following decade it is estimated to have been £83 billion. These figures exclude capital goods leased from financial sector lessors. Including leased assets, gross domestic fixed capital formation was £94 billion in the decade to the end of 1988. Estimates including leased assets are not available for the preceding decade, when leasing was a less important feature of investment. Estimates of net domestic fixed capital formation must be interpreted with some caution, since they depend on estimates of capital consumption, which are not directly observable and so are based on a series of assumptions. On this basis, net domestic fixed capital formation by the manufacturing industries is estimated to have been £26 billion in the decade to the end of 1978 and for the following decade, including leased assets, £3 billion (minus £2 billion excluding leased assets).

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of the increase in private non-residential fixed investment in the period 1987 to 1989 was accounted for by investment in manufacturing industry.

Mr. Major: 1988 is the last full year for which data are available. The data for 1987 and 1988 may be found in the "United Kingdom National Accounts" 1989 edition (CSO Blue Book).

Manufacturing Investment

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of gross domestic product manufacturing investment represented in (a) 1978 and (b) 1988.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Manufacturing investment, in current prices, as a proportion of gross domestic product at factor cost was 4·1 per cent. in 1978 and 3·2 per cent. in 1988.

Uniform Business Rate

Mr. Richard Shepherd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide a forecast of the impact on the rate of inflation of the uniform business rate and revaluation for each of the standard regions.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I have nothing to add to the reply I gave my hon. Friend on 12 January 1990 at column 767.

Population and the Economy

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what research he has commissioned into the interactions between the structure of the population and the state of the economy.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Research commissioned into the state of the economy attempts to allow for all relevant influences, including demographic factors where appropriate.

Incomes

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will recalculate the figures given in his reply to the hon. Member for Pembroke (Mr. Bennett) on 2 November 1989 Official Report column 282 to show percentage annual changes in average real net incomes of (a) pensioners, (b) married men with two children, and (c) single non-retired people, taking into account increases in local authority rates, local authority and other rents, and mortgage costs.

Mr. Major [holding answer 17 January 1990]: The changes in average real net incomes given in the reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Pembroke (Mr. Bennett) on 2 November take account of price increases as measured by the retail prices index. This includes increases in housing costs.

Exchange Rate

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by how much the £ sterling has moved against (a) the yen, (b) the US dollar and (c) the deutschmark over the last 10 years.

Mr. Major: I refer the right hon. Member to table 13.1 of the Central Statistical Office's "Financial Statistics".

Money Supply

Mr. Denzil Davies To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the average annual percentage increase of broad money, M4, over the last 10 years.

Mr. Major: The average annual percentage increases in M4 over the last 10 years are given in the following table:

M4: Average annual percentage growth rate[1]

	Per cent.
1980	15·5
1981	16·2
1982	12·6
1983	13·5
1984	17·8
1985	13·2
1986	15·1
1987	14·7
1988	17·0
[2]1989	17·8

[1] Average of quarterly annual growth rates to end Q4 1983, and monthly annual growth rates to end November 1989.
[2] To end November 1989.

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of gross domestic product was accounted for in (a) 1979 and (b) 1988 by manufacturers in (i) the United Kingdom, (ii) the Federal Republic of Germany, (iii) France and (iv) Italy.

Mr. Major: GDP/GNP by kind of activity is published for Germany, France and Italy by the OECD in "National Accounts" volume II, 1975-87. For the United Kingdom, data are published by the CSO in "United Kingdom National Accounts" 1989 edition.

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of net domestic product was accounted for by wages and salaries in (a) 1979 and (b) the latest available year.

Mr. Major: In 1979 wages and salaries accounted for 67 per cent. of net domestic product at factor cost. During 1988, the latest period for which the percentage can be calculated, the proportion was 64·6 per cent.

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what, for the latest available year and expressed in deutschmarks, was the per capita gross domestic product of (a) the Federal Republic of Germany, (b) France, (c) Italy and (d) the United Kingdom.

Mr. Major: Following is the information requested.

GDP/GNP per capita at purchasing power parities, 1988

	Deutschmarks
United Kingdom	23,656
Germany	24,919
France	24,080
Italy	22,831

Endangered Species

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his reply of 18 December, Official Report, column 28, if he will make a statement on his Department's assessment of the consequences of being required to move from London to Southend on the retention in the Customs and Excise of those officers in the animals and birds, tropical fish and reptiles importation unit, who have accumulated the greatest expertise in discerning what creatures coming into London airport are covered by CITES regulations.

Mr. Ryder: The relocation review team, set up by the Board of Customs and Excise to establish those areas of headquarters work which should be moved out of London, carefully considered all the implications of their proposals, including the possibility that some experienced officers might elect not to move with their existing work. Those who wish to do so will be able to remain in London within the Customs and Excise.

The position of those HQ staff dealing with endangered species controls has been reviewed in the light of a number of representations. However, we remain satisfied that any necessary staffing changes as a result of relocation can be managed without impairing Customs' enforcement of the CITES controls.

Government Expenditure

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give a breakdown of Government expenditure (a) within the standard regions of England and (b) in Scotland during the financial year 1988-89.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Apart from expenditure which is the responsibility of territorial Departments, all Government expenditure is both planned and controlled on a national basis. Information on expenditure broken down by standard regions within England is thus not available on a consistent basis. For figures giving Government expenditure by territory in 1988-89, I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on 19 December at column 179-90 to my hon. Friend the Member for Swindon (Mr. Coombs).

Living Standards

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by how much living standards rose during the 1980s.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Living standards in the 1980s have risen to their highest-ever levels. For example, the real take-home pay of a married man—with two children—on average male earnings has gone up by over 26 per cent. since 1979-80.

Weekly Earnings

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the increase in real weekly earnings of full-time adult male manual workers in manufacturing industry in the decade ending April 1989, and the best estimate he can make for non-manuals employed in the private sector; and if he will provide similar figures for females.

Mr. Nicholls: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 13 December 1989 (Official Report, columns 658-59) for the figures for male and female manual employees in manufacturing. The figures for male and female non-manuals in the private sector are 43 per cent. and 48 per cent. respectively.

Wage Increases

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the industry and occupational groups which have been awarded wage increases exceeding 10 per cent. in the year ended April 1989.

Mr. Nicholls: I have been asked to reply.

Pay is a matter for employers and employees to determine. My Department does not hold comprehensive information about pay settlement levels.

Business Rates

Mr. Richard Shepherd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the actual percentage increase in business rates payable will be for businesses with rateable values of (a) over £15,000 and (b) under £15,000 for 1990-91 over 1989-90.

Mr. Chope: I have been asked to reply.

The information is not available in the form requested. However, for properties with new rateable values of £15,000 or more in Greater London and £10,000 or more elsewhere (the thresholds defining large properties under the business rate transitional scheme) the average percentage increase in rates bills in 1990-91 over 1989-90 is expected to be 8·8 per cent. The equivalent percentage for properties with rateable values below those thresholds is 4·4 per cent. Both these figures allow for the effect of inflation between the two years.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Eastern Europe

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what financial aid is being provided to (a) Poland, (b) Czechoslovakia, (c) Hungary, (d) Bulgaria, (e) Romania and (f) other central and east European countries.

Mrs. Chalker: We have established a £50 million know-how fund for Poland, and a £25 million fund for Hungary. We are also providing additional assistance for Poland: £15 million is being made available for a project in the agricultural sector, and a £64 million contribution has been made to the international stabilisation fund for Poland. We are also making a substantial contribution to the European Community and multilateral programmes for Poland and Hungary. Bilateral financial assistance is not available for other eastern European countries, but we hope they will qualify for such help in due course.

Central America

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on overseas aid for central America.

Mrs. Chalker: We have technical co-operation programmes for all central American countries apart from Nicaragua. In addition we are providing financial aid to Belize and Honduras. The Commonwealth Development Corporation invests in Belize, Costa Rica and Honduras. Project support can be provided from the aid and trade provision in appropriate cases. Relief aid can and has been provided in response to natural disasters such as hurricanes and earthquakes. We of course also contribute a share of the funds provided to the region through a variety of multilateral programmes including those of the United Nations agencies, the World Bank, the Inter American Development bank and the European Community.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Contempt of Court

Mr. Bob Cryer: To ask the Attorney-General if he will introduce legislation to provide compensation for persons sent to prison for contempt who successfully appeal against the decision; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The Government have no plans to do so.

Legal Aid

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Attorney-General approximately how long applicants for legal aid have to wait for an appeal hearing and decisions against the original refusal of the application.

The Attorney-General: The average time between the receipt of a legal aid applicant's appeal against refusal and the appeal hearing in England and Wales is 28 working days. It takes, on average, a further three working days for the result of the appeal to be sent to the applicant.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Public Rights of Way

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will consider advising district councils to display clear signs at or close to public rights of way so as to ensure that the public are aware of their existence; and if he will arrange for the publication of a rights of way map for the whole of Northern Ireland.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The signposting of public paths is an important aspect of the creation of public access to the countryside. Under the Access to the Countryside (Northern Ireland) Order 1983 the responsibility for asserting and creating public footpaths lies with district councils.

The Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland encourages councils to undertake this work by offering advice and substantial grant aid not only towards the cost of creating public footpaths but also towards the cost of erecting signs and providing information to the public.

The legislation requires councils to compile and preserve maps of public rights of way. The Department has no present plans to produce a map showing public rights of way for the whole of Northern Ireland.

Replacement Dwellings

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will make it his policy in relation to the granting of planning permission for a replacement dwelling to take action to ensure that the new dwelling is not placed closer to the sea shore or to a river or inland lough than the dwelling which it is intended to replace.

Mr. Needham: No. Each application for planning permission is determined on its merits and the Department of the Environment's policy is that the replacement should be located as close as possible to the site of the original building. Factors such as siting, location and design, particularly where the site is close to natural features, are taken fully into consideration.

Green Currency

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what action has been taken as a result of the meeting with a deputation from the Ulster Farmers Union to discuss the devaluation of the green pound in order to improve support levels and alleviate the disparity in green currency rates between the United Kingdom and the Republic of Ireland;

(2) what discussions have taken place about the devaluation of the green pound in order to improve support levels and alleviate the disparity in green currency rates between the United Kingdom and the Republic of Ireland.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: It is usual for discussions on green rate changes to be included in the European Communities' price fixing process. That process will start at the January meeting of European Community Agriculture Ministers.

We maintain close links with the Ulster Farmers Union and have regular discussions on green currency rates and other issues of concern.

European Single Market

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assistance is being given to industries, firms and entrepreneurs in South Down to help them take advantage of the internal market in 1992.

Mr. Needham: The Government fully recognise that the advent of the single European market will present both opportunities and threats to businesses in Northern Ireland. The Department of Economic Development, together with the Industrial Development Board and the Local Enterprise Development Unit, have undertaken a campaign to raise awareness of 1992 throughout the business community in Northern Ireland. In addition, a range of specific initiatives has been developed and LEDU, in co-operation with the IDB and the industrial science division of the Department of Economic Development has recently launched a European information centre which will assist and advise businesses about a range of EC activities. Businesses and individuals in South Down have benefited to no lesser degree than elsewhere from this campaign.

Departmental Relocation

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to decentralise Government Departments to the constituency of South Down.

Mr. Cope: There are currently no such plans.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps have been taken by the Department of Economic Development actively to encourage industries to reduce the use of CFC gases.

Mr. Needham: The industrial science division of the Department has been working with Northern Ireland companies wishing to replace CFC gases in their products and processes in evaluating suitable alternatives. In addition, any company seeking the advice of health and safety inspectors and fire officers concerning the use of CFCs or plant or equipment using CFCs, is encouraged to use a more environmentally acceptable alternative.

Private Nursing Homes

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to introduce closer monitoring of the welfare of residents in private nursing and residential homes.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 16 January 1990]: We plan to bring forward proposals for a registered homes order later this year to consolidate and update the existing Northern Ireland legislation on the registration and inspection of private and voluntary residential and nursing homes. A policy paper on care in the community to be issued shortly by the Department of Health and Social Services will also address improvements in monitoring the quality of community care services, including those provided by the private sector.

Firearms (Certificates)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) murders, (b) other deaths, (c) muggings, (d) woundings and (e) attacks on the security forces in which firearms were used have occurred in Northern Ireland in each of the last five years where the firearms (i) were being used by the person legally holding them, and (ii) were stolen from civilians.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 9 January 1990]: Statistics are not collated in the form requested, and the information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Audit Policy

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) how, and in consultation with what bodies, he formulates audit policy;

(2) if he will list the governmental, non-governmental bodies, committees or institutes which make the audit policy in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Redwood: The audit of company accounts is carried out under the Companies Act 1985 which is to be amended by the Companies Act 1989 to reflect both European Community obligations and certain domestic considerations. Significant changes to this legislative framework are usually the subject of wide consultation. In addition, audit standards and guidelines are promulgated by the members of the Consultative Committee of Accountancy Bodies on the basis of proposals developed by its auditing practices committee. The professional accountancy bodies also issue technical guidance to their members.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether, at any time since June 1979, he has communicated concerns about the standards of auditing to any leader of the accountancy profession.

Mr. Redwood: As I explained in the reply I gave on 11 December at column 461 to a question by the hon. Member, my Department normally refers specific complaints about auditors' conduct of statutory audit to the relevant professional body. Last year my Department also took up with the accountancy bodies a number of general issues about the conduct of audit which had come to our notice.

Inspectors' Reports

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the unpublished inspectors' reports which, since June 1979, his Department has given to outside private interest organisations.

Mr. Redwood: No. Unpublished reports have been disclosed where appropriate under the Companies Act 1948 (as amended), under part XIV of the Companies Act 1985 and under the Financial Services Act 1986.

Accountancy

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what actions he takes to promote the accountancy profession.

Mr. Redwood: My Department seeks to promote all United Kingdom business, including accountancy, by fostering a climate of enterprise and prosperity in which business and commerce can flourish.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what powers he has to regulate the accountancy profession.

Mr. Redwood: I have no powers to regulate the accountancy profession as such, although there are statutory provisions for the regulation of certain types of accountancy work, for example company audit, insolvency and the provision of investment advice.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will ask the Director General of Fair Trading to investigate whether major accountancy firms indulge in price fixing.

Mr. Redwood: No, I have no reason to make such a request. If the hon. Member has evidence to cause concern, he should provide it directly to the Director General of Fair Trading.

Peat Marwick McLintock

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether, in light of the banning of a Peat Marwick McLintock partner from practising by the Securities and Exchange Commission in the United States of America, he has any plans to examine the firm's standards of work in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Redwood: No.

Batteries and Accumulators

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many alkaline manganese batteries containing more than 0·10 per cent. of mercury by weight were sold in the United Kingdom in each of the last three years.

Mr. Forth: Sales of alkaline manganese batteries in the United Kingdom during the last three years have averaged 200 million units per year (based on an estimate for 1989). The mercury content of such batteries is being reduced in accordance with a European battery industry reduction programme which began in 1986:

1986 from 1 per cent. to 0·5 per cent.
1988 from 0·5 per cent. to 0·3 per cent.
1990 from 0·3 per cent. to 0·1 per cent.
1992 from 0·1 per cent. to 0·025 per cent.

During 1987 and 1988 all these batteries contained more than 0·1 per cent. of mercury by weight but during 1989 batteries containing less than 0·1 per cent. were introduced to the United Kingdom market and by the end of 1990 all alkaline manganese batteries supplied to the trade are expected to be below this level.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the percentage of batteries and accumulators sold within the United Kingdom that are marked to indicate whether the battery or accumulator must be disposed of separately, can be recycled, or may be disposed of with household refuse.

Mr. Forth: The information is not available. There is at present no requirement for batteries and accumulators to be so marked, but a modified draft directive covering certain of these products and containing proposals for their labelling has recently been published by the European Commission. Negotiations have yet to begin on the final form of the directive.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he has undertaken to promote the marketing of batteries and accumulators containing smaller quantities of dangerous substances or less polluting substances.

Mr. Forth: Encouraging the production of batteries and accumulators containing lower levels of substances such as lead, mercury and cadmium is one of the objectives of a modified draft directive recently published by the European Commission. Negotiations have yet to begin on the final form of the directive, but it would not be sensible for the Government to act independently and in advance of its completion. Meanwhile, the United Kingdom primary battery industry has made good progress in voluntarily reducing the levels of mercury in many of its products.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what steps he is taking to ensure that consumers are fully informed about the dangers of uncontrolled disposal of spent batteries and accumulators;

(2) what steps he is taking to ensure that consumers are fully informed about the dangers of uncontrolled disposal of spent batteries and accumulators.

Mr. Forth: Consumer information programmes are proposed in a modified draft directive on batteries and accumulators containing dangerous substances recently published by the European Commission. Negotiations have yet to begin on the final form of the directive, but it would not be sensible for the Government to act independently in advance of its completion.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to inform consumers of the method of removing batteries and accumulators which are built into appliances.

Mr. Forth: The removability of batteries from appliances is one of the issues covered in a modified draft directive on batteries and accumulators containing dangerous substances recently published by the European Commission. Negotiations have yet to begin on the final form of the directive, but it would not be sensible for the Government to act independently in advance of its completion.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to set up a deposit system for batteries and accumulators.

Mr. Forth: None. Deposit systems are mooted as a possible means of encouraging the return, for recycling or controlled disposal, of spent batteries and accumulators containing dangerous substances in a modified draft directive recently published by the European Commission. Negotiations have yet to begin on the final form of the directive.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps his Department has taken to reduce the heavy metal content in batteries and accumulators.

Mr. Forth: Reductions in heavy metal content are among the objectives of a modified draft directive on batteries and accumulators containing dangerous substances recently published by the European Commission. Negotiations have yet to begin on the final form of the directive, the environmental aims of which the Government welcome.

South African Offshore Industry

Mr. Cabom: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if the British Government have ever given grants or loans to enable South Africa to study the potential growth of the South African offshore industry.

Mr. Redwood: No.

Export Credits Guarantee Department

Mr. Cabom: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the overall extent of Export Credits Guarantee Department insured credit in pounds sterling supporting United Kingdom exports for the Mossel Bay oil from gas project in South Africa and for how long does Exports Credits Guarantee Department cover last.

Mr. Redwood: It has been the practice of successive Governments not to disclose information about ECGD support for individual cases unless the buyer and exporter wish it to be public.

British Shipbuilders

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on British Shipbuilders' external financing limit for 1989-90.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: British Shipbuilders' external finance limit for 1989-90 was provisionally set at £3 million as recorded in "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1989-90 to 1991-92" published in January 1989. I have now set a revised external finance limit for 1989-90 of £35 million to meet the costs associated with the disposal and closure of British Shipbuilders' subsidiaries over this year. This increase is being charged to the Reserve and is within the estimate for the planning total in the Autumn Statement.

Post Office

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what financial and efficiency targets he has set for the Post Office in 1990.

Mr. Forth: The Secretary of State, in agreement with the Treasury, has set the Post Office a target to achieve an annual average 6·4 per cent. return on mean capital employed over the three years 1989-90 to 1991-92. The profit used when calculating the return will be struck after interest (excluding interest on past surpluses) but before tax. The Post Office, in agreement with the Secretary of State, has set corresponding targets of 6·4 per cent. for the letters business, 5·8 per cent. for the parcels business and 7 per cent. for the counters business.

At the Post Office's request, the form of the target has been changed from a return on turnover to a return on capital employed, in line with usual practice in the private sector.

The targets are calculated from the following expected returns in each of the three years:

	1989-90 per cent.	1990-91 per cent.	1991-92 per cent.
Post Office	2·4	6·3	10·6
Letters	1·0	6·3	11·8
Parcels	2·5	5·0	10·0
Counters	6·0	7·0	8·0

The returns in the last year of the period are approximately equivalent to the real rate of return of 8 per cent. of capital employed which the Government announced in March 1989 that public sector industries should aim to achieve on their investment. The Government accept that the Post Office should work up to profitability consistent with the new rate of return over the target period.

The Secretary of State has agreed that the Post Office does not need to set an efficiency target for parcels, which operates in a competitive market, although he will monitor published tariffs for parcels sent between private people, a market in which parcels is dominant. The Post Office, in agreement with the Secretary of State, has sent the following real unit cost (RUC) targets for the letters and counters businesses.

Cumulative reduction by 1991-2 over 1988-9
Letters—1 per cent.
Counters—2 per cent.

The financial and efficiency targets for the counters business are set for the business as a whole in accordance with the principles of the 1978 White Paper on the nationalised industries (Cmnd. 7131). They are not intended to set a level for prices charged by counters to its individual clients, which are subject to agreements achieved through bilateral commercial negotiations by the parties concerned in the light of the particular circumstances.

Vietnam

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the number of contracts between British and Vietnamese companies for which export credits guarantee cover has (a) been applied and (b) granted during each of the last three years.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 15 January 1990]: Since 1982 Export Credits Guarantee Department cover for business with Vietnam has been available only for contracts where payment is to be made on terms of cash against documents out of an irrevocable letter of credit confirmed before shipment by a bank in the United Kingdom. On this basis exports insured in 1987 totalled £30,000 and in 1988, £20,000. No business was covered in 1989.

During the past three years only one inquiry for cover on a potential contract on extended credit terms has resulted in a formal application being submitted to ECGD. The United Kingdom company concerned has been advised that ECGD is not prepared to offer cover.

ENVIRONMENT

Pollution (Rivers Don and Rother)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what fines were levied on companies and individuals responsible for polluting (a) the river Don and (b) the river Rother, over the last 10 years.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Detailed information on prosecutions and fines for water pollution offences is not held centrally. However, I understand from the National Rivers Authority (NRA) that prosecutions it has brought since its formation on 1 September 1989 in respect of polluting discharges to the Don and Rother systems have resulted in the following fine:

Name of offender: Yorkshire Water plc
Watercourse: Ewden Brook
Fine Imposed: £1,000

Prior to 1 September last year, the regional water authorities were primarily responsible for enforcement of water pollution controls. From the records kept by the Yorkshire Water Authority (YWA) the NRA has been able to provide the following details of prosecutions brought by the YWA in respect of pollution of the Don and Rother systems:

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the companies currently given deemed consent to pollute (a) the river Don and (b) the river Rother, stating what pollutants they are empowered to discharge; and on what scale.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I understand from the National Rivers Authority that the following two companies have deemed consents originally issued under the terms of part II of the Control of Pollution Act 1974, to discharge minewater:

(a) into the river Don and its tributaries—British Coal Corporation.

(b) into the river Rother and its tributaries—British Coal Corporation; Moorside Mining Company Limited.

Deemed consents were issued under transitional provisions for bringing many discharges which had not required consent under earlier legislation into the regulatory control system for the first time. As they are progressively reviewed by the National Rivers Authority, deemed consents are being revoked and where appropriate, replaced by a full, conditional consent granted under the Water Act 1989.

The particulars of these consents are held on the register maintained by the Yorkshire region of the National Rivers Authority which is available for inspection by the public during normal office hours.

Nuclear Waste Disposal

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the implications of the findings of the European Commission's PAGIS study into the suitability of British geology for high-level radioactive waste disposal for the search by Nirex to establish a deep disposal facility for intermediate-level and low-level radioactive wastes.

Mr. Trippier: Nirex is not responsible for heat generating or high-level radioactive waste. However, it takes note of the results of studies such as PAGIS. The PAGIS report pointed out the long-term containment benefits that would stem from excavating a repository in hard rock with sedimentary cover as advocated by Nirex.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects Nirex to report on the results of its site investigation work at Dounreay and Sellafield.

Mr. Trippier: At present Nirex is awaiting the result of planning applications for the drilling of boreholes at both Dounreay and Sellafield. If permission is granted, Nirex will need to carry out a drilling programme of 18 months, alongside other detailed site investigation work, before any report is expected.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish an outline timetable relating to the commissioning of a repository for radioactive waste.

Mr. Trippier: I understand that Nirex has a target date of 2005 for the commissioning of a deep repository. This assumes some eight years to excavate and contruct the repository. Therefore between 1990 and 1997 Nirex will have to undertake the necessary site investigations and obtain planning permission to construct a repository. There will be a public inquiry.

Council Homes, Corby

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many council house properties were sold by (a) Corby district council and (b) the New Towns Commission in the Corby district since April 1979;

(2) which local authorities have sold 30 per cent. or more of their council house stock since April 1979.

Mr. Chope: Between April 1979 and June 1989 Corby district council has reported the sale of 5,338 dwellings and the New Towns Commission sales of 12 dwellings in Corby. Corby district council has not yet submitted the return for September 1989.

In England 61 authorities have reported sales of 30 per cent. or more of their council house stock between April 1979 and September 1989. These authorities are listed below. In addition three authorities have recently transferred their complete stock to housing associations: Chiltern (in December 1988), Sevenoaks (March 1989) and Newbury (December 1989).

I have today laid a table in the Library giving available information on local authority sales up to September 1989. It shows year-by-year information for each authority since 1984-85 together with cumulative figures since April 1979 and the proportion of their stock sold since April 1979.

Authorities reporting sales of 30 per cent. or more of their stock between April 1979 and September 1989

Housing for Teachers

Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any proposals to increase the supply of affordable housing for teachers.

Mr. Chope: Government policy aims to ensure that decent housing is within the reach of those in greatest need irrespective of their background or employment. It is open to local authorities to provide help for key workers who have difficulty in finding such accommodation.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to publish the estimates of the distributional impact of the community charge on household finance using the figures he published on 6 November 1989.

Mr. Chope: I will publish estimates based on the assumed community charges announced on 11 January shortly.

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish his best estimate of the number of local authorities which he estimates will set poll tax at a level of £278; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 15 January 1990]: If authorities spend in line with our assumptions, the community charge will be at or below £278 in 238 out of 366 areas in England.

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what level of grant loss results from the revised standard spending assessment for the London borough of Hillingdon; and on what basis the figures have changed since the assessment made by his Department in November 1989.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 17 January 1990]: The standard spending assessment (SSA) for Hillingdon published on 11 January is lower overall than that published on 6 November 1989 primarily because of reductions in its highway maintenance and capital financing SSA elements.

The reduction in the estimated revenue support grant entitlement for Hillingdon for 1990-91 (before safety net adjustments) flowing from the reports laid on 11 January as compared with our 6 November proposals is £2·638 million. This is attributable to changes in our figures for adult population as well as to changes in SSA.

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what will be the level of the community charge for the London borough of Hillingdon based on the figures published by him on 11 January with the benefit of the safety net; by how much this figure exceeds the Government's estimate of £278 for a standard level of service; what is his estimate of overspending by Hillingdon per adult; what he expects the final level of community charge will be; and if he will make a statement on the basis on which the above figures were calculated.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 17 January 1990]: The figures placed in the Library on 11 January show an assumed 1990-91 community charge of £359 in Hillingdon. Hillingdon's assumed spending is £121 per community charge payer higher than its standard spending assessment.

The final level of community charges will depend on budget decisions made by local authorities. The spending assumptions underlying the 11 January figures are set out in the transition report (England) laid on that date.

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the main factors which determine the levels of community charge to be raised by different authorities spending at their SSA level.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 17 January 1990]: Revenue support grant is distributed so that if each notifiable authority were to spend at the level of its standard spending assessment then, subject to qualifications set out in the distribution report (England), all charging authorities could set the same personal community charge —the community charge for standard spending.

The community charge for standard spending in 1990-91 will be £277·94.

Waste Paper (Recycling)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements currently exist for the recycling of waste paper disposed of by Government and parliamentary offices.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Each Government Department makes its own arrangements for the disposal of waste in the light of local circumstances and security and other considerations. The Government are currently reviewing the arrangements made for the disposal of waste by Departments with a view to maximising the proportion of waste which is recycled. In the case of Department of the Environment headquarters buildings in Westminster and Lambeth, waste paper and cardboard are collected for recycling by contractors.

English House Condition Survey

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will publish by (a) tenure, (b) income and (c) age of head of household, the following information gathered for the English house condition survey: the number of homes with rising damp, penetrating damp, slight mould growth, serious mould growth; excessive draughts, the number of houses with seriously defective, defective, just acceptable, satisfactory and unknown dampness and provide written material used in instructing surveyors on how to interpret these categories and on how to decide whether a dwelling was unfit for human habitation under the Housing Act 1955 for reason of dampness or other reason and to tabulate slight and serious mould growth by main types of exterior wall;

(2) if he will publish by (a) tenure, (b) income, (c) age of head of household, (d) employment status, (e) age of dwelling, (f) type of heating system and (g) main fuel type, where applicable, the following information gathered in the interview survey for the English house condition survey (i) questions 19a, 19c, 19d, 19f, (ii) questions 21 to 23c, (iii) questions 24 to 26b, (iv) questions 28 to 42, (v) question 44 and (vi) question 48.

Mr. Chope: Information on these topics will be included in a supplementary report on the English house condition survey which will be published later this year.

Rented Accommodation

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further steps he intends to take to establish a free market in rented accommodation.

Mr. Chope: Part I of the Housing Act 1988 deregulated new lettings by private landlords as from 15 January 1989. We shall be evaluating its impact in due course, but initial indications are encouraging—in particular the estimated 7,000 extra homes for rent being provided under the business expansion scheme. At this stage we see no case for further measures.

Housing Act Ballot

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about the ballot held under part IV of the Housing Act 1988 by the Milton Keynes development corporation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: I understand from the Milton Keynes development corporation that no ballot has taken place under part IV of the Housing Act 1988.

Nature Conservancy Council

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many scientists are employed by the Nature Conservancy Council in England, Scotland and Wales and by individual location.

Mr. Trippier: I am advised by the Nature Conservancy Council that the following number of scientific staff were employed on 16 January in scientific posts at the following locations:

These figures include officers based at sub-regional offices. Staff with scientific backgrounds also occupy some administrative and other non-scientific posts.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number of research projects and related expenditure undertaken by the Nature Conservancy Council into the effects on the marine ecology of British waters of commercial fish farming, broken down into England, Scotland and Wales.

Mr. Trippier: The Nature Conservancy Council (NCC) has commissioned the following research projects related to the effects on marine ecology of commercial fish farming. All were carried out in Scottish waters.

Financial year and title of project	NCC expenditure[1] £
1982-83
Impact of marine fish farming in Scotland	4,981
1983-84
Survey of Mariculture sites in the Western Isles	8,710
1987-88
The reduction of the impact of fish farming on the nature marine environment	8,955
1987-88
Impact of fish farmed salmon on native stocks	3,900

In addition, the NCC contributed to the following projects, funded by other bodies in Scotland:

Financial year/title and other contributors	NCC expenditure[1] £
1985-89
Highlands and Islands Development Board Study on 'Impact of Fish Farming'	15,000
1986-88
Shetland Islands Council and Shetland Salmon Producers' Association 'Shetland Fish-Farming impact survey'	29,630

[1] These figures exclude project management costs (permanent staff salaries and related expenses).

Homelessness

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much of the new money for homelessness will go to the London borough of Newham.

Mr. Chope: The Government have invited bids from local authorities in London and the south-east, including the borough of Newham, and after assessment appropriate supplementary credit approvals will be given.

Right to Buy

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many houses have been sold by each local authority in Kent under right-to-buy legislation for each year since 1979; and what proportion of total local authority stock in percentage terms these represent.

Mr. Chope: A table giving the latest reported information for each local authority based on returns to September 1989 was placed in the Library on 18 January 1990. This gives sales for each year from 1985-86 to 1988-89 and for the first six months of 1989-90. A table giving figures for 1979-80 to 1984-85 was placed in the Library on 15 May 1987.

CFCs

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which local authorities operate schemes and facilities to recover chlorofluorocarbon gas from abandoned or dumped refrigerators; what steps he intends to take to encourage the provision of facilities to recover chlorofluorocarbon gas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: A number of local authorities have pilot schemes for the removal and recycling of the chlorofluorocarbons from the coolant systems of refrigeration equipment that has been delivered to them for disposal. My Department will shortly be conducting a survey of the recycling activities of local authorities and this should establish the full extent of such work. An intensive study of the problems associated with the use and disposal of CFCs has been commissioned by the Department of Trade and Industry from Coopers and Lybrand; decisions on the need for further Government action will be taken in the light of this study.

Water

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures are being taken to ensure improvement in standards of equipment for monitoring water quality; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I understand that the National Rivers Authority and certain water undertakers have committed significant funds to support research and development of equipment for monitoring water quality. The work, which is co-ordinated by the Water Research Centre, involves the specification of performance standards for monitoring equipment as well as the development of new monitoring systems.

Nuclear Discharges

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on discharges into the sea and into the air as a result of nuclear power generation.

Mr. Trippier: Radioactive waste may be discharged from nuclear power stations only if an authorisation has been issued under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960 jointly by Her Majesty's inspectors of pollution and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. Authorisations impose strict conditions and activity limits and are issued only after careful assessment is made of the environmental impact of proposed disposals to ensure that doses to the public are below the maximum permissible limits as recommended by the International Committee on Radiological Protection. Operators are required to use best practicable means to limit discharges of radioactivity. They are also required to monitor discharges, details of which are published annually both by the generating industry and this Department. The premises concerned are subject to scrutiny by inspectors to ensure compliance with the terms of the authorisation.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will take action to extend to council tenants the grants payable for energy efficiency under the Local Government and Housing Act.

Mr. Michael Spicer: There are no plans to extend the private sector home renovation grant provisions in the 1989 Act to council tenants. Local authorities are able to fund energy efficiency measures for their own stock from within their housing investment programme allocations. In addition, the Secretary of State for Energy has introduced provisions in the Social Security Bill for a grant scheme to assist low income households in the council and private sectors with basic insulation measures through community insulation services.

QEII Conference Centre Agency

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what specific financial, efficiency and quality of service targets he has approved for the QEII Conference Centre Agency for the current year and for the longer term.

Mr. Chris Patten [holding answer 15 January 1990]: Financial targets presently approved for the Queen Elizabeth II conference centre are to achieve an operating surplus of £53,000 in 1989-90, £200,000 in 1990-91 and £320,000 in 1991-92 before interest, depreciation and rate charges are levied. Targets covering the period up to 1994-95 will be set when the five-year corporate plan is approved later this year.

The centre's efficiency will be measured broadly by the extent of increases in its occupancy level. This currently stands at 56 per cent. and specific targets will be set within the corporate plan.

No specific quality of service target has yet been set but one of the centre's fundamental objectives is continually to improve the standards of service offered to clients. These are monitored through analysis of both client/delegate questionnaires and the volume of bookings, particularly those representing repeat business.

National Housing Forum

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he plans to discuss with the National Housing Forum its statement about the need to build 3 million homes by the end of the century.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 15 January 1990]: My right hon. Friend has not received any request to meet the National Housing Forum.

Landfill Gas

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to promote energy from landfill gas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 15 January 1990]: Government policy is that all renewable energy sources should be exploited where economically and environmentally acceptable. The Government through the Department of Energy are funding a major programme of research into landfill gas with a contract value over £1 million. This includes work to optimise the extraction of gas from landfill sites and increase the understanding of the biological processes which generate gas. There are 30 such schemes currently operating in the United Kingdom and over 30 at the construction or planning stage.

Water

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the current strength of the new drinking water inspectorate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The chief inspector of the drinking water inspectorate has been appointed and seven other professional and administrative staff are already in post. A number of professional posts are being advertised.

WALES

Economic Activity (North Wales)

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what studies he has made of changes in the levels of economic activity in north Wales over the period 1979-89.

Mr. Peter Walker: Since 1979 Ministers at the Welsh Office have taken, and will continue to take, a close personal interest in the economic development of all areas of north Wales, working with the Welsh Development Agency, the Development Board for Rural Wales and the Wales Tourist Board. The most recent exercise aimed at sustaining the improvement in the economy of north Wales resulted in the publication on 6 December 1989 of the document "A55—The Road to Opportunity".

Health Provision (South Glamorgan)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he next proposes to meet the South Glamorgan county council to discuss health provision.

Mr. Grist: We have no plans at present to meet the South Glamorgan county council to discuss health provision.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the latest unadjusted figures for unemployment in (a) Newport, (b) Gwent and (c) Wales; and if he will give the equivalent figures for 1979 on the most nearly comparable basis.

Mr. Peter Walker: On 14 December 1989, the numbers of unemployment claimants in the Newport district, Gwent and Wales were 4,604, 13,475, 87,161 respectively. Unadjusted figures for 1979 are not available on a basis that enables a valid comparison to be made.

The hon. Gentleman may like to note, however, that since he first asked me this question on 6 July 1987 the unadjusted unemployment figures for the Newport district, Gwent and Wales have fallen by 47 per cent., 47 per cent. and 43 per cent. respectively.

Drinking Water

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the percentage by volume of drinking water in Wales that is treated by adding (a) chlorine and (b) ozone.

Mr. Grist: I am informed by Dwr Cymru that the information is as follows: (a) over 99 per cent.; (b) none.

Education Authorities

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all local education authorities in Wales in rank order of expenditure per secondary pupil per year, starting with the highest spending authority, together with their position in the table of examination results for school leavers achieving grades A to C at GCSE in 1988 and 1989.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information in respect of 1987-88 is shown in the following table:

	Expenditure per secondary school pupil (£) (1987-88 financial year)	Examination result position (1987-88 academic year)[1]
West Glamorgan	1,713	6
Gwent	1,535	7
Powys	1,534	1
Dyfed	1,470	5
Gwynedd	1,469	2
Clwyd	1,431	3
Mid Glamorgan	1,426	8
South Glamorgan	1,402	4

Examination information for 1988-89 is not yet available.

[1] Ranked in order of the percentage of the 1988 school leavers achieving one or more grades A-C at GCSE, A-C at 'O' level or CSE grade 1.

Examinations

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the number of children sitting (a) GCSE and (b) A-level examinations in each local education authority in Wales as a percentage of the total number in the relevant year groups for 1988; and if he will list by each local education authority in Wales the total number of children achieving (i) GCSE grades A to C, (ii) GCSE grades C to F and (iii) A-level grades A to E as a percentage of the total number of pupils in the relevant year in 1988 and 1989.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I shall write to my hon. Friend and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Household Refuse Tips

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what guidelines he has issued to Welsh district councils on the treatment of methane seepage from household refuse tips;

(2) what guidelines he has issued to Welsh district councils on the minimum distance required between new housebuilding areas and existing methane-generating household refuse tips (a) with and (b) without methane collection;

(3) what guidelines he has issued to Welsh district councils on the minimum time lapse required before building can be allowed in safety on household refuse tips;

(4) what guidelines he has issued to Welsh local authorities on the extraction of methane from household refuse tips.

Mr. Grist: Technical guidelines on the monitoring and control of landfill gas are provided in waste management paper No. 27, "The Control of Landfill Gas", which was published by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution in 1989, and Welsh Office circular 38/39 which gives advice to local planning authorities about the use of their planning powers in relation to landfill sites which may be generating harmful gases. While not specifying a particular time-lapse before development may commence in safety, circular 38/89 advises local planning authorities to exercise due caution in granting permission for development or redevelopment on or near landfill sites. It advises that planning permission should not be granted unless reliable arrangements can be made to overcome the danger of migrating gas.

The circular also refers to the provisions of article 18 of the Town and Country Planning General Development Order 1988 which requires a local planning authority to consult the waste disposal authority before granting planning permission for development within 250 m of land which is (or has been at any time in the 30 years before the relevant application) used for the deposit of waste, and which has been notified to the planning authority by the waste disposal authority. Copies of the circular 38/39 and waste management paper No. 27 have been placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what guidelines he has issued to Welsh district councils on the environmental and public safety parameters for the removal of the contents of 10 to 20-year-old household refuse tips;

(2) whether he will ask Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution to review the guidelines for the safe excavation and transportation of decayed household refuse tip material of five to 20 years' vintage.

Mr. Grist: No guidelines have been issued by my right hon. Friend. Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution is available to provide waste disposal authorities with advice.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he last reviewed the guidelines on the good management of large household refuse landfill tips.

Mr. Grist: Guidance on landfill practice was given in waste management paper No. 26, published in 1986. Guidance on licensing waste disposal facilities, first published in waste management paper No. 4 in 1976, was revised in a new edition of this paper published in 1988. Copies are in the Library of the House.

Traffic (Pembroke)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received concerning traffic on St. Daniel's Hill, Pembroke; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: None. This is a matter for Dyfed county council as the local highway authority.

A44 (Cardiganshire)

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when the major improvement scheme on the Cardiganshire section of the A44 trunk road from Aberystwyth to Eisteddfa Curig is due to begin.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: A scheme costing nearly £1 million is programmed to start at Capel Bangor in the summer.

Classrooms

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will state in total, and by education authority for (a) primary and (b) secondary schools (i) the number of demountable classrooms in use and (ii) their average age; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Information on the number and age of demountable classrooms in use in primary and secondary schools in Wales is not held centrally.

Business Rates

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 11 January, Official Report, column 725, what is the total amount payable under the new uniform business rate in each case.

Mr. Peter Walker: The amount payable for each hereditament depends upon both the non-domestic rating multiplier and its rateable value, subject in each case to the operation of the transitional arrangements for non-domestic ratepayers. Rateable values for individual hereditaments are contained in local non-domestic rating lists—they are not held centrally. The calculation of 1990-91 rates bills, having regard to rateable values, the multiplier, the transitional arrangements, and 1989-90 rates bills, is a matter for the relevant charging authority.

PCBs

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the safety of the open hearth incinerator at the Rechem plant at Pontypool as a method of toxic waste disposal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist [holding answer Monday 15 January]: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution has monitored the operation of the Rechem plant since it began operating. Independent assessments of the efficiency of destruction of one of the most stable groups of organic chemicals handled at the site, the PCBs (polychlorinated biphenyls), indicate that a minimum efficiency of 99·9999 per cent. was, and continues to be, achieved. No other toxic waste disposal site is known which exceeds this performance.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give details in parts per billion of the polychlorinated biphenyl levels in foliage readings taken close to the Rechem incinerator at Pontypool from 1979 to the latest available date.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 15 January 1990]: PCBs were detected in samples taken from the New Inn area as follows, values in parts per billion:

1986—Her Majesty's industrial air pollution inspectorate
Five samples—11·1, 14·8, 19·0, 9·4 and 13·0.
1989—Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution
Two samples—221 and 68.
1989—Welsh Office
One sample—15

For the results of sampling commissioned by other agencies, in particular Torfaen borough council and Rechem plc, the hon. Gentleman should approach the organisations concerned.

ENERGY

Wind Energy

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what studies his Department has commissioned to identify suitable sites within the United Kingdom for harnessing wind energy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: My Department has commissioned two studies to estimate the potential number of sites. One study covers the whole of the United Kingdom and the other is making a detailed examination of the north of Scotland where the wind conditions are particularly attractive.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when the next review of priorities renewable energy research and development will take place.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Energy Paper No. 55, "Renewable Energy in the UK: The Way Forward", published in June 1988, laid out proposals for the development of renewable energy technologies. These are reviewed annually.

Landfill Sites

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his most up-to-date estimate of the contribution that may be made by electricity generated from methane from household refuse landfill sites to the non-fossil fuel obligation.

Mr. Baldry: How they meet their respective obligations under the non-fossil fuel obligation will be a matter for the public electricity suppliers, subject to their duty under the Electricity Act 1989 to satisfy the Secretary of State or the Director General of Electricity Supply that they have made appropriate arrangements.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last reviewed the use of methane from household refuse tips as a source of energy.

Mr. Peter Morrison: My Department is supporting a wide range of R and D with a contract value of over £1 million for work on methane from landfill sites. This includes work to optimise the extraction of gas from landfill sites and increase our understanding of the processes that lead to methane generation. We last reviewed our estimates of the contribution that such methane could make to United Kingdom energy supplies in October 1989. The figures, which are necessarily subject to considerable uncertainty, are given in the United Kingdom study for the intergovernmental panel on climate change. This report, "An Evaluation of Energy Related Greenhouse Gas Emissions and Measures to Ameliorate Them", was lodged in the Library of the House last November and will be published shortly as an energy paper.

Energy Conservation

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, further to his answer of 19 December, Official Report, column 117, to the hon. Member for Cardiff, West (Mr. Morgan) if he will give the number of projects of the building research energy conservation unit which are (a) completed and (b) under way for the domestic sector alone.

Mr. Wakeham: The numbers of projects under the energy efficiency demonstration and R and D schemes in the domestic sector which were managed by the building research establishment unit since 1979 are as follows:

(a) Projects completed—37
(b) Projects under way—27

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, further to his answer of 20 December, Official Report, column 310, if he will give details of the initiative taken with the building societies in pursuit of a voluntary approach to energy audits.

Mr. Wakeham: My right hon. Friend the Minister of State announced an initiative on 9 June 1988 between the Energy Efficiency Office (EEO) and the Building Societies Association to help building societies promote energy efficiency to their customers. A letter giving details was sent at that time to all hon. Members.

The initiative involved the publication of a leaflet by the EEO and the Building Societies Association for building societies to make available to their borrowers. The leaflet gives basic information on energy efficiency measures and finance, and invites recipients to send for "Your Home Energy Survey", a detailed information pack from the EEO which includes a home energy checklist to assist householders in carrying out a simple audit of energy efficiency measures in their homes.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will give for the nine month periods ended September 1987, September 1988 and September 1989, for each region, the numbers of (a) community insulation projects or schemes, (b) draught-proofing jobs completed under community insulation, (c) loft insulation jobs completed under community insulation and (d) trainees and participant workers.

Mr. Wakeham: The following table gives the information that is available in respect of community insulation projects for the periods requested:

PowerGen

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the current status of PowerGen.

Mr. Baldry: PowerGen is currently a division of the Central Electricity Generating Board.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Child Pornography

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received concerning the production and distribution of child pornography; what action is being taken to provide extra resources to police forces to deal with this problem; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We have received a number of representations drawing attention to the abhorrent trade in child pornography. The deployment of police resources to particular tasks is an operational matter for chief officers. The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis has increased the obscene publications branch from 12 to 18 officers specifically to deal with child pornography. Other officers of the Metropolitan police and other forces also deal with it in the course of other duties.

The Protection of Children Act 1978 (as amended by the Criminal Justice Act 1988) makes it an offence to produce, possess or show indecent photographs, films or video recordings of children under 16, or to advertise their distribution or showing. The police can obtain warrants to enter and search premises and remove any indecent material. Maximum penalties for child pornography range up to three years' imprisonment, an unlimited fine, or both.

There are already strong measures against child pornography, but we are ready to consider proposals for making them more effective.

War Crimes

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to announce the Government's intentions in respect of legislation to enable the prosecution of alleged Nazi war criminals living in the United Kingdom.

Mr. John Patten: I would refer the hon. Member to the reply given on 16 January to my hon. Friend the Member for Hendon, South (Mr. Marshall) at column 171.

Emergency Control Centres

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish in the Official Report the names of local authorities that do not currently meet guidelines laid down in his Department's circulars for emergency control centres.

Mr. John Patten: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from him on 18 December 1989 at columns 18-19.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if his Department has a target date for all local authorities to comply with his Department's emergency plans, including the provision of emergency control centres.

Mr. John Patten: No. The requirements for local authorities to make plans and to establish emergency control centres for civil defence purposes are contained in the Civil Defence (General Local Authority Functions) Regulations which came into force in 1983. Progress in meeting these statutory requirements is monitored through the Government's planned programme for implementation of the regulations. As part of this monitoring scheme, targets for related activities are agreed annually with individual local authorities, taking into account the state of their preparedness at the time; priorities which are set on a national basis after consultation with the local authority associations; and the financial provision made centrally for grant in support of the civil defence functions. A report on progress up to October 1988 was published in January 1989 and a copy is in the Library. Advances on the position shown in that report are now being considered in the light of more recent information provided by local authorities.

Blundeston Prison

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the disturbances which occurred inside Blundeston prison, Suffolk, on 11 and 12 January.

Mr. Mellor: During the evening of 11 January a demonstration by prisoners in one wing spread quickly to two other wings. Damage was caused to fittings, furniture and windows and prison officers had to withdraw from two wings and the upper part of the third wing for a time, for their own safety. Police were deployed outside the prison, the other emergency services attended and staff from other prisons were sent in support in accordance with contingency plans and were held in readiness but not deployed. No inmates escaped. Prison staff regained control of two wings in about two hours and complete control had been restored by midnight, without injury to staff or inmates or structural damage.

The regional director for the south-east region of the prison service is examining the cause of this demonstration, which is not immediately evident. Meanwhile, although no accommodation was lost, 24 inmates have been transferred to other prisons in the region for control reasons and work is almost complete on repairing the damage.

This was an unpleasant incident and I should like to pay tribute to the professional way in which it was handled by local management and staff and to the other services concerned for their full and ready assistance.

Risley

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to publish the Dunbar report into the Risley incident; if he will place a copy of the report or a summary of findings in the Library; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: A summary including the list of recommendations resulting from the inquiry has already been placed in the Library, and action taken as indicated in the reply of my right hon. Friend the Member for Whitney (Mr. Hurd) to a question from the hon. Member for Warrington, North (Mr. Hoyle) on 25 July 1989 at columns 607-08.

Ambulance Services

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his most up-to-date information on which police authorities are involved in providing ambulance services; and what is the number of man hours provided by each police authority.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The readily available information is that up to 12 January police forces had provided approximately the number of man hours shown in the table in assisting the ambulance service in their areas. Derbyshire ceased providing assistance on 3 January.

Approximate number of man hours

	Man hours
Bedfordshire	23,900
Cheshire	1,500
Derbyshire	7,000
Dorset	14,800
Essex	2,000
Hampshire	8,500
Hertfordshire	40,000
Lincolnshire	2,900
Northumbria	27,600
South Yorkshire	38,500
Staffordshire	9,800
Surrey	1,700
Thames Valley	1,000
Warwickshire	1,300
West Mercia	14,500
West Midlands	54,500
West Yorkshire	29,200

I understand that in the Metropolitan police district about 460 officers are usually employed in each 24-hour period assisting the ambulance service.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the acting chief constable of the West Midlands as to the cost per police man hour of deploying the police on ambulance duties within the West Midlands police district.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand that in the West Midlands the basic cost per officer per hour is about £16·60. Additionally charges for vehicle running costs, accommodation and overheads will be made.

Street Lighting

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will review the recommended types of street lighting for use in areas of social stress in cities.

Mr. John Patten: No. It is for highway authorities to satisfy themselves as to the adequacy of street lighting in their areas. However, we are anxious to know more about the link between street lighting and crime, and with the fear of crime, which is why we have contracted Southampton university to conduct a major study into these links in Wandsworth. Interim results from this study are expected to be available during April.

Nottinghamshire Police

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will grant the latest request for Nottinghamshire county police authority for extra numbers of policemen.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. and learned Friend announced on 23 November 1989 at column 12 that he had approved 26 of the 63 police posts for which the Nottinghamshire police authority applied with effect from 1 April 1990.

Birmingham Pub Bombings

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last discussed the Birmingham pub bombings case with the Director of Public Prosecutions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. and learned Friend has not discussed this case with the Director of Public Prosecutions.

Shops Act

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to issue new guidelines to local authorities on the Shops Act.

Mr. Mellor: No.

National Television Licence Record Office

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will investigate the work of the national television licence record office at Bristol; and why a letter sent to the centre on 20 November by the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish was still not replied to by 11 January.

Mr. Mellor: I understand that NTVLRO dispatched a reply to the hon. Member on 9 January, and told him this when he telephoned on 10 January. The break for Christmas and the new year did cause some delay in responding, and NTVLRO regrets that the customary interim reply had not been sent in this instance. Its procedures are being reviewed to deal with this.

Immigrants

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the payment made in each year since the Act was brought into effect to local authorities in Wales under sectoion 11 of the Local Government Act 1966 relating to expenditure for Commonwealth immigrants by local authorities.

Mr. John Patten: The amount of grant paid to local authorities in Wales from the financial year 1983-84 onwards (the first year in which grant was claimed) is given in the table. The figures represent 75 per cent. of total section 11 expenditure in each year, the remainder being paid by the local authorities.

Financial Year	Grant (£)
1983-84	63,551
1984-85	118,702
1985-86	156,583
1986-87	210,200
1987-88	227,039
1988-89	252,802

Police Efficiency

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he next expects to meet the Association of Chief Police Officers to discuss improvements in police efficiency.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Improvements in police efficiency is a subject which underlies all my right hon. and learned Friend's discussions with the Association of Chief Police Officers, but he has no plans for a meeting on that subject specifically.

Crime, London

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department to what factors he ascribes the fall in the overall London crime rate and the rise in the London borough of Newham crime rate.

Mr. John Patten: Comparing the 12 months ending September 1989—the latest period for which figures are available—with the 12 months ending September 1988, shows an 0·8 per cent. increase in all recorded crime for London and a 1·6 per cent. increase for Newham. Only in respect of household burglary do the figures for the London borough of Newham show a notable increase while those for the rest of London show a fall.

Car Phones

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many drivers have been prosecuted for using hand-held car phones while driving in each year since such phones have been available.

Mr. John Patten: The available information relates to proceedings at magistrates' courts for all offences of careless driving and so on and is published annually in table 5 of "Offences relating to motor vehicles, England and Wales Supplementary tables". Information is not collected centrally about the circumstances of these alleged offences.

Police Authority Land, South Yorkshire

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the locations of the proposed deals with supermarket chains to build on sites owned by the South Yorkshire police authority, in return for providing a free police station.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand that no such schemes have been agreed. South Yorkshire police authority has, however, discussed informally with property developers in Sheffield and Doncaster the possibility of providing, at the developers' expense, a small amount of accommodation for police use.

Firearms

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list, for the most convenient recent period for which figures are available, the source of firearms recovered after their use in criminal activities, showing those (a) stolen from legitimate United Kingdom licence holders, (b) obtained abroad and illegally imported, (c) stolen from the armed services, (d) unlicensed weapons kept as war souvenirs, and (e) firearms legitimately owned by the criminal who possessed a firearms certificate or shotgun certificate relating to the weapon.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is not collected centrally.

PRIME MINISTER

Canada

Q.87. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Prime Minister when she next expects to pay an official visit to Canada.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to visit Canada.

AIDS

Q208. Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on the contribution of the Department of Social Security to the Government's strategy against AIDS and HIV.

The Prime Minister: Ministers in the Department of Social Security have carefully considered the implications of AIDS and HIV for the relevant benefits in consultation with the Department of Health.

AIDS sufferers will benefit from the large number of measures recently announced as part of a package of benefit changes intended to improve the help available to disabled people. In particular, many who are in the advanced stages of the illness will benefit from the removal of the six-month qualifying period for attendance allowance for people with terminal illness. This also means that the income support disability premium may be paid sooner. This premium provides extra help to long-term sick or disabled people, currently £13·70 and increasing above normal uprating to £15·40 in April.

In addition to these measures, AIDS sufferers benefit particularly from the special disregard of payments from the Macfarlane Trust.

Whales

Mr. Parry: To ask the Prime Minister if she discussed the killing of whales in the Antarctic by the Japanese at her recent meeting with the Japanese Prime Minister.

The Prime Minister: The Japanese Government are well aware of the feelings of the British people about Japan's whaling activities, as was evident from my talks with Prime Minister Kaifu on 12 January.

Japan

Mr. Parry: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on her recent meeting with the Japanese Prime Minister.

The Prime Minister: On 12 January I had talks with the Japanese Prime Minister, Mr. Kaifu, followed by a working lunch. We discussed bilateral relations between the United Kingdom and Japan, which are excellent, and a range of international issues, including East-West affairs, western assistance to eastern Europe, and developments in China and elsewhere in Asia.

Noise

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Prime Minister what recent representations she has received in relation to noise pollution.

The Prime Minister: During the last 12 months I have received a number of letters concerning noise. In the main these have been concerned with noisy neighbours, noisy parties, construction noise and the use of motorcycles off the public highway.

Welsh Language

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Prime Minister whether an ability to understand and speak the Welsh language is a factor taken into consideration before any recommendation is made for appointment of Lord Lieutenants for the Welsh-speaking counties of Wales.

The Prime Minister: Yes, among other factors.

Trinity college, Cambridge

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what considerations she will take into account before making recommendations for the post of Master of Trinity college, Cambridge; what consultations she proposes to undertake; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Recommendations made to the Crown for this appointment, as in other cases, will take account of a range of qualities including intellect, experience and personality, following widely based and confidential consultations.

Ministers (Commercial Interests)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if she will publish the advice given to Ministers of the Crown on their private commercial and business interests.

The Prime Minister: The general principle was set out by the then Secretary of the Cabinet in a memorandum to the royal commission on standards of conduct in public life in 1975, a copy of which is in the Library.

EH101 Helicopter

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Prime Minister if the progress of the anti-submarine warfare version of the EH101 helicopter programme is under regular review by and reporting to the Cabinet Office efficiency unit.

The Prime Minister: No. The efficiency unit works with all Departments to help secure improvements in the management of the public service, but individual programmes and projects are the responsibility of departmental Ministers.

Engagements

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 18 January.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 18 January.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 18 January.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 18 January.

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 18 January.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 18 January.

Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 18 January.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 18 January.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 18 January.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 18 January.

Mr. French: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 18 January.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Government Achievements

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on the achievements of Her Majesty's Government during 1989.

The Prime Minister: Economic growth has continued, although at a slower pace than recently, as domestic demand growth has slowed. The actions taken by the Government to reduce the growth of domestic demand and to bear down on inflation are clearly having their intended effect. Investment continued to rise. Business investment, in particular, grew strongly and reached a new record level as a share of GDP. Net start-ups of new businesses—as measured by VAT registrations—set a new record.

The economy has continued to create new jobs; unemployment has continued to fall and is now around two thirds of the average EC level.

The Government have maintained sound public finances and by the end of the current financial year will have repaid £30 billion of debt in just three years, saving nearly £3 billion a year in interest payments.

The Government have increased spending on priority programmes while maintaining a downward trend over time in the ratio of public spending to GDP. In 1988-89, the ratio was under 40 per cent. for the first time in over 20 years.

The Government have made further progress in the drive to improve value for money in public expenditure —for example, in the Civil Service, implementing the next steps initiative.

The Government have continued the programme of tax reform whose aim has been to create a climate in which businesses thrive and individual initiative is rewarded. The 1989 Budget increased incentives for share ownership, reformed the life assurance tax regime and simplified that for pensions. Employees' national insurance contributions were reformed and reduced. The differential between leaded and unleaded petrol was increased, encouraging the use of unleaded petrol whose market share has grown to nearly 30 per cent., compared with under 2 per cent. a year ago.

The privatisation programme has continued with the successful sale of the water industry. As a result of this policy and tax reliefs designed to encourage shareholding, 22 per cent. of the adult population own shares.

The new employment service brings together benefit payment and job placement functions. It has helped hundreds of thousands of unemployed people into training and jobs.

Employment training is now offering high-quality training for employment to over 210,000 previously unemployed people. The new youth training programme has been launched as a locally delivered high-quality training programme to equip our young people for the challenges of the 1990s and beyond. Compacts between schools and local employers are being established throughout the country. The Training Agency was established to be responsible for the implementation of these and other training and enterprise programmes.

Training and enterprise councils (TECs) will give local employers responsibility for the design and delivery of training to meet the needs of local industry and commerce. Alredy 50 TECs, covering more than half the working population, have been established and are receiving development funding.

The Dock Work Act 1989 has removed from the statute book the 40-year-old dock labour scheme which has sustained restrictive practices and surplus labour in our ports, thus reducing their efficiency and discouraging investment.

The Employment Act 1989 promotes equality of opportunity for women in employment, removes unnecessary restrictions on young people at work, and paves the way for the removal of the weight of industrial training board bureaucracy from major sectors of British industry.

The enterprise initiative continues to attract strong interest from small and medium-sized businesses. A total of 40,000 applications have been received since January 1988, with demands spread throughout the United Kingdom and across both manufacturing and service sectors.

The Government have continued to promote innovation in industry. The market for telecommunications has been liberalised further, notably by the decision to license three consortia to operate personal communications networks, a new form of mobile telephone service that will be based on radio technology.

The Companies Act 1989 has introduced a number of improvements to the regulation of and law on companies, financial services, merger control and insolvency.

The White Paper, "Opening Markets: New Policy on Restrictive Trade Practices" set out the Government's plans for dealing more effectively with anti-competitive agreements.

The DTI environmental programme was launched in May to provide information, advice and encouragement to business to help it successfully address emerging environmental challenges and opportunities.

The Electricity Act 1989 provides for the reorganisation and privatisation of the electricity supply industry in England, Wales and Scotland. Substantial progress has been made in reorganising the industry and the Government intend that the CEGB and the area boards will be reconstructed as Companies Act companies at the end of March 1990.

Government policies on taxation and licensing have ensured that 1989 was another successful year for the United Kingdom continental shelf. Drilling activity in 1989 matched the record levels in 1988.

The Energy Efficiency Office's programme secures recurrent annual savings now worth over £500 million per year. In 1989 it introduced a major best practice programme, to advance and spread good practice in energy efficiency. The Electricity Act 1989 will give further impetus to energy efficiency, both from competition in generation and from the requirement on suppliers to provide customers with specific guidance on this subject.

The Government have acted to ensure that Britain's growing transport needs are met safely, efficiently and with proper respect for the environment.

Agreement in principle has been achieved on key elements of a liberalised internal market in aviation in the European Community. The Government have intensified aviation security, and have brought forward the Aviation and Marine Security Bill. The Government have approved investment by the Civil Aviation Authority in a new en-route air traffic control centre that will greatly increase capacity.

The Government have agreed external financing limits which will allow British Rail to undertake 75 per cent. more investment in real terms over the next three years than in the previous three years, and London Regional Transport 70 per cent. more. The go-ahead was announced for the extension of the Jubilee line into docklands.

The White Paper "Roads for Prosperity" announced plans to more than double the road programme in England to over £12 billion. The emphasis will be on widening existing routes so as to deliver extra capacity quickly and with minimum environmental effect. Planned investment in road construction over the next three years is 50 per cent. higher in real terms than in the previous three years. "Roads in Wales: Progress and Plans for the 1990s" set out the major investment programme for Welsh roads. In Scotland it has been announced that provision for new construction and improvements of motorways and trunk roads will by 1992-93 be substantially above the current level, while expenditure on maintenance and construction together will also be significantly higher.

The Green Paper "New Roads by New Means" set out proposals for the private financing of new roads additional to the publicly financed road programme. The Government have announced a range of proposals for tackling traffic congestion in London.

The Government have taken important steps to improve transport safety, through the publication of the White Paper "The Road User and the Law", hard-hitting campaigns to improve road safety and the establishment of the marine accident investigation branch.

The Government have responded promptly and introduced comprehensive measures to deal with several outbreaks of food-borne illness and contamination incidents in order to protect consumers throughout the country. A Food Safety Bill has now been introduced in Parliament to ensure that our food safety laws keep pace with the revolution that is taking place in the way in which food is produced, stored and prepared.

The Government have made further progress in achieving a better balance between agricultural production and the environment notably through new powers to introduce nitrate sensitive areas and the introduction of new capital grants favouring the environment.

At the EC Council of Fisheries Ministers in December, the Government secured the best possible deal under the common fisheries policy for British fishermen consistent with conservation.

The outcome of the European Community's farm price review fully reflected the decision taken on stabilisers during the previous year leading to further downward pressure on prices and expenditure. The Community also reached agreement on the reviews of its regimes for beef and sheepmeat and of the provisions for farm structures.

The Government have maintained and reinforced our commitment to environmental protection both at the national and international level. Internationally, the Government have taken a leading part in efforts to respond to global problems such as ozone depletion and climate change. On 8 November at the United Nations I announced that £100 million of aid has been earmarked over the next three years to help preserve tropical forests. The Government's agreement with Brazil to provide help, especially for the rain forests was the first ever of its kind. Domestically, the Environmental Protection Bill has been introduced which provides for a system of integrated pollution control, reform of the law relating to the regulation of waste disposal, measures to deal with litter, and improvement of the existing system of air pollution control operated by local authorities.

The Water Act 1989 paved the way for the separation of the service and supply functions from the regulatory responsibilities within the water industry. A strong new environmental and economic regulatory framework is provided by two new public sector bodies—the National Rivers Authority and the Directorate General of Water Services. Privatisation has brought the prospect of a better-organised, more efficient industry and will enable the 10 new water service companies to use private sector resources to tackle their essential tasks. The Water Act, for the first time, makes it a specific criminal offence to supply water which is unfit for human consumption. Regulations set strict new standards for drinking water quality which include, and in some cases go further than, the standards required by the EC drinking water directive.

The main provisions of the Housing Act 1988 were implemented during 1989; new private lettings were deregulated, housing association finance has been reformed to allow increased use of private money, powers had been provided to create housing action trusts, and council tenants have been given the right to choose a new landlord.

The Government established Scottish Homes as a vehicle for improving choice and quality in Scottish housing. Housing for Wales became fully operational in April. In both Wales and Scotland the Government launched the flexi-ownership scheme on an experimental basis to allow tenants to buy their homes at about the same outlay as their rent.

The Local Government and Housing Act 1989 reforms the law on local government capital and housing finance and permits improved targeting of public expenditure on the renovation of the housing stock in the public and private sectors. The Act also reinforces the rules on conduct of local authority business, gives local authorities new powers to promote economic development, and regulates their interests in companies.

During the year substantial progress was made in regenerating the inner cities. The Bristol development corporation was established at the start of the year. Private investment in all urban development corporation areas in 1989 exceeded £7·3 billion and city grant has attracted a further £1 billion to inner-city areas. The total Government commitment to the Action for Cities programmes, launched in March 1988, will be nearly £3·5 billion this financial year.

The Football Spectators Act 1989 was passed. It will provide the means to counter the menace of football hooliganism both at home and abroad. The new national football intelligence unit has been established.

The Government's commitment to the National Health Service has been firmly maintained. Resources have continued to expand. An additional £2·6 billion will be made available for 1990-91 representing a real terms increase of 5·5 per cent. More doctors and more nurses are working in the National Health Service and the number of patient treatments has continued to rise. The Government seek to use these resources more effectively and provide patients with even better services with the widest possible choice. Proposals have been put to Parliament for improving the management of health services and also to allow the growing numbers of elderly and physically and mentally disabled people to live in the community with appropriate support. Legislation was introduced to respond to scientific advance in embryology and the treatment of infertility.

In addition to launching the European Year of Information on Cancer last January, the Government have given support to a number of health promotion and prevention schemes. The Human Organ and Transplant Act 1989 prohibits commercial dealing with human organs for transplants and regulates the transplant of organs between persons who are not genetically related.

The Children Act 1989 provides a comprehensive reform of the law and court jurisdiction on the care and upbringing of children, family services and the protection of children from abuse.

The Government have continued to commit greater resources than ever before to social security. In 1989-90 spending will have been 3·2 per cent. higher in real terms than in the previous year, and over one third higher than in 1978-79. We have announced further increases in benefit rates from April 1990 which will bring expenditure on social security to over £1 billion a week for the first time ever, and give greater help to less well-off families, disabled people and carers.

The DSS computerisation programme—one of the largest in the world—is now being steadily introduced into local offices. This, together with the reform and simplification of benefits themselves, is bringing about important improvements in the service the DSS provides to the public. For example, clearance times for income support claims in 1988-89 were on average 22 per cent. better than those for its predecessor, supplementary benefit, in 1987-88.

The Government have continued to implement policies to improve all aspects of the education system in England and Wales and have made important progress in carrying through the provisions of the Education Reform Act 1988. In particular, the national curriculum has begun to be introduced together with arrangements for examinations and assessment in support of it. In higher education the new funding arrangements are beginning to promote greater efficiency and relevance to economic success.

The Government are continuing to create a climate in which the arts will flourish, supported by both the public and private sectors. The Government's three-year programme of funding has been reviewed and increased by 24 per cent. in the next three years. Commercial and individual sponsorship of the arts has continued to rise.

The number of police posts in England and Wales increased by 1,136 during the year, bringing the total to 126,574. The number of civilians supporting the police increased by around 1,300 to 43,600. These increases have been accompanied by action to ensure that the police use their resources effectively.

The Government introduced the Courts and Legal Services Bill to extend choice and improve services to the individual. It will help clients more often to have the advocate of their choice and it will hasten the conveyancing process.

The Government have given high priority to tackling drug misuse through measures to reduce both the supply of and the demand for drugs. Reciprocal agreements or arrangements to trace, freeze and confiscate the proceeds of drug trafficking have been concluded with eight further countries and we have introduced legislation to enable the United Kingdom to ratify the United Nations convention against the illicit traffic in drugs.

Legislation has been passed to strengthen the country's defences against terrorism, to reform section 2 of the Official Secrets Act 1911 and to place the Security Service on a statutory footing. New laws to enhance the controls over the use of firearms have been brought into force. The number of safer cities projects has increased from one to 12. Over £850,000 in grant aid has been approved to fund a number of crime prevention initiatives.

In 1989, work began on six new prison establishments which will provide over 3,000 additional places. Nearly £100 million was spent on major building work at existing establishments, including work on 11 new house blocks which will provide 1,100 new places early in 1990. A new prison for 350 inmates at Banstead in Surrey was brought into use in only 18 months. Work also began on a seven-year programme which will provide integral sanitation in over 6,500 cells in existing establishments.

In Wales, the economy has continued to grow strongly. Inward investment has continued at a very high level with a number of major projects secured in 1989, including Toyota's £140 million engine plant at Deeside, and Bosch's £100 million project at Miskin. Output of the production and construction industries rose by 4·1 per cent. in the year to the second quarter of 1989. The Welsh Development Agency's budget for 1989-90 is the highest ever in real terms, enabling massive programmes of land reclamation and factory building. We have also announced a two-year extension of the highly successful valleys programme. All this has helped to bring about a fall in unemployment in the year to November 1989 of 30,500 (to 86,400) and 2·4 percentage points (to 6·9 per cent.).

Inward investment in Scotland continued strongly. Major investments in 1989 include an expansion by Compaq at Erskine and Stirling, Seiko Instrument's announcement to establish a manufacturing facility in Livingston and the development by Russell Corporation of its Livingston production centre.

In Northern Ireland the Government have continued their efforts to find an agreed basis on which greater responsibility can be devolved to the elected representatives of the people of the Province.

The security forces have continued with dedication and professionalism to combat terrorism in Northern Ireland within the rule of law. The Government have successfully completed a review of the workings of the Anglo-Irish Inter-governmental Conference.

A new Fair Employment Act was approved by Parliament and with it was established a Fair Employment Commission and a new Fair Employment Tribunal. The strong new powers now in force will ensure the basic right of all those in employment or seeking work to be treated fairly irrespective of the community from which they come.

Short Brothers and Harland and Wolff have been returned to the private sector.

The Education Reform (NI) Order 1989, which was recently approved by Parliament, provides for reform of the education system to improve standards and promote integrated education.

The Government announced their decision to support a new Northern Ireland Community Relations Council. This independent body will encourage and support those organisations working to improve relations between the different communities in Northern Ireland.

In foreign affairs, the historic changes now taking place in the Soviet Union and eastern Europe vindicate the policies of sure defence and strong support for human rights which the Government have consistently maintained. The Government have provided substantial financial and practical help for economic and political reform in eastern Europe, both bilaterally and through the European Community and have indeed taken a leading part in formulating Europe's response to these developments. The Government have also continued to give support to the reform policies of President Gorbachev, who paid a very successful visit to the United Kingdom in the course of the year.

At the same time, the Government have continued to assure Britain's sound defence, by maintaining the strength of our conventional forces and providing for the modernisation of our independent nuclear deterrent with Trident. The Government played a full part in devising NATO's comprehensive concept for arms control and defence which was agreed at the NATO summit in May. We have also taken an active and constructive part in the negotiations for reductions in conventional forces in Europe and the elimination of chemical weapons.

Within the European Community, the Government have ensured that Britain remains a leading proponent of completion of the European single market by 1992, as well as being foremost among member states in implementing agreed single market directives.

Significant measures agreed in 1989 included the second banking directive and agreement on a merger control regulation. At the same time the Government have given enthusiastic support to implementation of the first phase of the Delors report on economic and monetary union, while representing strongly the concern felt in all parts of the House about some of the proposals for stages two and three, which would undermine the powers of national Parliaments.

The Government have taken an active part, too, in resolving international disputes. In particular we have contributed to the successful implementation of the United Nations plan for Namibia. We have used our influence to encourage peaceful change in South Africa, welcoming the steps which have already been taken by President De Klerk. The Government declared their full support for the action taken by the United States to enable the democratically elected Government of Panama to take office.

The Government have announced measures to reassure the people of Hong Kong about their future and to give them confidence to remain there. The Government have also worked for a durable and humane solution to the problem of Vietnamese boat people in Hong Kong, which recognises that for those who are not genuine refugees, there is no alternative to repatriation to Vietnam.

The Government have maintained a substantial and effective aid programme geared to the promotion of economic and social progress and the alleviation of poverty in developing countries. The Government have provided swift and generous humanitarian assistance and taken the lead in trying to resolve and respond to Ethiopia's problems. We have continued to provide widespread support for countries undergoing economic policy reform, especially in sub-Saharan Africa, including $100 million for programme aid in Nigeria. We have played a major role in the successful outcome of the ninth replenishment of the International Development Association and the Lomé IV renegotiation. We will be providing nearly £620 million for the former and some £1·3 billion for the latter, Britain's largest-ever single aid commitment.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pensioners (Merseyside)

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people over pensionable age on Merseyside are reliant on state pension alone; and what percentage this represents of all Merseysiders over pensionable age.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I regret that information is not available on a geographical basis in the form requested. Few individuals are reliant solely on their state pension as the majority of people in that situation would be entitled to income support and housing benefit.

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people over pensionable age on Merseyside receive disability-related benefits; which benefits they receive; and what percentage of all Merseysiders over pensionable age receive disability-related benefits.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I regret that information is not available in the form requested.

Fraud Staff

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the annual amount of expenses paid to his Department's fraud staff; and if he will break down the figure into payments for car allowance, overnight accommodation and other categories.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Central records are maintained of expenses paid to all departmental staff but do not identify those staff employed on fraud work. I regret that the required information could therefore be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what surveillance equipment is used by his Department's fraud staff; and in which areas such equipment is held.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Equipment comprising binoculars, radios, cameras and video cameras is held by teams of fraud investigators employed in the Department's headquarters and regional offices who investigate serious organised fraud against social security payments systems. Radios, photographic cameras and binoculars are sometimes used in the investigation of benefit fraud, but limited to occasions where they are necessary effectively to conduct a fraud drive.

Benefit Rules

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many of the claimants affected by the introduction on 10 December of the new benefits rule on claimants earning more than £43 a week he estimates are (a) married/cohabiting women, (b) lone parents, (c) disabled, (d) men aged 50 to 54 years, (e) men aged 55 to 59 years, (f) women aged 50 to 54 years, (g) women aged 55 to 59 years, (h) claimants with intermittent work patterns due to chronic illness or disability and (i) claimants from ethnic minorities.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I regret that this information is not available in the form requested.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on what grounds he rejected the recommendations of the Social Security Advisory Committee which opposed the introduction of the new benefit rules for claimants earning more than £43 in a week.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The report of the Social Security Advisory Committee on the regulations which brought this measure into effect was presented to Parliament on 17 November 1989, prior to the regulations coming into force. The response of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State was published with the report (Cm. 923), which is available in the Library.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to raise the de minimis figure of £12 weekly, following his introduction on 10 December of the new benefit rule on claimants earning more than £43 a week.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The £12 de minimis level was first introduced on 10 December 1989. It is too early to assess its effects and we have no plans to raise the level at present.

Income Support

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his latest estimate of the number of persons on income support who have debts in excess of £100; and if he will indicate what proportion of the debts of income support claimants is on average down to (i) rent arrears, (ii) fuel debts, and (iii) other specified causes.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I regret that the information requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) whether he has any plans to introduce a de minimis level on the application for the full extent normal rule for unemployment benefit; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether he has any plans to introduce an upper weekly earnings limit for unemployment benefit; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Both these measures were introduced with effect from 10 December 1989 by the Social Security (Unemployment, Sickness and Invalidity Benefit) Amendment No. 3 Regulations 1989 (SI 1989/2122), and the Social Security (Computation of Earnings) Amendment Regulations 1989 (SI 1989-2123), which were laid before Parliament on 17 November 1989. Copies of these instruments are available in the Library.

Youth Training Scheme

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many 16 and 17-year-olds are currently denied benefit for not taking up YTS training in the Durham area.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to him on 18 December at column 69.

EMPLOYMENT

Job Clubs

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment for each region and for Great Britain as a whole how many people (a) were members of job clubs on 1 April 1989, (b) have joined job clubs since 1 April 1989 to the latest possible date and (c) have left job clubs since 1 April 1989 to the latest possible date; what were their destinations showing how many entered jobs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tim Eggar: On 1 April 1989, 26,773 people were members of job clubs. The other figures requested and the required breakdowns are given in the following table.

I am very encouraged by the continuing success of job clubs. Over 350,000 people have participated in the programme since it started five years ago. More than 200,000 people have found jobs and over 50,000 have achieved other positive outcomes.

The programme will continue to have an important role in helping longer-term unemployed people and we are taking steps to strengthen it further by introducing pilot projects to establish ways of providing effective help to people not at present able to benefit from job clubs, notably those with severe literacy or language problems.

Health and Safety Executive

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 13 December, Official Report, column 661, what percentage of Health and Safety Executive staff, in the years specified, were trainees.

Mr. Nicholls: Only two grades of staff in the Health and Safety Executive are designated as training grades: factory inspectors class II (for their first two years) and assistant agricultural inspectors (first three years). The number of "trainee" inspectors in these grades expressed as a percentage of the total number of factory and agricultural inspectors in post in HSE are as follows (1 April figures):

1988	12·0

Apart from this a wide range of training is provided (internally or externally) both for new recruits and for more experienced staff, in the various occupational groups employed by HSE.

Unofficial Strikes

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how statistics are kept on the number of days lost through unofficial strikes.

Mr. Nicholls: Separate statistics on unofficial strikes ceased to be published as a regular series in 1981. However, a limited amount of information from a special exercise was included in the Government's Green Paper "Unofficial Action and the Law", a copy of which is in the House of Commons Library.

Jobcentres, Basingstoke and St. Albans

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the highest and lowest rates of pay for jobs advertised in jobcentres at (a) Basingstoke and (b) St. Albans, listing the number of vacancies advertised in each office.

Mr. Eggar: On 11 January the highest rate of pay for a job displayed at the Basingstoke jobcentre was £250 per week and the lowest £76 per week. There were 925 full-time and 260 part-time job vacancy cards displayed. The highest rate of pay for jobs displayed at the St. Albans jobcentre was £187 per week and the lowest £97 per week. There were 277 full-time job and 68 part-time vacancy cards displayed.

Trade Union Members

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many copies of the booklets "Guide for Trade Union Members" and "Short Guide for Trade Union Members" have been printed by the office of the Commissioner for the Rights of Trade Union Members; and to whom they have been distributed.

Mr. Nicholls: I am advised by the independent Commissioner for the Rights of Trade Union Members that 55,000 copies of the "Guide for Trade Union Members" have been printed and 50,510 have been distributed to date, while 260,000 copies of the "Short Guide for Trade Union Members" have been printed and 237,400 have been distributed to date. Copies have been distributed to various members of the public, trade unions, law centre offices, colleges of further education, universities, Conservative trade unionists, solicitors, citizens advice bureaux, libraries (including House of Commons), and Department of Employment group offices and journalists. In addition, copies have been distributed to the French and German embassies, Industrial Society, Labour Relations Agency (Northern Ireland), Conservative party central office, Social and Liberal Democratic party Whips' office, Institute of Personnel Management and the Newspaper Society.

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many staff are employed at the office of the Commissioner for the Rights of Trade Union Members; and what are their salaries.

Mr. Nicholls: I am advised by the independent Commissioner for the Rights of Trade Union Members that four staff are employed at her office; their respective salaries are £21,098, £14,549, £10,747, and £8,305.

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the cost of providing accommodation for the Commissioner for the Rights of Trade Union Members; and if the accommodation is leasehold or freehold.

Mr. Nicholls: I am advised by the independent Commissioner for the Rights of Trade Union Members that the initial cost of providing accommodation for the commissioner was £9,073·50. The accommodation is leasehold.

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the cost of providing office furniture and equipment for the Commissioner for the Rights of Trade Union Members.

Mr. Nicholls: I am advised by the independent Commissioner for the Rights of Trade Union Members that the initial cost of furnishing and equipping the commissioner's office was £13,122·00

Earnings

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish a table showing the increase in output per head in (a) the manufacturing and (b) the non-manufacturing sectors since June 1979 together with percentage increases between April 1979 and April 1989 in the real earnings of (i) full-time adult male workers in manufacturing and (ii) full-time adult male non-manual workers in the private sector, less manufacturing.

Mr. Nicholls: The increases in output per head in manufacturing and non-manufacturing between the second quarter of 1979 and the second quarter of 1989 were 48 per cent. and 12 per cent. respectively.

The real increase in the weekly earnings of full-time adult males in manufacturing between April 1979 and April 1989 was 23 per cent. Figures are not readily available for the private sector less manufacturing and would involve disproportionate cost to compile.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, further to his written reply to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby, dated 11 December 1989, Official Report, column 467-68, concerning increases in weekly and hourly earnings of certain full-time adult male workers, whether he will provide similar information for (a) public sector manual workers, (b) public sector non-manual workers, (c) manufacturing non-manual workers and (d) other private sector non-manual workers.

Mr. Nicholls: The available information is provided in the following table. Figures for item (d) are not readily available and would involve disproportionate cost to compile. The "public sector" and "manufacturing" are not mutually exclusive groupings and are thus not directly comparable.

Disabled Young People

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will make a statement on the Government's plans for ensuring that young people with disabilities are not placed in unsuitable employment or training once the protection of section 119a of the Factories Act 1961 has been removed;

(2) when he will bring into effect, by commencement order, the repeal of the requirement under section 119a of the Factories Act 1961 to notify the careers service when employing a young person.

Mr. Nicholls: Following publication of a consultation paper a working group has been set up to consider responses and propose new arrangements to ensure that all young people with disabilities, including those not covered by the Factories Act, are not placed in unsuitable employment or training. The commencement order to repeal the requirement under section 119a of the Factories Act 1961 to notify the careers service when employing a young person will be brought in when alternative arrangements have been made.

Mines and Quarries

Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many prosecutions, improvement notices, or prohibition notices relating to the control of noise at work in the years 1981 to 1989 have been initiated by the mines and quarries inspectorate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: I refer the honourable member to the answers given to him on 26 October 1989 (Official Report columns 597 to 599).

Sheltered Placement Scheme

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what expenditure levels were reached in the application of the sheltered placement scheme for each year since the scheme started; what is the budget for 1990-91 and what change, in cash, real and percentage terms it reflects; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The information is not available in the form requested. Claims for expenditure are made for the combined expenditure on workshops and sheltered placements. This expenditure, together with an estimate for the current year, is shown in the table. These figures do not include the grants and loans to Remploy Ltd. I will write to the hon. Member when the budget for 1990-91 has been settled.

Year	Cash prices (£000s)
1985-86	21,488
1986-87	24,679
1987-88	27,670
1988-89	29,599
[1]1989-90	35,451

[1] Estimate.

Tourism

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total amount of his Department's investment in tourism over each of the past 10 years by year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: Responsibility for tourism matters in England and Great Britain as a whole passed from the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry to the Secretary of State for Employment in 1985. The totals of the grant-in-aid paid to the British Tourist Authority and the English Tourist Board over the period were as follows:

	£ million
1979-80	23·1
1980-81	25·7
1981-82	28·9
1982-83	33·1
1983-84	31·9
1984-85	34·9
1985-86	33·8
1986-87	40·2
1987-88	45·3
1988-89	49·5

Job Interview Guarantee Scheme

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many agreements have been made with employers to operate the job interview guarantee scheme in each of the 20 pilot areas; how many unemployed people have taken part in the scheme in each area; and, of these, how many secured full-time employment with their sponsoring employer.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him on 10 January 1990 [Official Report, column 675-76.].

Local Offices

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many jobcentres and how many unemployment benefit offices are earmarked for closure under his plan to transfer the employment service to agency status; how many jobs are likely to be lost and at what grades; and what targets the new agency will be required to achieve.

Mr. Nicholls: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Boothferry (Mr. Davis) on 1 December 1989 (Official Report, columns 461-62). It is the intention that the employment service (ES) should be launched as an executive agency in April 1990, and will establish a new network of offices, bringing together the full range of employment service activities under one roof wherever possible.

Plans are being developed for this new network and when decisions have been taken the local Member of Parliament will be informed.

Targets for the employment service in 1990-91 have not yet been finalised and will be published later.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he is taking to ensure that the new and remodelled employment service offices will be fully accessible to people with disabilities, following the launch of the employment service as an executive agency in April.

Mr. Nicholls: The employment service continually reviews its obligations under the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act 1970 which requires buildings to which the public are admitted to be provided with facilities that meet the needs of disabled members of the public.

All new and remodelled employment service offices will be planned to a nationally agreed framework and standards. The design guide will include a section specifically on the requirements of people with disabilities. This will be based on the provisions for people with disabilities already in operation throughout the employment service and will carry forward the recommendations of a recent working group report on employment service local office design. These included:

- single reception point for all visitors that is fully accessible to people with disabilities;
- signs to be easily visible to all (eg. people in wheelchairs);
- hearing loops to be considered where necessary with the signs for these facilities prominently displayed;
- the need to provide appropriate seating for people with disabilities is also to be considered.

Trials at three pilot employment service offices include new vacancy display boards designed to be more accessible to people in wheelchairs.

Jobstart

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people have participated in the 50-plus jobstart scheme in each of the pilot areas; what was the average hourly pay earned by participants, excluding their £20 a week allowance; what was the average amount of hours worked per week by participants; and how many participants remained in employment after the allowance had ceased.

Mr. Eggar: Between the start of the 50-plus jobstart pilots on 26 June 1989 and 12 January 1990 a total of 63 people were accepted on to the programme.

The breakdown of the number of people on the programme and their average hours and wages by area is as follows:

Area	Participants	Average hourly wage £	Average hours
Dudley and Sandwell	15	2·18	19·7
Leeds	27	2·20	18·7
London South	1	2·00	20·0
Lothian and Borders	20	2·30	16·2

Fifty one people are still in receipt of the allowance. It is not possible to provide information on whether those who have left the programme are in employment.

Action Credit Scheme

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employement how many people have taken part in the action credit scheme in each of the three pilot areas; how many ceased claiming income support to start full-time work; how many ceased claiming income support to start part-time work; how many failed to secure employment after the three-month job search period; and whether he has any plans to extend the scheme.

Mr. Nicholls: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to him on 12 January 1990, (Official Report, column 786).

Fraud Staff

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employement what is the annual amount of expenses paid to his Department's fraud staff; and if he will break down the figure into payments for car allowance, overnight accommodation and other categories.

Mr. Eggar: In the year April 1988 to March 1989 the total amount of expenses paid to 1,300 fraud staff, which includes investigators and administrative support staff, from this Department was £2,202,428.

This payment consisted of:

Overnight accommodation and car allowances	1,867,307
Overtime and travelling time	53,402
Equipment (cameras, computers, furniture etc.)	281,719

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what surveillance equipment is used by his Department's fraud staff; and in which areas such equipment is held.

Mr. Eggar: The surveillance equipment used by my Department's fraud investigators is as follows:

- Binoculars
- Cameras
- Radios
- Video Cameras

This Department does not collate centrally information on the surveillance equipment held by areas.

Disabled Persons

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the most recent figures for the number of firms (a) satisfying quota obligations under the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944, (b) issued with quota exemption permits and (c) not meeting their quota obligations and without quota exemption permits.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 16 January 1990]: On 1 June 1989, the latest date for which information is available, the number of firms (a) satisfying quota obligations under the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944 was 7,276, (b) issued with quota permits was 18,530 and (c) not meeting their quota obligations and without permits was 6,170.

Wage Increases

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his estimate of the effect on employment of double-digit wage increases in the financial sector; and what is the basis of this estimate.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I have been asked to reply.

I do not have an estimate of the effect of high wage increases in the financial sector on its own, but excessive wage increases in any sector of the economy will be harmful to jobs.

HEALTH

Hospitals, Trent

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for the last 12 months by hospital within the Trent regional health authority (a) hospitals that have been on red alert and (b) the duration of the alert.

Mr. Freeman: This information is not held centrally. The hon. Member may wish to write to the chairman of the Trent regional health authority for the information he seeks.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for the Trent regional health authority, the number of hospitals (a) opened and (b) closed in each year since 1980.

Mr. Freeman: The information is not available centrally. The hon. Member may like to write to the chairman of Trent regional health authority for the information he seeks.

Hamlets Way Residential Unit

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health why the Hamlets Way residential unit, at 199 Hamlets way, London E.3, has been designated part III accommodation by his Department; and how many such hostels have been so designated.

Mr. Freeman: The designation of residential establishments managed by local authorities is a matter for the authority concerned and information is not collected centrally. I understand that the Tower Hamlets Way hostel is treated as a local authority-managed residential care home for income support purposes but this is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security. The Department of Health advised local authorities of the changes in the arrangements for paying income support to people in hostels in LAC(89)13 issued in September 1989. A copy of this circular is in the Library.

Ambulance Dispute

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a further statement on the dispute involving ambulance crews.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Duncan Nichol, the NHS chief executive, has written to the trade unions confirming that he would be willing to hold further talks when there is some indication of a significant change in their position.

Elderly and Handicapped People

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if it is his intention to bring forward proposals to amend the existing legal responsibilities of local authorities towards vulnerable elderly or handicapped people.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have no plans to amend the existing legal responsibilities of local authorities towards these groups other than those announced in the White Paper "Caring for People" and set out in the National Health Service and Community Care Bill.

Self-governing Hospitals

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received in respect of feasibility studies being carried out by hospitals considering self-governing status.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have received a small number of representations on this subject. The Department of Health and health authorities are undertaking a wide range of projects designed to inform the implementation of the Government's proposals to improve the Health Service, including the setting up of National Health Service hospital trusts.

Drinking Water

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on studies on the morbidity rates of populations subjected to drinking water which has been chlorinated.

Mr. Freeman: Adequate disinfection by chlorination has had a marked effect in reducing morbidity rates from water-borne infectious diseases. However, this treatment leads to the production of chlorination by-products, some of which have been shown to cause cancer in laboratory animals when administered in large doses for long periods. Numerous studies of chlorinated water and disease rates, particularly cancer morbidity and mortality have been published, and the Department sought advice from its independent expert advisory committee on the medical aspects of the contamination of air, soil and water. It said:

"We have found no sound reason to conclude that the consumption of the by-products of chlorination in drinking water which has been treated and chlorinated according to current practices, increases the risk of cancer in humans.

The effective disinfection of water supplies is clearly of great importance in maintaining public health. In our opinion, modification of chlorination processes which have proved effective over many years, or the replacement of chlorination by other disinfectants, is not required by the available data on cancer epidemiology, animal carcinogenicity, and mutagenicity in relation to chlorination by-products in drinking water."

This advice was conveyed to water authorities and water companies in England and Wales in DoE/Welsh Office letter WP 12/1986, and republished in annex 1 of "Guidance on Safeguarding the Quality of Public Water Supplies" (HMSO, 1989). Relevant epidemiological and other research is kept under review.

Post-menopausal Women

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if there are any National Health Service-funded studies to estimate the cost to the National Health Service of treating osteoporosis, heart attacks and strokes in post-menopausal women; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department has recently commissioned an economic evaluation of hormone replacement therapy which will look at its costs and benefits in relation to osteoporosis and cardiovascular disease. We are also considering the funding of three further projects on osteoporosis and related problems. Comprehensive information about research funded by the National Health Service is not collected centrally.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to reduce hospital waiting lists.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Government's aim is to reduce the time patients have to wait for treatment, because this, rather than the number waiting at any moment, is a key measure of service in the NHS.

In 1986 the Government launched the waiting list initiative to tackle the problem of excessive waiting time. Health authorities and their clinical staff have introduced many improvements both in management—to ensure the most efficient use of resources—and in clinical practice —for example by the greater use of new techniques and day surgery.

The waiting list initiative has been backed by a waiting list fund. The Government have invested £119 million over four years in the waiting list fund to tackle particular problems of long waiting times. By April 1990 the fund will have enabled well over 300,000 additional inpatients and day cases and 200,000 additional outpatients to be treated. Many thousands more will be treated in 1990-91.

In early 1989 a management team, led by Mr. John Yates of Inter Authority Comparisons and Consultancy, went into the 22 districts with the longest waiting times in the country to find out why the lists there were so long and to suggest how they could be shortened. Part of the waiting list fund was earmarked to finance the team's recommendations, where additional resources, and extra treatments, proved necessary.

In the first six months of the team's work the number of patients waiting over a year in the 43 specialties studied reduced by 26 per cent., and further reductions are expected. The team will continue its work in 1990-91 when, backed up by £12 million of the £33 million fund for next year, it will be examining the 100 longest specialty waiting lists with most patients waiting over one year for treatment.

Amniocentesis Tests

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many women received an amniocentesis test in the 15th, 16th and 17th weeks of pregnancy.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make it his policy to commission research on the rate of spontaneous abortion and the rate of miscarriage associated with the amniocentesis test;

(2) what figures he has on the number of premature births associated with the amniocentesis test.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: A report by the Royal College of Physicians on pre-natal diagnosis and genetic screening published in September 1989 said that there is still some uncertainty about the exact risk to pregnancy from amniocentesis largely because the risk is so low and extremely difficulty to measure. The report noted that studies suggest a 1 per cent. excess risk of spontaneous abortion following amniocentesis and a slight increased incidence of mild respiratory problems in the newborn. The commissioning of further research would be a matter for the Medical Research Council which is responsible for biomedical research.

Miscarriages

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the number of miscarriages by the week of pregnancy in which they occurred from the 15th week to term.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not held centrally.

Selective Reduction of Pregnancy

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State Health how many National Health Service hospitals and private clinics practise selective reduction of pregnancy; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We know of two hospitals where selective termination of pregnancy has recently been performed. The names of the hospitals are not released for reasons of maintaining confidentiality.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on the practice of selective reduction of pregnancy; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Selective termination of pregnancy should be performed only if the requirements of the Abortion Act 1967 are fulfilled.

Conductive Education

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what further steps he is taking to encourage conductive education.

Mr. Freeman: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Disabled gave my hon. Friend the Member for Suffolk, South (Mr. Yeo) on 15 December at columns 848-49. The Department is playing an active role in discussions with the Hungarian Government and in the other measures needed to bring conductive edcuation to this country, including support for the Foundation for Conductive Education, Birmingham.

Abortion

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on the laws on abortion in each western European country; and if he will give details of the gestational periods equivalent to British gestational calculations during which abortion is permitted in each of those countries with the specific permitted grounds for abortion within each of these periods.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Bolton, North-East (Mr. Thurnham) on 11 January at column 716. The survey referred to also covers the law and practice on abortion. I will write to the hon. Member with the information requested as soon as the report is ready.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health upon what date he expects to be able to publish the results of the recent study into post abortion stress disorder.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: In view of the large amount of data to be analysed the contract for the joint Royal College of General Practitioners/Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists study "Attitudes to Pregnancy" was recently extended to 31 December 1990. The final report is expected to be submitted to the Department shortly after that date.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether any application for a product licence has yet been received in connection with the abortifacient drug RU486.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It is not usual practice to disclose information about whether or not an application for a product licence has been received or the progress of any such application for reasons of commercial confidentiality.

Trust Funds

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to be able to write to the hon. Member for Don Valley as promised in his answer of 16 November 1989, Official Report, columns 421-22, relating to trust funds.

Mr. Freeman: I have written to the hon. Member today.

AIDS

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will set out in the Official Report the terms in which his Chief Medical Officer stated recently that the outcome for HIV carriers is likely to be the same irrespective of cause; and what consideration he has given to its relevance to the claim for financial help for people who acquired the virus from blood transfusions equal to that given to people with haemophilia who contracted the virus after the injection of contaminated blood products under the National Health Service.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There is no known difference in the proportion of people developing AIDS at any given time interval following infection when comparing the different routes of transmission of sexual intercourse, and receipt of infected blood or blood products. This issue has been explored in a number of scientific articles including the Journal of the American Medical Association (3 February 1989, pp 725-727) and AIDS 1988, 2 (supplement 1, S57-63). Apparent differences may be due to the effect of age on the rate of progression to AIDS. The ex-gratia payments given to provide help for haemophiliacs with HIV and their families recognised their wholly exceptional circumstances. Haemophiliacs were already suffering from a disability which affected their employment prospects, insurance and mortgage status. Also the hereditary nature of haemophilia means that more than one member of the family may be infected with HIV.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will be replying to the letter from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe, of 23 December 1989, on people who have acquired AIDS from blood transfusions under the National Health Service.

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. and learned Friend has now written to the right hon. Member.

Population Statistics

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what projections he has of the total numbers and percentage of the United Kingdom population who will be (a) over 60 years old and (b) over 75 years old in the years 2000, 2010 and 2020; and what is the total number and percentage of the United Kingdom population who are currently 50 years of age or older.

Mr. Freeman: The most recent (1988-based) projections of the Government Actuary are as follows:

Thousands

Year	Aged 60 and over		Aged 75 and over
	Number	Per cent.	Number	Per cent.
1990	11,884	20·7	3,985	6·9
2000	12,017	20·3	4,369	7·4
2010	13,214	22·1	4,461	7·4
2020	14,400	23·7	4,730	7·8

At mid-1988 the United Kingdom population aged 50 or older was estimated to be 17,878,000 or 31·3 per cent.

Lead

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will outline current research into the long-term effects of the ingestion of small amounts of lead on children in respect of neurological damage; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what studies are being made of the permanency of effects of the ingestion of small amounts of lead on children; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The Department is aware of recent research, published in the United States, which attributes neurobehavioural deficits in teenagers to their markedly elevated exposure to lead during childhood. The Medical Research Council (MRC) is the main agency through which the Government support biomedical and clinical research in the United Kingdom. The MRC receives its grant-in-aid from the Department of Education and Science. It is not currently funding any research into the long-term effects of the ingestion of small amounts of lead on children in respect of neurological damage. However, the council continues to keep this area under review. It is always willing to look at any sound proposals for research. Other research may be in hand elsewhere, but will not be known of until it is published.

Research on the neuropsychological effects of lead in children was reviewed by the Medical Research Council advisory group which reported in June 1988. The group's conclusions were:

"The Group's earlier report in 1983 suggested that any effects of lead at the exposure levels seen in the United Kingdom are very small and cannot be detected with any certainty. This conclusion is still largely applicable, but the evidence for an association between body lead burden and IQ is now stronger.

While observed statistical associations detailed in this review are consistent with the hypothesis that low level lead exposure has a small negative effect on the performance of children in ability and attainment tests, the limitations of epidemiological studies in drawing causal inferences are such that it is not possible to conclude that exposure to lead at current urban levels is definitely harmful. In view of these conclusions, it would be prudent to continue to reduce the environmental lead to which children are exposed."

Since 1974 it has been the policy of successive Governments to contain and reduce exposure to lead wherever practicable. Successful measures have been taken to reduce lead exposure through petrol, water, air, food, industrial emissions, paint, cosmetics, ceramic glazes and toys. Monitoring programmes have shown a continuing fall in blood lead levels in children and adults.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if there are any proposals for regulatory action in respect of the ingestion of small amounts of lead; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: There are currently no such proposals. Regulations already in force limit the levels of lead found in the environment, foodstuffs and consumer products. The Water Supply (Water Quality) Regulations 1989 set a statutory maximum allowable concentration of 50 microgrammes of lead per litre of drinking water. The Lead in Food Regulations provide a maximum permitted general limit of lead content of food of 1·0 milligrammes per kilogramme of food, with individual limits on specified foods.

The Pencils and Graphic Instruments (Safety) Regulations 1974 limit the amount of lead in paint and in the lead or colouring materials of pencils or crayons, although under the terms of a voluntary agreement, the industry has already phased out lead in domestic paints. The Glazed Ceramic Ware (Safety) Regulations 1988 specify leaching limits of heavy metals from crockery, and similar regulations apply to cooking utensils. The lead content of toys is limited under the Toy (Safety) Regulations of 1974 and 1989.

There are also programmes to reduce lead levels in the atmosphere, and to reduce or eliminate lead exposure through industrial emissions, cosmetics and petrol.

Defibrillators

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total number of defibrillators provided for ambulances out of health authority funds.

Mr. Freeman: This information is not held centrally.

Hospice Funding

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will be in a position to give the amounts of Government funding to St. Ann's hospices at Heald green, Cheshire, and Little Hulton, Greater Manchester.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We shall shortly be notifying health authorities of the allocations they will receive from the additional £8 million we have made available for 1990-91 to enable them to increase the contributions they already make to voluntary hospices and similar organisations. The funding of individual projects is a matter for discussions between the authorities and the organisations concerned.

Welfare Milk Scheme

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he plans to monitor negotiations between the constituent parts of the milk industry with respect to the apportionment between them of costs incurred as a result of current proposals for the welfare milk scheme discount; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Regulations introducing a revised reimbursement price structure for the supply of liquid welfare milk reflect the size and value of the purchase. The regulations assist the milk industry voluntarily to use its well-established price negotiating procedures to share the costs equitably throughout all sectors of the trade. It would not be appropriate to monitor these commercial transactions centrally.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 9 January, Official Report, column 572, if he will make a statement on the nature and scope of his new research programme into the vertical transmissibility of BSE.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him on 18 December 1989, Official Report, Col. 30. This is a long-term research project and I have nothing further to add to my previous answer.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what compensation is paid in respect of cattle first identified as bovine spongiform encephalopathy sufferers in markets and abbatoirs; to whom such compensation is paid; and on how many occasions during each of the last four years such compensation has been paid.

Mr. Maclean: Compensation is paid in all cases to the owners of cattle slaughtered at the Ministry's behest in accordance with statutory requirements. Details of individual payments are not held centrally. Animals which have been moved for slaughter from a farm before BSE is suspected are valued as barren animals and no allowance is made for any loss of condition due to BSE or other cause. Such valuation is usually lower than if the same animal had been valued as a BSE suspect on the farm.

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has any evidence of cases of bovine spongiform encephalopathy occurring in animals too young to have been exposed to infected feed.

Mr. Gummer: No. I am not aware of a single case of BSE in an animal too young to have been exposed to feed containing ruminant protein material. Cases can be expected to occur for several years to come; this is not because the infection is spreading or because of a new source of infection, but because of the long period that can elapse before the symptoms emerge.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he is carrying out tests on offal from cattle thought to be free of bovine spongiform encephalopathy to establish whether the bovine spongiform encephalopathy agent is present in the tissue; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Such tests would not be expected to yield a positive result in more than a tiny number of cases. It is a much better approach to ensure that the offal which might carry the BSE agent in apparently healthy animals do not enter the human food chain at all.

Beef

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he proposes to take in the light of the United States Government's ban on the consumption of British beef by United States forces stationed in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: There is no ban. Legislation has been passed in the United States which would introduce subsidies on American meat supplied to United States bases in the Community. As a result those bases could be exclusively supplied with American meat. The European Commission has taken up this matter with the United States authorities.

North Sea

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place in the Library the letter sent to him by Norway on behalf of the three Nordic signatories calling for an urgent meeting of the scientific and technical working committee on prior justification procedures, following his announcement of three licences for dumping in the North sea.

Mr. Gummer: I have not yet received such a letter, but will place a copy in the Library should I do so.

Knacker Industry

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether his Department intends to support an amendment to the proposed regulation by the European Commission that bans the uplifting of dead stock from farms by licensed knackermen, which would allow the United Kingdom to have the authority to determine its own means of disposal of dead and casualty animals and to continue with the existing national sterilising arrangements.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Isle of Wight (Mr. Field) on 17 January 1990, Official Report, 17 January, column 292.

Coastal Protection Schemes

Mr. Robert Hicks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the criteria governing approval of applications by local authorities of coastal protection schemes, and the scales of financial grant available; what changes have been made since 1983 in these criteria and whether further changes are envisaged; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The criteria for approval of a proposed coastal protection scheme are that the work will be technically appropriate, cost-effective and environmentally sympathetic, and that any objections to the proposed scheme have been either withdrawn or resolved.

Grant is available at up to 70 per cent. of the costs of individual coastal protection schemes; until October 1987 the maximum grant rate was 79 per cent. Criteria for approval are unchanged since 1983.

No further changes are envisaged other than minor adjustments arising as a consequence of the new local government finance arrangements.

Waste Dumping

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for South Shields of 11 January, Official Report, column 748, whether he will suspend the licences granted to Fisons, Sterling Organics and Orsynthetics pending a reassessment of the basis of the objections raised by the Government of Sweden, Denmark, the Netherlands, West Germany and Norway; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I am determined that the disposal of industrial waste at sea shall be terminated. More than half the licences in force in 1987 have already been withdrawn.

International agreements provide for a continuation of sea disposal of our wastes until acceptable means of land disposal are available. Indeed, to replace sea disposal by the use of environmentally unacceptable means of land disposal would break the terms of the North sea declaration.

Information recently received by the Ministry indicates that an acceptable means of disposal other than sea dumping is now available for the Fisons waste. The company has therefore been advised that its licence will not be renewed when it expires in February.

I do not propose to suspend the remaining licences. Either production would have to stop or an environmentally unacceptable means of land disposal used. Cessation of production would not only hit employment, it would damage the interests of those many people who need drugs such as paracetemol.

Food Safety

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, further to his answer of 11 January to the hon. Member for South Shields, Official Report, column 738, concerning the Food Safety Bill, if he will list the individual local authorities with which discussions were held with officials from his Ministry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Pursuant to my reply to the hon. Member for South Shields of 11 January (Official Report, column 738), there were no discussions held between officials and individual local authorities on the resource implications of the Food Safety Bill. The individual officers of local authorities who were present at meetings were representing one or other of the organisations listed in my reply, not their employers.

Illegal Fishing

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received concerning alleged illegal fishing by Spanish trawlers following publication of a letter on this subject in Fishing News, 27 October 1989; and if he will draw the European Community Commissioner's attention to these allegations.

Mr. Curry: I have received no representations about illegal fishing by Spanish trawlers following publication of the letter in the Fishing News of 27 October 1989. Enforcement of Community legislation is for the member state concerned. But if I receive information about alleged illegal activities by other fishermen, I will of course pass this on to the EC Commission.

Wheat

Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the current average prices per tonne for (i) milling wheat and (ii) feed wheat prices in (a) France, Denmark and Holland, (b) Germany, (c) Spain and (d) the United Kingdom; and what steps are being taken to ensure that efficient British cereal growers obtain similar prices to their Continental counterparts.

Mr. Curry: The national average of market prices provided by the Commission of the European Communities for the week ending Saturday 6 January 1990, converted to £ sterling using spot rate values for 5 January, are set out in the table:

	Breadmaking Wheat		Feedwheat
Country	National currency per tonne	£ per tonne	National currency per tonne	£ per tonne
France	1,275	135	1,296	137
Denmark	1,437	134	n/a	n/a
Netherlands	434	139	434	139
Germany	392	142	384	139
Spain	26,170	146	n/a	n/a
United Kingdom	121	121	118	118

I am considering the Commission's proposals for the 1990 price review, which include provision for devaluation of the green pound.

Soft Fruit

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what effect he estimates the import of soft fruits in bulk will have on the Scottish and United Kingdom soft fruit industries.

Mr. Curry: The United Kingdom food industry has for a number of years drawn on both home and imported sources for its supplies of semi-processed soft fruit. I am confident that growers of soft fruit both north and south of the border can face fair competition. In this context my noble Friend the Minister of State, Scottish Office, and I met growers' representatives on 16 January and agreed with them the steps to be taken to ensure that the EC Commission implements its recent commitment given within the framework of the extension of the generalised system of preference to Poland and Hungary. The Commission undertook to ensure that the prices agreed annually with our suppliers in eastern Europe are respected by those suppliers in their trade with the Community.

Rabies

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many animals have been kept in quarantine for rabies in each of the last five years; and how many have developed the disease.

Mr. Maclean: The information is not available in the form requested. The number of import licences issued during the past five years was:

	Number
1985	7,628
1986	7,547
1987	8,829
1988	9,091
1989	10,010

No animals developed rabies in quarantine in this period.

End-of-Lay Hens

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he takes to ensure the humane handling of end-of-lay hens being removed from battery cages; if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: My Department is currently spending £0·8 million each year in research related to the development of more humane handling systems, including studies on broken bones. Additional work is being planned in this subject. We have proposed amendments to the Battery Hens Regulations 1987 and enouraged the industry in the production of its guide to handling end-of-lay hens which has now been sent to producers. Systems for keeping egg-laying hens are similar within Europe and we have therefore asked the Commission to ensure that the problem is tackled in the review of the battery hens directive.

SCOTLAND

Cochlear Implants

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many cochlear implants were carried out in Scotland in the last year or for the latest period for which figures are available; and how many centres provided by the National Health Service in Scotland are offering cochlear implants for the profoundly deaf apart from the unit at Ayr county hospital;

(2) if he will consult voluntary organisations representing the profoundly deaf about the cochlear implant programme and its availability in Scotland;

(3) what information he has about the number of patients presently on waiting lists for a cochlear implant; and how many people there are in Scotland who might benefit from such treatment;

(4) what representations he has had from the Ayrshire and Arran health board about the funding of a centre for cochlear implants;

(5) what sums he has made available for a cochlear implant programme for 1990-91 and the two succeeding years; whether he has any plans to ask health boards in Scotland to submit bids for funding to develop a cochlear implant programme locally; and if he will make a statement;

(6) whether his Department will be represented at the seminar arranged in March by the Department of Health to discuss the development and provision of cochlear implants.

Mr. Rifkind: My hon. Friend the Minister for Health in Scotland announced on 11 January that funding would be made available for a cochlear implant programme in Scotland. Decisions as to the level of funding and location of the programme are currently being considered. I would be glad to have the benefit of any views which voluntary organisations representing the profoundly deaf may wish to offer.

To date four cochlear implants have been carried out in Scotland, all at Crosshouse hospital, Kilmarnock, the first one in March 1989. A request for funding of a centre there was received from Ayrshire and Arran health board earlier this week. No other centre in Scotland offers a service, as far as I am aware. Information is not centrally available on the numbers on the waiting list for an implant, nor on the numbers who might benefit.

My Department will be represented at the seminar being held in March by the Department of Health to discuss cochlear implants.

Agriculture Development Programme

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many applicants there have been for the agriculture development programme; and how many applications have been refused.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: At 12 January 1990, 2,750 applications had been approved. About 100 applications are still under consideration and more may be submitted before the closing date for applications of 28 February 1990. One hundred and sixty-five applications have been refused or were withdrawn prior to approval. A number of the applications which were refused or withdrawn because they failed to meet ADP criteria—mainly the requirement that breeding stock numbers should not increase during the period of the plan—were revised by the applicants, resubmitted and subsequently approved.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total budget of the agriculture development programme; and how much he envisages being taken up.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The ADP submission to the European Commission envisaged public expenditure on the programme of about £38 million. It is not possible to indicate the precise level of expenditure over the programme period to March 1993 since the programme is still open for applications and eventual grant payments do not necessarily match exactly the level of expenditure envisaged when applications are approved.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many individual schemes are now operational under the agriculture development programme; how many have subsequently had their total grant allocation cut by his Department; and if he will detail this by geographical area.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The total number of applications approved at 12 January 1990 is 2,750. This is broken down by type of measure and island group in the table:

	Farm Development Scheme	Livestock Development Scheme	Fish Farming	Infrastructure	Crofter Housing	Total
Shetland	189	274	3	6	9	481
Orkney	520	496	5	2	2	1,025
Argyll and Inverness	236	263	3	4	—	506
Skye	170	337	10	2	1	520
Clyde Islands	127	89	2	—	—	218
	1,242	1,459	23	14	12	2,750

Grant is normally paid on approved cost or actual cost, whichever is the lower, provided that the Department is satisfied after inspection that the cost incurred is not excessive in relation to the works actually undertaken. Details of claims which have had to be restricted are not held centrally.

Croft Houses

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland grants were made for croft houses by year over the past 10 years; what was the expenditure in total; and what was the average grant on individual croft houses.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is set out in the table:

	Number of grants made[1]			Expenditure[2]
	New house	Improved house	Total	New house £	Improved house £	Total £
1979	148	47	195	[4]590,000	[5]25,000	615,000
1980	192	63	255	698,000	35,000	733,000
1981	147	54	201	558,000	28,000	586,000
1982	133	43	176	522,000	24,000	546,000
1983	77	36	113	314,000	20,000	334,000
1984	132	67	199	665,000	58,000	723,000
1985	143	66	209	836,000	82,000	918,000
1986	113	53	166	709,000	45,000	754,000
1987	119	59	178	882,000	81,000	963,000
1988	95	113	208	—	—	[3]3,316,000

[1] Number of grants made for new houses or improvements completed.
[2] Actual expenditure in year.
[3] No split available for grant only. Total includes loans for houses.
[4] The maximum grant available for new houses was £4,000 from 1979, £6,500 from 1982 and £8,700 from 1986
[5] The maximum grant available for house improvements was £750 from 1979 and £1,500 from 1986.

In general new house construction attracted the maximum grant. The average grant for house improvement was £700.

Fish Farms

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many referrals there have been to his consultative committee on fish farm applications; and how many applications have been refused.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There have been no referrals made to the advisory committee to date. Representatives from the relevant statutory bodies have been invited to serve on the committee. The necessary arrangements for referral of applications for a sea bed licence where a statutory consultee maintains its objection are now operational.

Tourism

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list his Department's total expenditure on tourism in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Lang: The information is as follows:

Financial year	Expenditure £ million (Cash)
1979-80	7·9
1980-81	9·8
1981-82	11·2
1982-83	12·9
1983-84	16·7
1984-85	18·5
1985-86	18·0
1986-87	21·5
1987-88	17·3
1988-89	18·7

Notes:

1. The figures are in respect of expenditure on the promotion of tourism by the Scottish Tourist Board, the Highlands and Islands Development Board and the Scottish Development Agency.

2. The figures include expenditure by the Scottish Development Agency for the period 1984-85 to 1988-89 covering loan and equity finance for tourism projects which meet its normal investment criteria and tourist projects under schemes for urban and rural development. Expenditure details for earlier years are not readily available. In addition, a number of feasibility studies, land engineering and property development projects funded by the agency may have tourism benefits.

3. Provision by the Highlands and Islands Development Board is through its marketing and projects programmes and under its section 8 assistance scheme; the figures do not include salary and administration costs incurred by the board.

4. Total expenditure by the Scottish Tourist Board is provided, including salary and administration costs, in performing its statutory functions of promoting Scotland as a tourist destination, both within the United Kingdom and overseas, and encouraging investment in tourism infrastructure.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has received the Scottish tourist board's review of training within the industry; and whether he plans to publish the findings.

Mr. Lang: The review was commissioned by the Scottish tourism co-ordinating group which will consider arrangements for publicising its findings at its meeting on 19 January.

Rural Enterprise Programme

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the areas of the Highlands and Islands which will be eligible for the rural enterprise programme; what are the funding arrangements underpinning the programme; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The whole of the Highlands and Islands Development Board area is eligible for support under the rural enterprise programme. The intention is to target assistance on the areas in greatest need and to concentrate action on a limited number of localities at any one time to ensure that the resources available are applied to best effect.

Subject to the European Commission making a contribution as part of its funding of the rural development programme for the Highlands and Islands, the Government have agreed in principle to provide £8·5 million over the period 1990-91 to 1992-93. Funding in the years beyond 1992-93 will be decided in the annual public expenditure negotiations.

The programme is intended to boost the rural economy by helping farmers and crofters in the selected areas embark on new economic ventures in addition to their traditional activities. Final details have still to be settled, including the selection of areas in which the programme will operate initially.

Crofting Estates

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has made any decision on the future of the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland's crofting estates; and what representations he has received on the issue.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The future of the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland's crofting estates is currently under review. My noble Friend the Minister of State has had some discussions with the Crofters Commission and with the Scottish Crofters Union but as yet no proposals for change have been put forward and none will be undertaken before full consultation has taken place with all interested bodies.

Highlands and Islands Development Board

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing (a) the Government's contribution to the Highlands and Islands Development Board, (b) the Highlands and Islands Development Board's income from other sources and (c) the Highlands and Islands Development Board's total expenditure for every year from 1979-80 to 1988-89 in cash terms and at constant 1988-89 prices.

Mr. Rifkind: The information is as follows:

Highlands and Islands Development Board
Expenditure 1979-80 to 1988-89

	Grant-in-Aid		Receipts		Total expenditure

Regional Aid

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing expenditure on regional preferential assistance to industry in Scotland for each year from 1976-77 to 1988-89 at constant 1988-89 prices.

Mr. Rifkind: The information requested is given in the table:

Gross expenditure on regional preferential assistance at constant 1988-89 prices

	£ million
1976-77	592·5
1977-78	365·2
1978-79	349·4
1979-80	269·9
1980-81	314·9
1981-82	339·9
1982-83	499·2
1983-84	295·3
1984-85	230·3
1985-86	229·9
1986-87	273·9
1987-88	164·4
1988-89	151·2

Note: Includes gross expenditure in Scotland on regional selective assistance, regional development grants, regional enterprise grants, Scottish Development Agency expenditure on land and factory building in assisted areas and Highlands and Islands Development Board expenditure on grants and land and factory building. The figures also include a number of forms of assistance in the years up to 1982 which have been discontinued.

Training

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people were on (a) employment training schemes and (b) YTS schemes in Scotland at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Rifkind: On 12 January 1990 there were 25,623 participants in employment training and at the end of December there were 46,074 young people on YTS in Scotland.

Rural Legal Partnerships

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what research has been undertaken to assess the impact of the changes proposed in the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Bill on the viability of legal partnerships in rural areas.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 15 January 1990]: No such research has been commissioned, but two research projects funded by my Department have some relevance. One, which is nearing completion, has examined factors influencing the market for conveyancing services in Scotland with particular emphasis on advertising and fee charging practices. The sample used in the survey was drawn up using the Department of Employment's travel-to-work areas to represent three types of market, namely cities, medium-sized towns, and rural areas plus small towns. The second project, due to start soon, will compare fees charged for conveyancing before and after the abolition of scale fees in 1985. A similar sampling method will be used.

DEFENCE

Death and Injury Compensation

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will state (a) the total deaths and (b) the total injuries in the armed services in (i) 1988 and (ii) 1989; how many of the service men or their next of kin will receive no Ministry of Defence compensation; what is the average compensation his Department will pay per person in relation to (1) death and (2) injury; whether he will make it his policy to arrange for a comprehensive personal insurance cover scheme for all service men and women; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The figures for deaths and medical discharge as the result of injury for United Kingdom regular forces in 1988 and 1989 are as follows:

(a) Deaths

	Number
1988	316
1989	[1]336

[1] Provisional.

(b) Medical discharge as the result of injury

	Number
1988	244
1989	[1]

[1] Not yet available.

Financial provision in respect of those who die in service, or who are medically discharged as the result of injury, is made under the terms of the armed forces pension scheme. Benefits payable can comprise pensions and/or lump sums, including those payable to eligible dependants in the event of death. The amounts depend upon the circumstances of each case. Relevant factors can include rank, length of service, whether death or injury is attributable to service and, where appropriate, degree of disability. It is not therefore possible to provide an average figure for the total amount which may be paid per person. A benefit will be payable in all cases except where medical discharge is due to causes that are not attributable to service and less than two years' reckonable service has been given.

Where death or medical discharge is attributable to service provision is also made under the terms of the war pensions scheme administered by the Department of Social Security.

I believe these arrangements to be satisfactory.

RAF Finningley

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many hardened aircraft shelters have been, or are due to be, constructed at RAF Finningley; and what is their purpose.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are no hardened aircraft shelters at RAF Finningley, nor do we plan to construct any.

Gibraltar

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to complete his review of the arrangements in Gibraltar for logistics for the garrison; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A review of the logistic support arrangements for all the armed forces in Gibraltar was completed in November 1989 and it is expected that many of the principal recommendations arising from the review will be implemented by October 1990, when the new joint forces headquarters comes into being.

Works Organisation

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what purpose his Department is setting up a works organisation; and what will be the total salary bill.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: On 25 May 1988 my right hon. Friend the Member for Cirencester and Tewkesbury (Mr. Ridley) announced the Government's decision that as from the 1 April this year the Ministry of Defence would be "untied" from the PSA. This means that the MOD will have new responsibilities both for managing funds and for deciding how to undertake our substantial works programme.

The MOD is setting up Defence Works Services at Sutton Coldfield to help in the discharge of these new tasks. It will not, however, directly manage works services. DWS will supply professional, technical and contractual expertise to Ministry of Defence departments and service commands which are the customers for works services so that the best procurement options for the supply of services are identified.

Under present plans, the total salary bill for DWS staff for the first full year of operation will be around £3 million at current prices rising to about £4·5 million during 1992-93 and thereafter.

Cavalry Officers

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement as to the benefits to service efficiency of cavalry officers in regiments which do not have a ceremonial role being encouraged to ride; what benefits accrue from riding that do not accrue from other adventure training activities; and what is the cost to public funds per hour of (a) riding and (b) other forms of training.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: All Army personnel are encouraged to participate in a range of both sporting and adventurous training activities. Such activities are complementary to other forms of military training in enhancing and developing the personal qualities and soldierly skills required of Army personnel.

Some £1·25 million per annum is spent on the provision of adventurous training for the Army. Information regarding the cost of riding cannot be provided without disproportionate effort. It would not be practicable to calculate the cost per hour of adventurous training.

Trident

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much has been spent to date on production and development for the Trident programme by the United Kingdom Government, and what percentage of this has been spent (a) in the United Kingdom, (b) in the United States of America and (c) elsewhere.

Mr. Alan Clark: Actual expenditure figures for the Trident programme as a whole are not available beyond September 1989. The total expenditure for the project up to this point is £2,730 million, of which some £370 million is for development and £2,360 million for production. Seventy-four per cent. of the expenditure has been incurred in the United Kingdom and 26 per cent. in the United States of America. There has been no readily identifiable expenditure elsewhere.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of costs already incurred to the United Kingdom Government, as a result of the decision to purchase the Trident D5 missile system, it has been agreed would be reimbursed by the United States Government, in the eventuality that development and production of the D5 missile system is cancelled by the United States Government.

Mr. Alan Clark: There is no agreement specifying the reimbursement to the United Kingdom of a particular percentage figure.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current Trident deployment schedule.

Mr. Alan Clark: As previously announced, it remains our intention to deploy Trident into operational service in the mid-1990s.

Dockyards

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those commercial dockyards that have benefited from repair and refit work following the changes in Her Majesty's dockyards.

Mr. Neubert: Following is a list of those firms which have won contracts valued at £10,000 or more for ship refit or ship repair work since the introduction of commercial management at Devonport and Rosyth Royal dockyards in April 1987. All the firms listed have won work from the unallocated programme, which is put out to competition on the open market, with tenders being invited from all suitable shiprepair contractors, including the Royal dockyards.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish and tabulate the refit times for auxiliary vessels refitted in (a) Her Majesty's dockyards and (b) commercial shipyards for the last five years.

Mr. Neubert: It is our policy generally to place refit work for RFA and RMAS vessels by competitive tender and most is now undertaken by privately owned commercial shipyards. It is not our practice to publish raw data on timekeeping because refits are rarely comparable in terms of the condition of the vessels and the work undertaken.

Tritium

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action he is taking to assess the security of long-term supply of radioactive tritium for his nuclear warhead production programme.

Mr. Alan Clark: Arrangements for the supply of tritium are kept under regular review to ensure that the requirements of defence nuclear programmes are fully met.

Disablement Pension

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration has been given to increasing the pre-1973 war disabled pension.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: War disablement pensions are paid under the war pensions scheme administered by the Department of Social Security. The rates payable do not differentiate between disabilities originating before, or after, 1973. Pensions may also be payable, under the provisions of the occupational scheme for members of the armed forces, to those who are eligible. The rules of eligibility and the basis for calculating the latter awards were changed with effect from 31 March 1973, but it has not been considered possible to extend those changes retrospectively to include those whose service ended before that date.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current annual cost of the provision of pensions for pre-1973 war disabled.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Figures of expenditure on pensions payable under the armed forces pension scheme to those with a disability attributed to service are not separately maintained.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what would be the total annual cost of increasing pensions by £40 a week for pre-1973 war disabled.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The annual cost of making a payment of £40 per week to all those currently receiving a DSS war disablement pension would be approximately £400 million. Separate figures are not available for those whose service ended before 31 March 1973.

CHARM Tank Gun

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if progress on the CHARM tank gun programme is on schedule; and if Royal Ordnance will be able to meet the timescale of the Challenger 2 development programme.

Mr. Alan Clark: The CHARM gun programme is on schedule to meet the timescale of the Chieftain replacement programme as set out in my right hon. Friend's statement to the House on 20 December 1988 (Official Report, Vol. 144, col. 283).

Ambulance Services

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the areas of the country in which military personnel have been providing ambulance services and the dates at which they became involved in each area.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As at 17 January, the areas where service personnel have been assisting the police and voluntary services in the provision of an accident and emergency service, together with the date that these services began, are as follows:

Location	Since
London	8 November 1989
Hertfordshire	17 November 1989
Bedfordshire	25 November 1989
Lincolnshire	25 November 1989
South Yorkshire	8 December 1989
West Midlands	15 December 1989
Dorset	18 December 1989
Hereford and Worcester	22 December 1989

West Sussex	12 January 1990
Warwickshire	12 January 1990
Berkshire	17 January 1990

Service ambulances also operated in Derbyshire between 24 November and 1 December.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the cost to date of the forces' operation of the ambulance service.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave on 9 January to the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner) (Official Report, col. 614). Figures for the period ending 31 December 1989 have not yet been finalised.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total number of military personnel and vehicles currently involved in the provision of ambulance services.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Nine hundred and sixty-eight service personnel and 181 service vehicles are involved directly in the provision of an accident and emergency service.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Rural Roads

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give details of Government plans for investment in the rural roads network of Northern Ireland.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: It is planned to invest some £109 million in developing, improving and maintaining the total road network of Northern Ireland in the 1990-91 financial year. An actual breakdown of this investment between urban and rural roads could be attained only at disproportionate cost to the Department.

Investment in the rural roads network will be made according to need, road safety considerations and the priorities established to make the best possible use of available resources.

Prisoners (Classification)

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give details of the differences in the manner in which prisoners with different classifications are treated by the prison authorities.

Mr. Cope: The classification of prisoners by age, length of sentence, temperament and record is taken into account in deciding the allocation of prisoners to prisons in Northern Ireland, and determines the amount of pre-release home leave for which they will be eligible to apply in the final stages of their sentence.

The security category allocated on committal reflects both a prisoner's escape potential and the risk he would pose to society and the security forces should he escape. Decisions on security categories are taken after a thorough examination of all the relevant information available. Reviews are conducted periodically during sentence and prisoners are often downgraded to a lower security category.

The security category is also taken into account in determining the prison to which a prisoner is allocated, and it determines the degree of supervision and control that is exercised. Those in the top risk category are held in single-cell accommodation which is searched at irregular intervals, and they are subject to a higher frequency of searching and cell transfer than other prisoners. They are also assigned individual prison officer escorts during movement within the prison, which is always on a one-to-one basis.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give details of the systems used for classifying prisoners in Northern Ireland prisons; and how many prisoners there are within each classification.

Mr. Cope: The classification of prisoners in Northern Ireland is governed by the Prison Rules (NI) 1982 which provide that a prisoner may be classified having regard to his age, temperament and record. On committal all prisoners are in addition allocated a security category. Both a prisoner's classification and security category can be changed during his term of imprisonment.

The tables provide a breakdown of the population in Northern Ireland prisons as at 15 January 1990:

Classification	Number
Untried	342
Appellant	14
Adult indeterminate	386
Secretary of State's pleasure	26
Short term star	125
Short term ordinary	131
Long term star	367
Long term ordinary	173
Young person	164
	1,728

Security category	Number
Low risk	144
Medium risk	1,259
High risk	302
Top risk	23
	1,728

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is (a) the total number of red-book prisoners in Northern Ireland, and (b) the number of red-book prisoners who have served over 13 years in prison, and who were denied Christmas parole in 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: There are currently 23 top risk (commonly known as "Red Book") prisoners in Northern Ireland,only 10 of whom are sentenced prisoners. Two such prisoners, who are serving life sentences, had spent 13 years in custody at 21 December 1989 but were excluded from applying for Christmas home leave. Home leave schemes are designed to assist prisoners to prepare for their eventual return to the community. Prisoners who are in the top risk category after 13 years in custody are not, in my view, making satisfactory progress and I am not, therefore, prepared to grant them this privilege.

Firearms

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many firearms, listed by the category under which they are identified by the Royal Ulster Constabulary, have been stolen in each Royal Ulster Constabulary division in each of the last five years from (a) civilians and (b) the security forces, or as much of such information as is available to him.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 9 January 1990]: Information split into Royal Ulster Constabulary divisions is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Readily available information is as follows:

Firearms stolen in Northern Ireland 1984-89

Year	Stolen from	Bullet firing	Shotguns	[1]Air weapons/ miscellaneous
1985	Security forces	16	—	—
	Civilians	19	79	9

1989	Security forces	19	—	—
	Civilians	17	42	4

[1] Miscellaneous includes: Blank firing weapons, muzzle loading weapons, antique weapons, tranquilliser guns and starting pistols.

Kincora Boys' Home

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on out-of-court payments made to ex-residents of the Kincora boys' home.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 15 January 1990]: The manner in which claims for compensation are finally settled is entirely a matter for agreement between the parties. Out-of-court settlements are, however, quite usual in civil actions and are to the advantage of all parties.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what compensation payments have been made to ex-residents of the Kincora boys' home; on what dates they were made; how many cases are still to be processed; and on what dates he expects further cases to be settled.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 15 January 1990]: To date, compensation payments have been made to five ex-residents, as follows: £5,000 on 31/3/88; £10,000 on 26/5/89; £7,500 on 26/5/89; £2,500 on 19/7/89; £6,000 on 10/8/89. Eight further claims remain to be processed, but it is not possible to give any indication of when they will be settled.

In my reply of 23 June 1989, Official Report, column 265, I stated that one of the claims had been settled on 15 April 1988. This date was incorrect and should have been 23 March 1988. I regret this error. The claim settled on 23 March was paid on 31 March as indicated above.

Fire (RUC Complex, Carrickfergus)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether any evidence gathered by the Stevens inquiry into allegations of collusion between members of the security forces and paramilitary organisations in Northern Ireland was destroyed as a result of the fire in the office of the inquiry in the Royal Ulster Constabulary complex at Carrickfergus, County Antrim.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 15 January 1990]: I understand that it has not so far been possible to assess fully the damage and loss of documents following the fire at the Seapark complex on 10 January. However, as Mr. Stevens made clear in his press statement on 11 January, duplicate files of the investigation were kept at a separate location as a matter of routine and his investigation has not been disrupted.

Benefit Claimants

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the average number of claimants of (a) income support, (b) unemployment benefit and (c) family credit, at each box in each of the district offices of the Department of Health and Social Services, in each month during 1988 and 1989.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 16 January 1990]: Information in the form requested is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However the most recent figures for the average numbers of unemployed claimants by box in each social security office in Northern Ireland are as follows:

Numbers of unemployed at 14 December 1989

Home Helps

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total amount spent by each area health board on the provision of home help services in each year since 1980.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 16 January 1990]: The information following represents expenditure in cash terms on home help salaries and incidental expenses and does not include similar information on professional and clerical staff involved in the provision of the service:

	Northern Board £	Southern Board £	Eastern Board £	Western Board £	Total £
1979-80	1,893,389	2,187,959	4,771,576	1,686,338	10,539,262

Livestock (Compensation)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what sums are payable in compensation to farmers who lose livestock as a result of action by the armed forces; and if he will give the average sum payable for the death of (i) a cow, (ii) a bull, (iii) a calf, (iv) a bullock, (v) a sheep, (vi) a ram, (vii) a lamb, (viii) a horse, (ix) a boar, (x) a sow and (xi) a piglet.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have been asked to reply.

It is not possible to provide details of average sums payable in compensation for the loss of various types of livestock as the amount awarded will vary according to the age, pedigree etc. of the animal concerned. However, each claim is dealt with on its own merits, and compensation awards are assessed by reference to current market prices and professional veterinary advice. The Ministry of Defence paid during 1989 in the order of £400,000 by way of compensation to farmers in Northern Ireland in respect of the loss of livestock arising from activities by the armed forces.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Bangladesh

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to extend programmes of development assistance to Bangladesh.

Mrs. Chalker: Bangladesh is, and has long been, one of the largest recipients of British development assistance. The programme concentrates on the energy, natural resources, infrastructure and health-population sectors. Among planned activities for United Kingdom support are more help on the exploitation of gas reserves, further rural development work through local NGOs, and studies directed at mitigating the effects of the frequent and severe flooding to which the country is subject.

Gibraltar

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his planned expenditure in Gibraltar in the current financial year.

Mrs. Chalker: Expenditure on aid to Gibraltar in the current financial year is expected to be about £0·5 million.

Holiday Visit Passages

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the approximate cost of holiday visit passages paid in respect of (a) children of Overseas Development Administration personnel and (b) children of technical co-operation officers in receipt of education allowances for the latest available year.

Mrs. Chalker: The latest year for which figures are available is 1988-89. In that year, the cost of holiday visit passages for children of staff of the Overseas Development Administration was £22,900. For children of all personnel financed from technical co-operation funds, including technical co-operation officers and supplementees, the cost was £1,089,218.

Tropical Rain Forests

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will outline the initiatives that are being taken in relation to the management, utilisation and conservation of tropical rain forests, particularly in the field of species diversity, genetic diversity and ecosystem diversity; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: The Overseas Development Administration is currently implementing a forestry initiative with some 165 projects ongoing or in preparation, with a total value of £150 million. The aims include helping developing countries maximise the economic and social benefits they enjoy from their forests in a sustainable way, and conserving the planet's variety of plant and animal species, many of which are unique to tropical forests.

In the field of species diversity, genetic diversity and ecosystem diversity the ODA supports the research work of the Oxford Forestry Institute and other British institutes and universities. We are currently funding 23 projects worth some £4 million in these areas. We also finance such projects under our bilateral country programmes. Examples include the Limbe gardens conservation of genetic resources project in Cameroon; assistance to forestry conservation research in Nepal; assistance for the conservation of the forest genetic resources of Honduras; help with a project in Ghana to bring tropical moist forest under sustained yield management; assisting with forestry inventory and management work in the Oban hills of Nigeria. Following the signing of a memorandum of understanding with the Brazilian Government last year we hope to assist with the establishment of a biological reserve in the Caxiuna national forest. Internationally we are collaborating with other donors in the tropical forestry action plan and we support the work of the International Tropical Timber Organisation.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Solicitors (Remuneration)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Attorney-General if he has any proposals to increase the remuneration of duty solicitors; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: Legal aid rates are reviewed each year in accordance with the Legal Aid Act 1988. The Lord Chancellor has not yet decided by how much any legal aid rates should be increased this year.

Paul Malone and Thomas Ryder

Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Attorney-General what progress has been made by the Director of Public Prosecutions in the case of Paul Malone and Thomas Ryder; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: Between November 1988 and May 1989 the West Yorkshire police forwarded six reports to the Director of Public Prosecutions concerning their investigations into allegations by a number of persons, including Paul Malone and Thomas Ryder, of criminal misconduct by officers of the Merseyside police. The director has briefed counsel to advise and has so far received his advice upon five of the reports. The sixth advice from counsel is awaited. The evidence and advices received so far are being considered by the director's office and a decision on whether any criminal proceedings should be instituted as a result of the investigations will be taken in due course.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

COMECON

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what advice the Government are giving to businesses considering investment projects in COMECON countries.

Mr. Redwood: Companies considering investment in eastern Europe are welcome to consult my Department. We point out that in all COMECON countries except Hungary the scope for investment is at present limited to participation in joint ventures with local enterprises and that the rules and regulations for these ventures vary from country to country. Direct investment is possible in Hungary and is made more attractive by the existence of an increasingly coherent legal framework and by the availability of British accountants and lawyers based in Budapest. Other countries in this area, such as Poland, offer some similar attractions and are working hard to offer more. Throughout eastern Europe prospects are, perhaps, particularly good in food (production, processing and packaging) and health care (pharmaceuticals and medical equipment), but the risks of investment and the provisions for repatriating profits are changing. We therefore encourage companies to consult the commercial sections of our embassies as well as local representatives of British banks and their usual advisers.

Motor Industry

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the increase in productivity in the motor vehicle industry since 1972 and 1979 together with the number of employees, the number of cars produced, and the trading profit.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Productivity, production and trading profit statistics are matters for the Chancellor of the Exchequer. Employment statistics are a matter for the Secretary of State for Employment.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the Government's estimate of the proportion of the output of motor vehicles produced in the United Kingdom in terms of the shareholding by foreign vehicle producers together with (a) the percentage increase in real hourly earnings of adult male manual workers in the motor vehicle industry since (i) 1972 and (ii) 1979 and of all non-manual employees in the rest of the private sector and (b) the increase in output per head in the motor vehicle industry and the rest of the private sector.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: An estimate of the proportion of the output of motor vehicles produced in the United Kingdom in terms of the shareholding by foreign vehicle producers is not available. Earnings figures are a matter for the Secretary of State for Employment. Output per head figures are a matter for the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Consumer Protection

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many representations he has received from hon. and right hon. Members, and members of the public concerning the need for legislation to protect the consumer when purchasing goods; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has had regarding inadequacies in consumer protection in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: I and my officials receive numerous communications dealing with a wide range of subjects. Consumers in this country are protected by a substantial body of existing legislation.

Unpublished Inspectors' Reports

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will place in the Library copies of his Department's unpublished inspectors' reports which have been given to professional bodies.

Mr. Redwood: No.

Dixons (Takeover Bid)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to announce whether he intends to refer the takeover bid by Kingfisher of Dixons plc to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: On 16 January my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced that he had decided, in accordance with the recommendation of the Director General of Fair Trading, to refer the proposed acquisition by Kingfisher plc of Dixons Group plc to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

It would not be appropriate to comment in detail on the proposed acquisition in advance of the commission's report. The commission has been asked to submit its report to the Secretary of State by 27 April 1990.

Trade Marks

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the average waiting time before his Department deals with applicaptions for new trade marks.

Mr. Forth: The average time from filing to issue of an examination report is nine months. The average time from filing to registration of unopposed applications is 24 months.

Patent Office

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he proposes to take to enable the Patent Office to deal promptly with its duties and to minimise delay to investors and exporters.

Mr. Forth: An increase of 50 staff has been approved for the trade marks registry to deal with a backlog of cases which has built up since service marks were introduced in 1986. These staff are currently being recruited and trained.

The Patent Office, which is in the course of relocating to Newport (Gwent), is due to become an executive agency of the Department of Trade and Industry in the course of this year. This is expected to result in substantial improvements in efficiency and quality of service, in particular when the relocation is complete in the autumn of 1991.

Knitwear and Textiles

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether the Government in assisting the knitwear and textile industries will offer special financing arrangements for these industries to re-equip with British-made machinery.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 15 January]: No. Such arrangements would conflict with the European Commission ban on sectoral aid schemes for the textile and clothing industry. The provision of finance to domestic producers on condition that they buy British goods would in addition be in breach of our GATT and Community obligations. The greatest encouragement to buy British is the availability of competitive British goods and services. My Department's policies are geared to helping business to achieve this.

Manufacturing Productivity

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the Government's policy on increases in productivity in manufacturing industry, and what advice is given to employers seeking to achieve such increases.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The most important spur to the significant productivity growth by British manufacturing since 1980 has come from the competitive pressures of more open markets. Government policies to promote this objective have included privatisation, deregulation, elimination of restrictive practices and international negotiations to reduce trade barriers through the GATT and in the European Community. In addition, the Department of Trade and Industry's enterprise initiative enables businesses to receive various forms of help which develop management skills and promote best practice and so further improve productivity.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Research Councils

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he will respond to the advice he has received from the Advisory Board for the Research Councils on the future structure of the research council system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: I have today written to Sir David Phillips, chairman of the Advisory Board for the Research Councils, accepting the recommendation made to me by the board that it should be reconstituted this spring.

The text of my letter is as follows:

"Dear Sir David

Future structure of the research council system

Thank you for your letter of 15 November conveying the Board's advice about the future structure of the Research Council system.

The case which you put forward for reconstitution of the ABRC—as a smaller body with a more explicit remit to improve co-ordination and joint working among the Research Councils—is strong and convincing. The Government therefore intends to implement this recommendation with effect from 1 April. The terms of reference for the new ABRC will be those proposed in the annex to your advice. I am very pleased that you have accepted my invitation to become the first chairman of the new Board, and I hope to be able to announce its full membership within a few weeks.

I and my colleagues are considering the Board's subsequent advice about improving co-ordination between the Agricultural and Food Research Council and the Natural Environment Research Council. I shall let you know our conclusions as soon as possible.

I shall, naturally, be informing Parliament about the Government's decision on the reconstitution of the ABRC and, given the wide interest in the scientific community, I am arranging for this letter and the Board's advice to be published."

I am arranging for copies of this letter and of the board's advice to be placed in the Library.

Peer Review System

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will list the membership of the ABRC working group investigating reforms of the peer review system under the chairmanship of Margaret Boden; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will outline the scope and remit of the ABRC working group investigating reforms of the peer review system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: I understand that the membership and terms of reference of the ABRC's working group on peer review are as follows:

Membership

Professor Margaret Boden, FBA (Chairman)—Professor of Philosophy and Psychology at the University of Sussex; and ABRC Member.

Professor Sir Eric Ash, FRS FEng.—Rector, Imperial College of Science and Technology, and ABRC Member.

Sir Charles Reece—former Research and Technology Director, ICI; and ABRC Member.

Dr. David Edge—Science Studies Unit, Edinburgh University.
Dr. John Skehel, FRS—Director, National Institute for Medical Research.
Dr. Peter Williams—Chief Executive, Oxford Instruments plc.

Terms of Reference

1. To describe the present practices of the Research Councils in using peer review for the appraisal of proposals for research projects, programmes, centres and facilities; and for the monitoring and evaluation of output and performance.
2. To estimate the costs of peer review in terms of the resources and time committed by the Councils, their staff and committee members, and by applicants and referees.
3. To evaluate the strengths and weaknesses of the peer review systems operated by Councils; and to assess their efficiency and effectiveness for the appraisal of different types of research support, including for expenditure on and access to large facilities.
4. To review studies of peer review undertaken in the United States and elsewhere, and to draw appropriate lessons for the United Kingdom.
5. To make recommendations concerning:
   - the economy, efficiency and effectiveness of the Council's arrangements for peer review;
   - peer review mechanisms as regards support for young researchers and new research fields;
   - the use of peer review, and any alternatives, in relation to investment and time allocation decisions for large experimental facilities.
6. Throughout, to construe "peer review" broadly—encompassing also, for instance, "merit review".

My right hon. Friend and I will be interested to hear in due course of the ABRC's conclusions arising from this work.

Subatomic Particles Research Project

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will outline British involvement and funding proposals for participation in the subatomic particles research project at the Sudbury neutrino observatory; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The Sudbury neutrino observatory project is a collaboration involving Canada, the United States and the United Kingdom. The United Kingdom's involvement is through a group at Oxford university's nuclear physics laboratory which is developing a water purification and testing system for the large heavy water detector being built in northern Ontario.

The group is supported by means of a research grant of £276,000 over three years (1989-92) from the science and engineering research council (SERC) and a contribution from Oxford university of about £120,000 over the same period.

Any application for further funding for the project would be considered by SERC against other calls on its budget.

Bradford City Technical College

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what right of appeal parents have whose children are refused a place at Bradford city technology college; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: CTCs are independent schools and parents will have no automatic right of appeal if their children fail to achieve one of the limited number of places available. However, my right hon. Friend will expect colleges to look at individual cases on their merits.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Local Government Finance

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the impact the introduction of the poll tax will have on the retail prices index in April.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Autumn Statement forecast is for RPI annual inflation to fall to 5¾ per cent. by the fourth quarter of 1990. It is not the practice to provide more detail than published in table 2.7 of the Autumn Statement.

Public Expenditure White Paper

Mr. John Townend: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to publish the 1990 public expenditure White Paper.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The 1990 public expenditure White Paper will be published at 3.30 pm on Tuesday 30 January, and copies will be available in the Vote Office.

Premium Bonds

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total number of premium bond purchases for each of the last five annual periods for which figures are kept.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 18 January 1990]: The number of purchases for each of the last five calendar years has been as follows:

	000's
1985	2,530·0
1986	1,949·8
1987	1,962·0
1988	2,036·7
1989	[1]1,416·0

[1] provisional

National Savings

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total number of new National Savings bank customers for the investment account for the last five annual periods for which figures are kept.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 18 January 1990]: The number of new customers opening investment accounts is not available. The number of new investment accounts opened during each of the last five calendar years was as follows:

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what were the total number of new ordinary accounts opened, under the national savings scheme for each of the last five annual periods for which figures are kept.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 18 January 1990]: The number of new national savings ordinary accounts opened in each of the last five calendar years is as follows:

	000's
1985	528·2
1986	506·0
1987	502·6
1988	471·1
1989	343·3

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he has any additional plans to further increase the minimum deposit level for National Savings bank ordinary accounts.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 18 January 1990]: My right hon. Friend has no present plans to increase the minimum deposit for national savings ordinary accounts.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he has any plans to cause the Department for National Savings to issue any further guidelines to retirement pensioners on savings and personal security, either on its own or in conjuction with police authorities.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 18 January 1990]: For some years the Department for National Savings has responded to requests to assist local crime prevention campaigns by providing specially prepared leaflets which remind pensioners that their money is safer kept in a savings account than at home. I understand that the department will continue to offer such assistance where it is practicable to do so.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he has received any representations about the future of the Department for National Savings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 18 January 1990]: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations. Our objectives for national savings are to encourage more long-term committed savings and less liquid debt; to make available through the national savings system products gross of tax for the non-taxpayer; and to continue to manage efficiently the investments of many millions of personal savers.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the Treasury intends to review its policy on the Department for National Savings.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 18 January 1990]: Policy on national savings products and their terms is always kept under review.

Taxation

Mrs. Ray Michie To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much taxation was raised from persons and organisations resident within, or operating within, Scotland during the financial year 1988-89; and if he will list the yield under the heading of each tax.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 18 January 1990]: Information is available only in respect of income tax, inheritance-capital transfer tax, and local authority rates. In the case of income tax and inheritance-capital transfer tax, the information is available only in terms of tax liabilities.

The latest estimates available are that the income tax liabilities of residents of Scotland in 1987-88, the latest available year, were £3·4 billion, the capital transfer tax liabilities in 1985-86 on Scottish death estates and lifetime transfers were about £70 million, and local authority rates were £1,955 million in 1988-89. Capital transfer tax on lifetime transfers has since been abolished.

Overseas Investment

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the level of (a) portfolio and (b) direct investment overseas each year since 1979, both at current prices and at constant 1989 prices; and what has been the percentage change each year.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 18 January 1990]: The estimates of United Kingdom investment overseas at current prices, distinguishing direct and portfolio investment, since 1979 are published in "Economic Trends" for December 1989 (table A8). An assessment of investment at constant prices can be made using the implied gross domestic product price deflators published in "Economic Trends" (table 2) and in the CSO databank. These publications are available in the Library.

Bank Lending

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the level of bank lending to each main sector of United Kingdom residents each year since 1979 at constant 1989 prices; and what was the percentage change each year in each case.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 18 January 1990]: Details on the level of lending to the main United Kingdom sectors is published for recent years in "Financial Statistics" (table 6.2) and for earlier years on the CSO databank. An assessment at constant prices can be made using the implied gross domestic product price deflators published in "Economic Trends" (table 2) and in the CSO databank. These publications are available in the Library.

Foreign Earnings

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the level of foreign earnings of each category of financial institution in the City of London in 1979, 1984 and 1989 or the latest date for which information is available, at current prices and at constant 1989 prices.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 18 January 1990]: The available information at current prices up to and including 1988 is given in the published annual Pink Books on the United Kingdom balance of payments (table 6.1) and on the CSO databank. An assessment at constant prices can be made using the implied gross domestic product price deflators published in "Economic Trends" (table 2) which is also available on the CSO databank. These publications are available in the Library.

Invisible Earnings

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the level of invisible earnings each year since 1970 and for each month since January 1989 both at current prices and at constant 1989 prices.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 18 January 1990]: The latest estimates of invisibles at current prices and of trade in services at constant prices are given in "Economic Trends" for December 1989 (tables A1 and A3) and on the CSO databank. An assessment of all invisibles at constant prices can be made using the implied gross domestic product price deflators published in "Economic Trends" (table 2) and on the CSO databank. These publications are available in the Library.

Money Supply

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the percentage change each year since 1970 in each main measure of the money supply.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 18 January 1990]: Details on the level of five money supply measures are published for recent years in "Financial Statistics" (table 11.10) and for earlier years on the CSO databank both of which are available in the Library.

Financial Assets

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the current value of the total assets of (a) pension funds, (b) insurance companies, (c) building societies, (d) commercial banks, (e) merchant banks, (f) United States banks in London, (g) Japanese banks in London, (h) other foreign banks in London, and (i) other major categories of dealers in the City of London.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 18 January 1990]: The latest estimates are given in the following publications, which are available in the Library:

"Financial Statistics"
Non-bank credit companies (table 7.4); Unit trusts (tables 7.6 and 7.8); Investment trusts (table 7.9); Insurance companies (table 7.10); and Pension funds (table 7.11).
"Bank of England Quarterly Bulletin"
Banks, distinguishing United Kingdom retail, merchant and other banks, and United States, Japanese and other overseas banks (tables 3.1 to 3.8); Building Societies (table 6.2).

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

British Council

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the level of Government grants to the British Council for each year since 1978-79, including the grant allocation for the year 1990-91.

Mr. Sainsbury: The table shows the level of Government grants to the British Council:

1978-79	45,891
1979-80	50,447
1980-81	56,165

1985-86	86,344
1986-87	91,990
1987-88	100,825

Czechoslovakia

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the average time taken to process visa applications for citizens of Czechoslovakia wishing to visit the United Kingdom.

Mr. Sainsbury: Information about the average length of time taken to process visa applications is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, under a visa understanding with Czechoslovakia in 1980, each Government have undertaken to process visa applications for stays of up to three months within 14 working days. Most are issued well inside this time frame.

PRIME MINISTER

Watford Gap

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Prime Minister if she will pay an official visit to Watford Gap.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

ENVIRONMENT

English Heritage

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what extra financial provision has been made to English Heritage in each financial year since it assumed responsibility for the relevant duties of the Greater London council; and what was the consequent increase in total expenditure, total grant offers made, total grants paid and total section 3A repair grant offers made since that date.

Mr. Trippier: The Greater London council's historic buildings division and historic house museums transferred to English Heritage in 1986. Additional grant-in-aid of £7·75 million was allocated to English Heritage in 1986-87 to cover the resulting extra costs. Since then the former Greater London council functions have ceased to be identified as a separate entity for the purposes of grant-in-aid but have become an integral part of English Heritage's national organisation and operation. In seeking extra resources each year English Heritage presents its bids on the basis of its work programmes (for example properties-in-care and conservation including building repair and archaeology grants) rather than on a regional basis. Allocation of existing and any additional resources among the regions is entirely a matter for English Heritage. Expenditure on grants in Greater London is as follows:

	1986-87	1987-88	1988-89	1989-90[1]
Section 3A repair grant offers	0·74	1·46	1·32	1·58
Total grant offers for the 4 years		£19·457 million
Total grants paid	2·84	4·30	4·81	4·82
		(Total £16·77 million)

[1] Planned.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what was the total expenditure by English Heritage and its predecessor, respectively, the total grant offers made and the total of grants paid, for each year 1981-82 to 1990-91;

(2) what was the total income and the income from grant-in-aid, respectively, of English Heritage and its predecessor, for each year 1981-82 to 1990-91.

Mr. Trippier: Prior to the setting up of English Heritage in 1989, the Department of the Environment was directly responsible for historic building grants, archaeology grants and the portfolio of properties-in-care. In 1986 English Heritage also took over responsibility for the Greater London council's historic buildings division and historic house museums; this is reflected in the total 1986-87 figures below. Accounting procedures within the Department during 1981-1984 differed from those subsequently adopted for and by English Heritage. As a result comparable information for 1981-82 and total grant "offers" for 1981-82, 1982-83 and 1983-84 could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The table reflects voted provision for expenditure (rather than grant-in-aid which did not apply) by the Department in 1982-83 and 1983-84 on the activities later transferred to English Heritage.

Chatham and Medway Docks

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much money the Government have committed to the redevelopment of Chatham and Medway docks; to whom it is intended to distribute the money; and whether any consultancy agencies are involved.

Mr. Trippier: Following the closure of the royal naval dockyard at Chatham, the Chatham Historic Dockyard Trust was established in April 1984 to take responsibility for some 80 acres of the dockyard area, containing about 50 buildings or sites scheduled as ancient monuments. The trust was financed by a Government endowment of £11.35 million to assist it in repairing and maintaining the historic structures and in promoting the site as a "living dockyard". The Department of the Environment and the Ministry of Defence commissioned a consultancy report on the future of the historic dockyard prior to the establishment of the trust and the trust itself has employed consultants for a number of studies since 1984.

The redevelopment of the remainder of the former royal naval dockyard is being managed by the English Industrial Estates Corporation which is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry. I understand that English Estates will have committed about £26 million to the project by the end of the current financial year and that consultants have been employed to assist with the project.

Part of the dockyard was designated an enterprise zone in October 1986, which entitles it to full relief from payment of rates for a 10-year period. Figures for rates forgone are available only for the north-west Kent enterprise zone as a whole, and not for the Chatham maritime enterprise zone as a separate entity.

Tyneside Enterprise Zone

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the extent of retail floorspace in the Tyneside enterprise zone in each year since E2 status was declared distinguishing between floorspace in Newcastle and Gateshead.

Mr. Moynihan: The table shows the amount of retail floorspace in the enterprise zone for each year for which information by type of use has been available. The year 1987 is the latest for which such information has been published. There is no breakdown for individual parts of the zone. As the hon. Member will be aware, however, the large majority of the increase in retail floorspace has taken place in the Gateshead area.

Retail floorspace in Tyneside enterprise zone

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what were the sums paid by Government to (a) Newcastle and (b) Gateshead council in 1989-90 in substitution of rates due from properties in the Tyneside enterprise zone, distinguishing between industrial and commercial property.

Mr. Moynihan: Claims made by local authorities in respect of rate revenue forgone in enterprise zones do not distinguish between industrial and commercial property. Payments made so far in 1989-90 to Gateshead metropolitan borough council and Newcastle city council amount to £10,835,487 and £1,518,385 respectively. The authorities' final claims are likely to add a further 10 per cent. to these figures.

Toxic Waste

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if the full report of the United States Environment Protection Agency into the toxic waste held in Wath upon Dearne concludes that the material must be handled with great care.

Mr. Trippier: In sending forward a summary report and supporting analytical data, the Environment Protection Agency draws attention to the need to handle the material with care because of the presence of volatile organic compounds. The presence of such compounds was one of the reasons for transferring the waste into sealed drums —a task undertaken well before the Environment Protection Agency report became available.

Housing, Bradford

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to approve city grant and estate action applications in respect of homes for rent and sale on the Lower Grange estate in Bradford; how quickly, after decisions on these applications are announced, he expects a start to new building; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State responsible for housing on 13 December, Official Report, Volume 163; column 727. The Department is continuing to appraise the applications for both city grant and estate action support and I hope it will be possible to reach decisions on both cases in the near future.

Sport and Active Recreation

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is (a) the estimated total cost and (b) the estimated cost to public funds of publishing the report of the review of sport and active recreation in the inner cities.

Mr. Moynihan: The estimated total cost of publishing the report of the review of sport and active recreation provision in the inner cities is £19,900, of which £7,900 will be met from public funds and £12,000 from private sector sponsorship.

Drinking Water

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the percentage of drinking water, by volume, in England that is treated by the addition of (a) chlorine and (b) ozone.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 15 January 1990]: Precise information is not available. However, I understand that more than 99 per cent. of water supplies in England are treated by the addition of chlorine as a disinfectant. At only six sites, which produce less than 1 per cent. of water supplies, is water treated by the addition of ozone. It is important to note that even when ozone is used in the treatment of drinking water, chlorine is normally added at the final treatment stage to provide for residual disinfection.

Batteries and Accumulators

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps his Department has taken to reduce the volume of spent batteries and accumulators in household waste.

Mr. Forth: I have been asked to reply.

The Government have long encouraged recycling wherever economically and technically feasible, and the United Kingdom has an excellent record of reclaiming lead-acid and larger nickel-cadmium batteries, and mercuric oxide and silver oxide button cells. Recycling of smaller, consumer-type batteries has not yet proved commercially viable. Reductions in the volume of certain spent batteries and accumulators in household waste is one objective of a modified draft directive recently published by the European Commission. Negotiations have yet to begin on the final form of the directive, and it would not be sensible for the Government to act independently in advance of their completion.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps his Department has taken to promote research aimed at reducing the dangerous substance content and increasing the use of less-polluting substitute substances in batteries and accumulators, and into methods of recycling.

Mr. Forth: I have been asked to reply.

The Department's Warren Spring laboratory has in the past undertaken research into methods of battery reclamation and recycling, and is currently collaborating on a project aimed at recovering consumer-type alkaline manganese and nickel-cadmium batteries from the domestic waste stream. An examination is also under way of the environment, economic and technical issues which recovery involves. The promotion of research is one aspect of a modified draft directive on batteries and accumulators containing dangerous substances recently published by the European Commission. The Government will await finalisation of the directive before deciding upon measures for its implementation.

FA Cup Final

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to receive the report of the Director General of Fair Trading concerning ticket allocation at the Football Association cup finals in 1988 and 1989.

Mr. Forth: I have been asked to reply.

The chief trading standards officer for the city of Liverpool asked the Director General of Fair Trading to look into the arrangements for the allocation of tickets at the Football Association cup finals in 1988 and 1989, under his duty at section 2 of the Fair Trading Act 1973. I understand that the director general hopes to be able to respond in the near future.

Ivory

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy that Her Majesty's Government will not enter a reservation on behalf of Hong Kong with respect to the recent listing of the African elephant in appendix I of CITES.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in the House on 17 January at column 300.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he intends to enter a reservation to CITES on behalf of Hong Kong to allow the current ivory stockpile in the Crown colony to be placed on the market.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in the House on 17 January.

TRANSPORT

Motorways

Mr. Waller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those lengths of motorway exceeding 35 miles in extent which are not provided with immediately adjoining service facilities.

Mr. Atkins: The Government's general policy is to provide motorway service areas (MSAs) at intervals of roughly 30 miles on English motorways. MSAs in Wales and Scotland are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland respectively. Lengths of motorway in England exceeding 35 miles and currently without MSAs are as follows:

Motorway	Mileage	Comment
M4[1]	59	MSA proposed for Reading area
M6[2]	38	—
M11	54	MSA Proposed for Birchanger (Junction 8)
M25	117	MSA open at South Mimms, under construction at Thurrock, and proposed at Clacket Lane (Westerham) and in the western quadrant of the motorway
M42	40	MSAs under construction at Tamworth and proposed for the Solihull area

[1]Heston MSA to Membury MSA.
[2]South bound, Southwaite MSA to Killington Lake MSA.

Certain other journeys involving distances of more than 35 miles between MSAs are possible using more than one motorway. It is intended that almost all of the gaps will be filled by the MSAs in the Government's strategic programme which, in addition to those already referred to, comprises sites on:

M18 (Hadfield)
M20 (Hollingbourne and Westernhanger)
M27 (Meon)
M40 (Tetsworth, Ardley and Barn Hill)
M54 (Telford)
M56 (Hapsford)
Birmingham Northern Relief Road; Birmingham Western Orbital; and Blackburn Southern bypass (sites to be selected).

I am writing to my hon. Friend enclosing a map showing existing and proposed MSAs and the motorway network. I have arranged for copies of the map to be placed in the Library.

Marchioness Disaster

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has considered a public inquiry following the Marchioness disaster; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Under the new regulations governing the work of the Marine Accident Investigation Branch, provision is made for investigations into serious marine accidents to take the form of an inspector's inquiry with a subsequent report to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State by the chief inspector of marine accidents. This is considered to be the appropriate form of investigation for this accident.

It is expected that the inspector leading the inquiry will be in a position to submit his findings to the chief inspector very soon. The report of the chief inspector will then be published at the earliest practicable date.

British Rail

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much land is due to be sold off by British Rail in the next three years by region; if he will list the estimated value of that land; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: These are commercial matters for the British Rail Property Board and I do not have the information in the forms requested. British Rail's published corporate plan 1989 contains the following forecasts for property-asset sales:

Financial years	£ million
1990-91	293
1991-92	248
1992-93	261

Cyclists

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to how many local authorities have active cyclists' consultative committees; if he will list them; and if he will make a further statement.

Mr. Atkins: This information is not collected centrally. A number of local authorities are known to have developed good working relationships with local cycling groups.

Our latest local transport note on cycling "Making Way for Cyclists" (published by HMSO) contains several references to the benefits of good consultation with local cycling interests. A copy has been placed in the Library.

River and Port Pilots

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to the river and port pilot manning requirements and costs in the United Kingdom and on the continent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Pilot manning levels and costs in the United Kingdom are matters for the competent harbour authorities. I understand however that since the implementation of the Pilotage Act 1987 on 1 October 1988 pilotage charges have in general been held steady, with reductions being achieved in some cases. As regards manning, there were 1,225 licensed pilots immediately before the implementation of the 1987 Act and 229 pilots have since been made surplus.

The Department holds no up-to-date information regarding pilot manning levels or costs on the continent.

Household Refuse Tips

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what guidelines he has issued providing for the safe and harmless transport by lorry on public highways of rotting refuse from controlled household refuse tips of five to 20 years' vintage; when they were last renewed; and what proposals he has to revise them;

(2) what guidelines he has issued to local authorities on the transportation of putrescent household refuse of five to 20 years' vintage by lorry; and what proposals he has to revise them.

Mr. Atkins: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 18 January, Official Report, Vol. 165, column 330.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what guidelines he has issued to provide for the safe, odour-free and pollution-free transportation by rail of rotting refuse of five to 20 years' vintage from controlled household refuse tips; and what proposals he has to revise them.

Mr. Atkins: There are no specific guidelines on the rail transport of putrescent waste. British Rail standards for the transport of dangerous goods generally reflect international requirements. Noxious goods which are not dangerous would be subject to British Rail's conditions of carriage and conditions of acceptance.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what alternatives to the Channel tunnel project's safety committee requirement for video surveillance in respect of last resort use of halons are currently under consideration; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The Channel tunnel intergovernmental commission, in giving its decision that Eurotunnel may continue development of its transport system on the basis of the principle of non-segregation of passengers from cars and coaches, laid down a number of binding requirements.

One of these is that a video surveillance system should be provided to monitor the interior of the shuttle wagons. Another is that fire extinction measures in the shuttle trains should include a Halon 1301 system or other agent with the same extinguishing capabilities. Halon may only be used either when passengers have been evacuated or as a last resort when the lives of passengers are endangered in spite of the use of other means of extinction.

It is for Eurotunnel to consider how to give effect to these requirements when bringing forward for approval design proposals for further development of its system.

Mitchell Bypass

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what stage plans have reached to begin work on the Mitchell bypass on the A30 in Cornwall;

(2) when he expects the A30 Mitchell bypass to be opened;

(3) when he intends the documentation regarding the building of the A30 Mitchell bypass in Cornwall to be issued to possible contractors.

Mr. Atkins: All the statutory procedures have been completed for the A30 Penhale-Carland Cross scheme which includes a bypass for Mitchell. Tender documents are in preparation and a contract is expected to be awarded later in the year. Construction should take about 18 months.

Zelah Bypass

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the A30 Zelah bypass to be opened.

Mr. Atkins: A contract is expected to be awarded later in the year and construction should take about 12 months.

British Rail (Investment)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will make it his policy for new investment in British Rail to be judged on the basis of cost-benefit analysis.

Mr. Portillo: The new objectives for British Rail, announced by my right hon. Friend last month, allow for the use of cost-benefit analysis where exceptionally investment which increases the asset base of the Network SouthEast and provincial sectors cannot meet the required rate of return of 8 per cent. This will enable the Government to decide whether capital grants would be justified on wider social and economic grounds. For BR's commercial sectors the Government see no case for subsidy and financial appraisal continues to be appropriate.

Mr. Mark Woodward

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will arrange for Mr. A. J. Woodward and his solicitor to have access to the tape recordings referred to by the solicitors acting for Her Majesty's Coastguard in the case of Mark Woodward in their letter of 12 January to Noel Horner, solicitor, of Truro.

Mr. McLoughlin: Yes. Arrangements are already in hand for Mr. Woodward and his solicitor to hear the tapes on Monday, Tuesday or Wednesday of next week.

Cars (Carbon Dioxide Emissions)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he proposes to take to control the level of carbon dioxide emissions from motor cars.

Mr. Atkins: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce) on 7 December 1989. (Official Report, 7 December, column 347.)

WALES

Local Government Finance

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Caenarfon of 8 January, Official Report, column 502, on local government finance in Wales, what allowance he has made, in calculating the income from the standard community charge for each district in Wales, for owners of holiday homes who previously paid domestic rates, changing to the uniform business rate for such properties, where they are let out for a proportion of each year.

Mr. Peter Walker: The assumptions I have made for standard charge multipliers for each district in Wales for 1990-91 are set out in paragraph 3 of the Welsh revenue support grant distribution report.

Regulations will shortly be laid before the House defining the boundary between domestic and non-domestic property and bringing into non-domestic rating those individual units of self-catering accommodation which are available for letting for 140 or more days each year. On the basis of those regulations, account can be taken in future local government finance settlements of the non-domestic rate income collectable in respect of these properties. It will be pooled and distributed on a per capita basis to all Welsh districts.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on what percentage he based his inflation forecast in determining the Welsh local government expenditure settlement for the years 1988-89 and 1989-90.

Mr. Peter Walker: The local authority settlements for 1988-89 and 1989-90 represented the Government's view of what it would be appropriate for local government to spend. Like all public expenditure plans they were set in cash terms.

Batteries and Accumulators

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what steps he has taken to promote the marketing of batteries and accumulators containing smaller quantities of dangerous substances or less-polluting substances;

(2) what steps he is taking to ensure that consumers are fully informed about the dangers of uncontrolled disposal of spent batteries and accumulators;

(3) what steps he is taking to inform consumers of the method of moving batteries and accumulators which are built into appliances;

(4) what steps he is taking to set up a deposit system for batteries and accumulators;

(5) what steps his Department has taken to reduce the heavy metal content in batteries and accumulators.

Mr. Grist: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to him by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Industry and Consumer Affairs on Thursday 18 January 1990 at columns 356-58.

Farm Incomes

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will now publish his assessment of the level of farm incomes in Wales for 1989; and what were the corresponding figures for 1988.

Mr. Peter Walker: Information on the level of farm incomes in Wales in 1989 is due to be published in June in the Welsh Office publication "Farm Incomes in Wales" No. 4, 1990. Some limited information, on average net incomes in Wales for the pair of years 1987-88 and 1988-89 will also be included in the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food publication "Agriculture in the United Kingdom" to be published early next month.

Bypass (A487)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the target commencement date for construction of the Penygroes and Llanllyfni bypass scheme on the A487 trunk road in Gwynedd.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Plans announced in "Roads in Wales: 1989" do not include a bypass for Penygroes and Llanllyfni. This section of the A487 is the subject of a feasibility study but it is too soon to speculate on its conclusions.

Grant-aided Schools

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the independent or direct grant schools in Wales that are grant-aided directly by the Welsh Office, noting the amount of aid to be paid in the current financial year.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The only direct grant school in Wales, TS Indefatigable, Anglesey, will receive grant totalling £15,750 in the current financial year. Payments to meet the costs of tuition fee remissions at independent schools participating in the assisted places scheme are shown in the table:

School	Payment—1989-90 (estimate) £
Howells School, Llandaff	338,380
Howells School, Denbigh	236,811
Christ College, Brecon	186,547
Rydal School, Colwyn Bay	128,121
Penrhos College, Colwyn Bay	163,726
Llandovery College, Dyfed	92,025
Monmouth School for Boys	320,596
Monmouth School for Girls	127,302

Rural Unemployment

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Clwyd, South-West of 30 November 1989, Official Report, column 339, whether he makes any general estimates on a regular basis of figures for rural unemployment.

Mr. Peter Walker: No.

Hospital Building

Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the five largest hospital building projects in Wales currently under construction; and what is the projected cost of each.

Mr. Grist: The five largest hospital building projects currently under construction in Wales are shown in the table:

Project	Projected Cost £ million
New Llanelli Hospital	26·9
Singleton Hospital West Ward Block	12·3
Royal Gwent Hospital Development Scheme 6	10·7
North Rhondda Community Hospital	8·0
Prince Charles Hospital Development Scheme 2	5·2

Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what have been the five largest hospital building projects completed in Wales since 1979; and what is the cost of each.

Mr. Grist: The five largest hospital building projects completed in Wales since 1979 are shown in the table:

Project	Cost £ million
Ysbyty Gwynedd, Bangor	36·9
Princess of Wales hospital, Bridgend	25·5
Morriston hospital development scheme I	20·4
Wrexham Maelor DGH	17·4
Ysbyty Glan Clwyd	12·5

Housing (Ceredigion)

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the latest estimate of the number of additional houses likely to be needed in Ceredigion over the next five years.

Mr. Grist: The statutory responsibility for assessing housing need in any particular area rests with the local authority concerned.

A487 Lower Fishguard

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to improve the trunk road A487 at Lower Fishguard, Pembrokeshire during the next five years; and if he will make a statement in the light of the latest serious accident.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: A scheme for a relief road was considered but deferred because of local objections to its effect on the environment. It will be re-examined and discussed with local authorities.

Household Refuse Tips

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will lay down guidelines to local authorities on the planning, environmental health and waste disposal criteria for granting permission for tipping partly rotted household refuse removed from one controlled refuse tip to another.

Mr. Grist: Guidance on the disposal of household refuse is contained in the series of waste management papers published by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution, and in Welsh Office circulars 76/76 and 38/89. My right hon. Friend has no proposals to issue further guidance.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what licences he has issued for the tipping of transported partly rotted household refuse from controlled local authority tips of five to 20 years' vintage.

Mr. Grist: The responsibility for issuing waste disposal licences rests with district councils in Wales as waste disposal authorities.

Road Improvements

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which trunk road improvement schemes in Wales are expected to start in the financial year 1990-91.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: An announcement will be made in the Welsh Office commentary on the public expenditure White Paper due to be published in March.

Forestry

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales where in Wales the Forestry Commission proposes to sell off forests and woods giving the size in acres, the nature of the woodland and the estimated cost of the forests and woods in question; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker [holding answer 16 January 1990]: The Forestry Commission's current disposals programme will extend over the next 10 years and the selection of properties for sale will accordingly be staged over that period. Advance notification of properties to be placed on the market is given in the Estates Gazette when firm decisions to sell are taken by the commission.

The following forest areas are at present being offered for sale on the open market. These areas are all predominantly coniferous.

HEALTH

National Health Service Spending

Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will set out in the Official Report a table showing, for the years 1987-88 and 1988-89 (estimated), the average cost per head of spending in the National Health Service by health authorities, broken down into groups as follows: births, ages up to four years, five to 15 years, 16 to 64 years, 65 to 74 years and 75 plus years.

Mr. Freeman: District-based figures of average total revenue expenditure per head of resident population for 1987-88 and 1988-89 are shown in the table. (The figures for 1988-89 are provisional in that they are as yet subject to audit.)

Although the greatest use of health care facilities tends to be the very young and the elderly it is not practicable centrally specifically to assign district health authorities' total expenditure to particular age groups.

Sources:

(a) 1987-88 and 1988-89 annual accounts of district health authorities.

(b) Mid-year estimates of resident population—1987 and 1988 respectively (Office of Population Censuses and Surveys).

Notes:

1. District capital expenditure and all expenditure incurred by regional health authorities on behalf of their regions as a whole is excluded.
2. Expenditure on family practitioner services is excluded: such expenditure is accounted for by family practitioner committees (FPCs) and cannot strictly be attributed to particular districts.
3. Significant variations in per capita expenditure figures at district level arise principally because:
   (i) people travel across district boundaries for treatment and sub-regional resource allocations reflect the pattern of service provision locally;
   (ii) the population figures used make no allowance for people resident in one district who receive treatment in another or for the difference in morbidity and age/sex structure of particular populations.

Expenditure, North-West

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the percentage of capital spending as a proportion of total spending by regional health authorities in the north-west; and what was the comparable figure 10 years ago.

Mr. Freeman: Information for the Mersey and North Western regions together with aggregated figures for all regions in England is shown in the table.

Capital expenditure figures for individual regions fluctuate from year to year mainly reflecting changes in the pattern of capital investment throughout the country.

Hospital and community health services (HCHS) capital expenditure as a proportion of total expenditure

	1978-79 Per cent.	1988-89[1] Per cent.
Mersey Region	9·8	6·1
North Western Region	9·1	6·5
All Regions	7·7	7·9

[1] Based on provisional expenditure figures (as yet subject to audit).

Notes:

1. The figures, derived from annual accounts, include expenditure incurred by regional health authorities and the district (formerly area) health authorities comprising those regions.
2. HCHS includes hospital, community health, patient transport (ie ambulance), blood transfusion and other services.
3. The table excludes expenditure on family practitioner services.

Over-Prescribing

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what sanctions are available currently against general practitioners who, after professional assessment, are considered to be over-prescribing; what changes will be introduced under the new general practitioners contract; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: At present, action can be taken under regulation 16 of the NHS (Service Committees and Tribunal) Regulations 1974 against general practitioners who are considered to be prescribing excessively. Regulation 16 provides for the Secretary of State to refer cases to local medical committees (LMCs) for investigation. LMCs may recommend a withholding of remuneration against GPs who prescribe excessively. There have been no referrals under regulation 16 since 1974. The Department is currently discussing with representatives of the medical profession, in the light of the Government's plans to introduce indicative prescribing budgets, how the existing sanctions process should be modified to provide a more effective procedure. GPs who exceed their indicative prescribing budget will not face sanctions on that fact alone. Only where there is clear evidence of excessive prescribing will the FPC refer the matter for consideration by a professional committee. We expect that the application of sanctions will be a process of last resort.

Health Authority Budgets

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what statutory powers regional health authorities have to ensure that district health authorities do not exceed their budgets; and whether it is his intention to extend this power to FPSA spending as well.

Mr. Freeman: Under section 97 of the National Health Service Act 1977, as amended, it is the duty of each regional health authority to allocate money to its districts and under section 97A each district health authority has a duty to ensure that its expenditure does not exceed its allocation.

The Secretary of State makes allocations to family practitioner committees for their administrative expenditure and, from 1 April 1990, will make allocations for cash-limited expenditure on direct reimbursement of part of general medical practitioners' practice expenses. The National Health Service and Community Care Bill presently before Parliament contains provisions to transfer this task to regional health authorities. As with district health authorities, it is the duty of each family practitioner committee to ensure that its expenditure does not exceed the amount allocated.

East Cleveland Hospital

Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects work to begin on the new hospital in east Cleveland.

Mr. Freeman: No firm decisions have been taken yet about the timing, size and content of the new development. My hon. Friend may care to contact the chairman of the Northern regional health authority if he would like more information.

Paramedics

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many qualified paramedics are employed by Durham area health authority; how many are in training; and what is the total number of paramedics to be trained.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We do not hold information centrally about paramedics. The hon. Member may care to contact the chairman of the Durham health authority for the information.

NHS

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he has taken to rebut allegations that he has plans to privatise aspects of the National Health Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The White Paper "Working for Patients" clearly states that the Government have no plans to privatise the National Health Service. We support a Health Service which is open to all, regardless of income, and financed mainly from general taxation. The aim of all our reforms is to raise the performance of all parts of the NHS nearer to that of the best.

Vaccination Leaflet

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Pembroke of 21 December 1989, Official Report, column 379, he will place in the Library the research which indicated that the original version of the measles, mumps, and rubella vaccination leaflet ID19 ISBN1 85448 050 2 had limited appeal.

Mr. Freeman: The assessment of the MMR leaflet ID19 is still in draft format. A copy of the final report will be placed in the Library on its completion.

Tuberculosis Vaccinations

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the adequacy of stocks of tuberculosis vaccinations held nationally.

Mr. Freeman: Temporary supply difficulties arose last year whilst our source of supply moved production facilities to a new site. This necessitated conserving remaining stocks by restricting vaccination to those at particular risk of exposure to tuberculosis. Adequate stocks remain for that purpose and I am glad to say that fresh supplies should be available by April 1990 to enable routine school vaccination to recommence later this year.

National Fitness Survey

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any proposals to back up current epidemiological studies, known as the national fitness survey, to allow calibration of the survey tools, such as more accurate energy cost estimates; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Some calibration of the survey tools is built into the national fitness survey proposals: for example repeatability studies will help to indentify errors associated with the physical tests. On the specified point about energy cost estimates, estimates are already published which will be applied to the survey data collected, and while some of these figures are in need of revision they will nevertheless enable reasonable estimates to be made. Producing more accurate energy cost estimates would require small intensive studies which could be undertaken at any time, the results of which could be applied retrospectively to the national fitness survey data. The Department has no plans at the moment to commission such work, but the national fitness survey team hopes that the survey itself will inspire such studies.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the level of industrial and commercial sponsorship of the national fitness survey; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The national fitness survey is being financed jointly by the Department of Health, the Health Education Authority and the Sports Council. Negotiations are continuing with potential commercial sponsors in order to extend the size of the survey to provide accurate analyses of data to regional level.

HEALTH

Air Ambulances

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many successful missions have been carried out by the London Air Ambulance.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is not held centrally.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if any of his Department's Ministers have met representatives of the Daily Express concerning the London Air Ambulance;

(2) what representations his Department has received from the Daily Express and its management concerning the London Air Ambulance.

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. Friend the then Secretary of State met representatives of Express Newspapers plc in February 1988 to discuss the helicopter emergency medical service.

The Department has met regularly with representatives of Express Newspapers plc and all other parties involved in the helicopter emergency medical service since March 1988.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if Ministers will now arrange a visit to the Cornwall First Air Ambulance.

Mr. Freeman: There are no present plans to do so, but we will bear in mind the hon. Gentleman's suggestion should a suitable opportunity arise.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the total monthly running costs for the London Air Ambulance.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is not held centrally.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what financial contribution the Daily Express has committed to the London Air Ambulance; and over what period.

Mr. Freeman: Express Newspapers plc has agreed to meet all costs directly associated with the aircraft used by the helicopter emergency medical service, including purchase, maintenance and salaries, for the period 1 January 1989 to 31 December 1991.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been provided through his Department's capital support for the London Air Ambulance.

Mr. Freeman: Capital funding in respect of the helicopter emergency medical service is to provide a helipad and lift at the London hospital, Whitechapel and to contribute towards the cost of resuscitation bays at the same hospital.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the breakdown of the cost supported through the Department's revenue funding of the London Air Ambulance.

Mr. Freeman: Central funding has been agreed as follows in respect of day-to-day revenue costs of the helicopter emergency medical service:

	£ 000s
1989-90
ITU beds	46
Medical salaries	11
1990-91
ITU beds	274
Medical salaries	63
1991-92
ITU beds	205·5
Medical salaries	47·25

The figures are at 1989-90 prices.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has any plans to review the resources committed to the London Air Ambulance for the three years from January 1989 before the funding is exhausted.

Mr. Freeman: The helicopter emergency medical service is to be independently academically evaluated during the period of the agreed funding.

Welfare Milk

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received concerning his proposal to reduce the value of welfare milk tokens; and if he will make a statement on the reasons for the proposal.

Mr. Freeman: I refer my hon. Friend to the replies I gave the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, North (Ms. Walley) on 8 January at column 505 and to the hon. Member for St. Helens, South (Mr. Bermingham) on 16 January at columns 201-202.

Ambulance Dispute

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the number of (a) Army, (b) St. John Ambulance and (c) Red Cross vehicles deployed in (i) each health authority and (ii) in total.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 8 January 1990]: On 15 January 1990 the numbers of military vehicles deployed, by regional health authority, were:

	Number
Trent regional health authority	17
North West Thames regional health authority	15
North East Thames regional health authority	10
South West Thames regional health authority	[1]67
Wessex regional health authority	8
Oxford regional health authority	9
West Midlands regional health authority	51
TOTAL	177

[1] Including the London Ambulance Service.

St. John and Red Cross vehicles assist health authorities from time to time depending on local operational conditions. Information about numbers of vehicles deployed is not held centrally.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which health authorities are engaged in a pilot study of health information systems, stating in each case (a) the additional costs of undertaking the study and (b) how those costs are shared between the Department and the health authority.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 15 January 1990]: Various pilot studies into health information systems are in progress. These include:

1. Hospital Information Support Systems (HISS)
There are three pilot sites. The districts involved are:
Nottingham, Darlington, Greenwich
Expenditure by the Department in the current financial year is £2·94 million. Information on health authority expenditure on these projects is not held centrally.

2. Resource Management Initiative (RMI)
Hospitals in six district health authorities are pilot sites for the resource management initiative. The districts are:
Huddersfield, Lewisham and North Southwark, Newcastle, South Lincolnshire, Winchester, Wirral
The costs of these projects are shared by the Department and the health authorities concerned. Information on health authority expenditure on these projects is not held centrally. Expenditure by the Department so far in this financial year is £1·1 million.

Regional Allocations

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give for 1990-91 the cash sums added or deducted from each National Health Service region's allocation in respect of cross-boundary flows of patients and in the case of the Northern region, identify the sum in respect of inflows of patients from Scotland.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 17 January 1990]: The information requested is shown in the table. In the case of Northern region the sum of £1,361,000 added for cross-boundary flows represents an addition of £1,383,000 for net inflow from Scotland less £22,000 for net inflow to Wales.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, Central on 10 January, Official Report, column 663, he will list (a) amounts paid to each regional health authority in respect of patients served from outside England under the resource allocation working party formula, (b) express those payments in standard prices with the current year as the base and (c) express such payments as a cash figure per 1,000 population of the region in standard prices with a similar base.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 17 January 1990]: No specific allocation was made to English regions in respect of the flow of patients from outside England. Cross-boundary patient flows from outside England were only taken into account under the resource allocation working party (RAWP) formula in assessing the relative needs of English regions.

EMPLOYMENT

Genetically Manipulated Organisms

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the 15 planned genetically manipulated organisms that have been released since 1986; and what was their purpose.

Mr. Nicholls: The 15 releases that have been notified to the Health and Safety Executive since 1986 are as follows:

Genetically manipulated organisms involved	Number of releases
1986
Baculovirus	1
1987
Baculovirus
Bacterium
Potato	3
1988
Baculovirus (x2)
Potato (x4)	6
1989
Baculovirus
Potato (x2)
Tobacco plant (x2)	5

All the releases were small-scale field trials for agricultural research and development purposes.

Productivity Gains

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the Government's policy on passing on productivity gains to the workers in the form of pay increases in (a) British-owned firms and (b) foreign-owned firms.

Mr. Nicholls: Productivity is a vital influence on the costs and competitiveness of all businesses, irrespective of ownership. Pay increases should not automatically absorb all of the productivity gains made. Resource must be available for improvement of price competitiveness, future investment, increased output and jobs.

Child Care

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what amenities for child care are available to single parents taking up employment training.

Mr. Nicholls: Lone parents on employment training (ET) can get help towards the cost of childcare facilities. Training providers are encouraged to set up creche facilities and training on ET can often be arranged to take account of individual domestic circumstances.

Company Annual Reports

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to ensure that companies produce, as part of their annual report to shareholders, a section of the report detailing their health and safety activities.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend has no present plans to do so.

Trade Union Members

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the trade unions that have applied to the Commissioner for the Rights of Trade Union Members for copies of the booklet "Guide for Trade Union Members", or the "Short Guide for Trade Union Members"; and how many copies were supplied to each trade union.

Mr. Nicholls: I am advised by the independent Commissioner for the Rights of Trade Union Members, that the trade unions or associations in the following table have applied for copies of the booklets "Guide for Trade Union Members" or the "Short Guide for Trade Union Members":

Trade Union/Association	Number of guides provided	Number of short guides provided

Noise at Work

Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many prosecutions, improvement notices, or prohibition notices relating to the control of noise at work in the years 1981 to 1989 have been initiated by the railway inspectorate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: I refer the hon. Member to the answers given to him on 26 October 1989 at columns 597-99.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what measures are being taken to monitor the application of the Noise at Work Regulations 1989 in respect of recording studios; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: Inspectors of the Health and Safety Executive enforce compliance with the Noise at Work Regulations in the course of preventive inspection visits to recording studios.

Hearing Defects

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what research has been carried out to establish whether musical sounds cause hearing defects to the same degree as industrial noise; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: Available evidence is inconclusive and does not justify treating the hazard created by high levels of musical sounds as different from that created by industrial noise at the same levels.

Disabled People (Training)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he is taking in his plans for training and enterprise councils to safeguard national provision of training for disabled people by the voluntary sector.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 10 January 1990]: I am currently considering future arrangements for voluntary sector training providers who offer training for people with disabilities on a national basis.

Earnings

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the percentage increase in average earnings of full-time manual workers in the motor vehicle industry in the year to April 1989 and the increase for non-manuals in banking and business services.

Mr. Nicholls: The increases were 9·9 per cent. for manual employees in the manufacture of motor vehicles and parts, and 10·3 per cent. for non-manual employees in banking and business services.

YTS

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of (a) contracted YTS places and (b) YTS trainees in training, for each region and for Great Britain as a whole for March and September for each year since 1986.

Mr. Nicholls: The table shows the number of YTS contracted places and the number of young people in training on YTS as at March and September of each year since 1986, for each Training Agency region and for Great Britain:

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are his best estimates of the numbers of (a) YTS employed trainees and (b) YTS non-employed trainees who will be liable to pay the poll tax in 1990-91.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 16 January 1990]: Young people become liable to pay the community charge at age 18. The following shows the number of young people aged 18 and above by status at the end of November 1989:

	18 and over
Non-employed trainees	48,470
Employed trainees	24,782

Principal Wages Inspector

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment why the principal wages inspector refuses to make available to hon. Members the guidance notes issued to inspectors for use when deciding whether or not to prosecute an employer who is paying below wages council levels.

Mr. Nicholls: The principle on which consideration of prosecution action is based, which is that the offence should be deliberate or repeated and the evidence judged sufficient, has always been made clear to hon. Members. The detailed procedural notes issued to inspectors assume a knowledge on the part of the user which can be gained only after training and experience and are, in any event, for internal use only.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Appeals

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases referred to the Court of Appeal under section 17 (1)(a) of the Criminal Appeal Act 1968 were heard before a jury.

Mr. John Patten: In all cases referred by the Home Secretary to the Court of Appeal under section 17(1)(a) of the Criminal Appeal Act 1968, there will have been a hearing before a jury at the original trial. Once a case has been referred under this section, it is for the Court of Appeal to decide how the matter should proceed, but I understand that in one such case a re-trial was ordered by the Court of Appeal and that this was heard before a jury.

Vagrants

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many persons have been convicted for begging or related offences since the beginning of 1989 in England and Wales;

(2) how many persons have been prosecuted under the Vagrancy Act 1824 since the beginning of 1988, in England and Wales.

Mr. John Patten: The number of people prosecuted under the Vagrancy Act 1824 (as amended) in England and Wales for 1988 was 2,810. Of these, 1,461 were for indecent exposure, 573 were for begging and 594 were for being on enclosed premises for an unlawful purpose. Information on prosecutions and convictions for 1989 will not be available until autumn 1990.

Legal Advice

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether police officers are obliged to inform suspects of their right to receive free legal advice; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Under section 58 of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 police officers are obliged to inform suspects of their right to legal advice, but not obliged to inform them that the advice is free. The revised code of practice for the detention, treatment and questioning of persons by police officers, which my right hon. and learned Friend hopes to lay before the House shortly, will require the police to advise suspects that legal advice is free.

Criminal Injuries Compensation Board

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to clear the backlog of cases at the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board.

Mr. John Patten: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Westminster, North (Sir J. Wheeler) on Friday 8 December 1989 at columns 409-17. Since then we have approved the board's request for 10 additional staff who are now in post.

We understand that the board will shortly submit its detailed request for a further increase in staff, which we will consider urgently.

Broadcast Frequencies

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he is taking to ensure that consumers are made fully aware of the full implications of the broadcast frequencies reshuffle in respect of receiving equipment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: The Green Paper on Radio in 1987 and the White Paper on Broadcasting in 1988 alerted viewers and listeners to our plans for the future of broadcasting. The changes proposed will not affect the frequencies used by existing independent local radio stations. But two medium wave networks will be reassigned from the BBC to facilitate the introduction of national commercial radio. The BBC is accordingly planning to place greater reliance on VHF/FM, and has increased the rate of building new FM transmitters.

BBC Radio has started informing listeners of its plans, including information about a new national sports and education network, Radio 5, which will be launched on 27 August 1990 on the AM frequencies currently used by Radio 2. It is understood that the BBC intends to increase its promotional efforts during the year as the changes draw nearer, and has formulated plans to ensure that listeners are fully advised on the new arrangements.

Correspondence received both at the Home Office and at the BBC indicates that there is already considerable public awareness of the changing situation, and we shall continue to have regard to listeners' needs as frequency planning proceeds.

As for television, we believe most viewers realise that they will require new receiving equipment if they wish to see the new services which are being introduced. The White Paper also pointed out that most video cassette recorders and some home computers would need to be retuned in areas in which Channel 5 was receivable, irrespective of whether their owners chose to receive the new service. But it added that any costs incurred might be met by Channel 5 licensees.

Dr. Zakaria Erzinclioglu

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) on how many occasions since 1979 his Department has utilised the expertise of the forensic entomologist Dr. Zakaria Erzinclioglu; whether the assistance provided by Dr. Erzinclioglu could have been supplied by anyone employed by his Department; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what alternative facilities are to be available for forensic entomology to assist police investigations, following the non-renewal of the research grant for Dr. Zakaria Erzinclioglu; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will make it his policy to provide funding for the research of the forensic entomologist Dr. Zakaria Erzinclioglu in the department of zoology at Cambridge university; and if he will make a statement;

(4) if his Department's forensic science service employs any persons with specialist knowledge of forensic entomology; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Dr. Erzinclioglu's position is at present under consideration and I will write to the hon. and learned Member.

Juvenile Offenders

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what contact his Department has had with the Belgian Government in implementing a similar scheme in the United Kingdom as their Oikoten scheme, as an alternative to custody for persistent juvenile offenders; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: The Government have encouraged the development of schemes offering constructive and demanding community-based facilities for dealing with juvenile offenders at risk of receiving custodial sentences in England and Wales. These schemes have made an important contribution to the reduction by nearly 60 per cent. in the number of juvenile offenders given custodial sentences in 1988 compared with 1981. I am aware that other countries operate similar schemes but we are not familiar with the details of the Oikoten scheme.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Set-Aside

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received over the desirability of placing an upper limit on the amount of land which an individual farmer may set aside, or on the amount of compensation for set-aside which an individual farmer can receive.

Mr. Curry: I have received no recent representations about such limits, which would not in any case be consistent with the Community set-aside rules.

Dairy Export Refunds

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food why EEC spending on dairy export refunds has increased in the past three years; and what steps were taken to ensure that the increase is compatible with the EEC agreement with New Zealand on orderly marketing of dairy surpluses.

Mr. Curry: Increased expenditure on dairy export refunds in 1988 and 1989 resulted from an increased volume of sales in response to a strenthening of demand on world markets at a time when the Community was rightly concerned to give priority to exports over sales into intervention. All EC dairy exports have complied with the rules of the GATT international dairy arrangement, of which both New Zealand and the Community are members. This includes the low-priced EC butter exports which took place in 1987 and 1988 under derogations agreed by all parties to the arrangement.

Variable Import Levy (Wheat)

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food why the EEC variable import levy for wheat is more than 100 per cent. in excess of the gap between EEC and world prices; and if he will make it his policy to seek a substantial reduction in the forthcoming common agricultural policy price negotiations.

Mr. Curry: The variable import levy for wheat is calculated by the Commission of the European Communities by deducting from the threshold price the lowest known world price, adjusted to take account of quality and the cost of delivery to Rotterdam. The import levy is therefore always greater than the difference between the threshold price and quoted world prices, except in the case of the lowest known world price.

In considering the Commission's proposals for the 1990 CAP price negotiations, I will take account of the possibility of reducing the wheat threshold price.

Cereal Imports

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food why the EEC threshold price for cereal imports has not been reduced in line with the cereal intervention price.

Mr. Curry: Over the last three market years, the start-of-season Community intervention prices for common wheat and barley have been reduced by 3 per cent. as a result of the operation of the stabiliser. Over the same period, the threshold price has been reduced by 5·8 per cent. for common wheat and 6·1 per cent. for barley as a result of the operation of the stabiliser and, in addition, a fall in the transport costs used in calculating threshold price levels.

Whaling

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many representations he has received from hon. and right hon. Members and members of the public calling for a total ban on whaling; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: I have received a great many representations on whaling. We work hard to ensure the conservation of whales. The United Kingdom played a leading role in securing the present moratorium on commercial whaling under the International Whaling Commission (IWC) and has been very active in working to ensure that it is not undermined. We have had much success with this policy—for example, Korea and now Iceland are no longer conducting scientific whaling research programmes.

Animal Feed (Colouring Matter)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy for colouring used solely in animal feed to become subject to the Colouring Matter in Food Regulations 1973.

Mr. Maclean: The use of colourings in animal feed is controlled by directive 70/524/EEC as amended. The directive sets out the permitted list of colourants, prescribed maximum levels in feedingstuffs and labelling requirements for feedingstuffs containing them. In the UK all these provisions are implemented in the Feeding Stuffs Regulations 1988 as amended. The Colouring Matter in Food Regulations 1973 as amended deal with colours in human food and I have already announced that I will be circulating proposals to revise the regulations for public comment shortly.

Common Fisheries Policy

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the main changes in the present common fisheries policy since its introduction in January 1983.

Mr. Curry: The present structure and foundation of the common fisheries policy was laid down in 1983. Changes since then have essentially been adjustments and improvements such as annual TACs and quotas; additions to and improvements on technical conservation measures; and revisions to the market support arrangements; enforcement;and arrangements made to take account of the accession of Spain and Portugal. The principles on which the common fisheries policy was founded have not been changed.

White Fish

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the national fixed percentage share of the seven main edible white fish species in fishing area VII in (a) 1983, (b) 1986, (c) 1989 and for 1990 for each European Community country; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The percentage shares of total allowable catches between member states were set as part of the 1983 common fisheries policy settlement and are shown in the table:

Member state percentage shares of main white fish stocks in area VII

[1] For 1990 Hague Preference invoked. Member states' allocation adjusted accordingly. Figures in brackets show resulting percentage share-out for 1990 only.
[2] Allocation key first established in 1984 when TAC first set for this stock.

The percentage shares, which safeguard relative stability, apply each year except when stocks fall to a level when the Hague Preference is involved. This happened for the first time in area VII for the 1990 whiting quota for Ireland.

Milk Quota

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to make an announcement on the distribution of the additional 1 per cent. milk quota; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: We shall make an announcement as soon as we have completed consultations with my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Northern Ireland and for Wales and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and have obtained the EC Commission's agreement to our proposals.

DEFENCE

Overseas Service Allowance

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what reasons a wounded convalescent soldier's overseas service allowance is terminated after 21 days; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces will write to the hon. Member.

Low Frequency Transmitters

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement regarding the progress of the planned trial extremely low frequency transmitter at Glengarry forest, Scotland.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: All site surveys required for the extremely low frequency demonstrator programme should be completed by the end of April 1990. Preparation of the notice of proposed development continues but it is not possible to say precisely when it will be submitted to the Highland regional council. Various interested bodies are being consulted in order to take account of their views. Installation and trials of the transmitter will not proceed until planning permission has been granted.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what agreements exist between the United Kingdom and other Governments regarding the use of extremely low frequency transmitters for the purpose of communicating with submarines.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are no such agreements.

WE177 Free-fall Bomb

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he envisages that the tactical air-to-surface missile, to replace the WE177 free-fall bomb, will have a range of between 500 and 5,500 km.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A number of options for the possible replacement of the WE177 free-fall bomb are under consideration. It is not possible to predict the outcome of these studies at this stage.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with his French counterpart regarding the possible joint development of an uprated ASMP, as a replacement for the WE177 free-fall bomb.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has discussed possible options for the replacement of the WE177 with M. Chevenement. However, details of these discussions are confidential.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with his United States counterpart regarding the possible purchase of SRAM-2, or SRAM-T, as a replacement for the WE177 free-fall bomb.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None, although this subject was discussed with Mr. Cheney by my right hon. Friend the Member for Ayr (Mr. Younger) in July 1989.

Trident

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any studies have been undertaken regarding possible substitutes for the Trident programme, in the eventuality that development and production of the D5 missile system is cancelled by the United States Government.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No.

Laser Weapons

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether bright flashes of light have been used in anti-terrorist operations by Her Majesty's armed forces.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is not our practice to comment on the details of anti-terrorist operations.

Defence Staff List

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to write to the hon. Member for Don Valley about defence staff list documents as promised in his reply of 15 November 1989, Official Report, column 296.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I wrote to the hon. Member on 22 November and copies of my letter were placed in the Library of the House. I have now sent a further copy of the letter to the hon. Member.

Biological Weapons

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the 77 research projects being carried out at United Kingdom universities in connection with the manufacture of biological weapons.

Mr. Neubert: No such projects are being undertaken. The United Kingdom has no biological weapons and no plans to acquire any.

Aircraft (Central Records)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action his Department is taking to ensure that central records are kept of flights by (a) prior authorised non-Royal Air Force and (b) unauthorised non-Royal Air Force NATO military aircraft over the United Kingdom.

Mr. Neubert: None.

Low-flying Aircraft

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what reduction or increase has been made in the number of low-flying military jet sorties in each of the last five years.

Mr. Neubert: Over the last five years for which figures are available, the approximate number of military low-flying sorties in the United Kingdom attributed in central records to specific jet aircraft is as follows:

Year	Number
1984	92,000
1985	95,000
1986	101,000
1987	96,000
1988	97,000

Service Men (Murders)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what compensation has been offered to the families of three service men murdered in Northern Ireland on 18 November 1989; and why the overseas pay of the fourth service man, still recovering in hospital in Northern Ireland, was withdrawn.

Mr. Archie Hamilton [holding answer 12 January 1990]: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces will write to the hon. Member.

SCOTLAND

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowance

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he plans to announce the outcome of the 1989 hill farming review; and if any changes are proposed to the hill livestock compensatory allowance system.

Mr. Rifkind: We hope to make an announcement very soon.

Offences Against Children

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many reported cases of (a) rape and (b) sexual offences against children, including incest, there have been in Scotland in each of the last five years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The available information on the number of rape cases recorded by the police is set out in the table. Information which separately identifies sexual offences against children is not held centrally.

Batteries and Accumulators

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what steps he has taken to promote the marketing of batteries and accumulators containing smaller quantities of dangerous substances or less-polluting substances;

(2) what steps he is taking to ensure that consumers are fully informed about the dangers of uncontrolled disposal of spent batteries and accumulators;

(3) what steps he is taking to inform consumers of the method of removing batteries and accumulators which are built into appliances;

(4) what steps he is taking to set up a deposit system for batteries and accumulators;

(5) what steps his Department has taken to reduce the heavy metal content in batteries and accumulators.

Mr Lang: I refer the hon. Member to the replies given to him by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Industry and Consumer Affairs on Thursday 18 January, Vol. 165, columns 357-8.

Uniform Business Rate

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the impact of the uniform business rate in Scotland since its introduction.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Government's intention is to move towards a national non-domestic rate in Scotland at the same level as that in England. Powers were taken in the Local Government and Housing Act 1989 to enable the Secretary of State to prescribe the non-domestic rate for each Scottish local authority as from 1 April 1990, and on 21 December my right hon. and learned Friend announced the rates to be prescribed for 1990-91. Rates have been set so as to reduce revenue raised from non-domestic ratepayers next year by £80 million which is equivalent to a reduction in rate poundages of 6·25 per cent. Our intention is to continue to move towards a common rate over the next few years, after which a national rate will be prescribed at the same level as that in England.

National Health Service Reform

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many postcards he received from members of the public expressing opposition to the Government's policy for the National Health Service; how many replies were sent out by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary, the hon. Member for Stirling (Mr. Forsyth), and what was the cost of the staff time, stationery and postage included in sending those replies.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 18 January 1990]: The campaigns by the Labour party and NALGO resulted in receipt of some 47,000 postcards. In order to correct the misleading suggestions in this material about our proposals for improving the National Health Service, all of these cards received replies from the Scottish Home and Health Department. The total cost involved was some £8,800.

ENERGY

Diesel Oil

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many representations he has received from industry, commerce and the public relating to the notification to the public of changes in diesel oil costs over the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: In the last 12 months the Department of Energy has received around 60 representations from MPs, the public and small businesses about the price of diesel.

Oil product prices are not set by Government. They are a matter for the oil companies, suppliers and retailers and reflect the cost of supply and the level of competition prevailing in the market. The recent rise in the price of diesel reflected an unusual combination of increased seasonal demand in Europe and the United States of America, and reduced supply caused by European delivery problems, United States refinery shutdowns and reduced exports from the USSR.

European Energy Foundation

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if his departmental library receives copies of the European Energy Foundation monthly information bulletin.

Mr. Wakeham: No.

SCRAM Energy Journal

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if his departmental library receives the SCRAM energy journal.

Mr. Wakeham: No.

Electricity Industry (External Financing Limit)

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if there has been any change in the external financing limit for the electricity supply industry in England and Wales for the financial year 1989-90.

Mr. Wakeham: I have agreed a revised external financing limit of £1,780 million for the electricity supply industry in England and Wales for the financial year 1989-90. This revision from the previous limit of £1,300 million has been mainly due to the change in the tax position of the industry.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Disability Benefits

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether, in the last six months, his Department has issued revised guidelines to doctors assessing fitness for work of people in receipt of disability-related benefits.

Mr. Scott: No.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners will receive an increase in their income as a result of the proposals he announced in his statement on benefits for the disabled on 10 January; and what is the estimated cost (a) gross, (b) net of benefits, (c) net of tax if appropriate and (d) net of benefit and tax if appropriate in each financial year 1990-91 to 1998-99.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 15 January 1990]: It is estimated that about 40,000 pensioners annually will benefit from the extension of attendance allowance to terminally ill people without any waiting period. By 2000-1, it is expected that a further 80,000 pensioners will benefit from the removal of the upper age limit for payment of help with mobility needs. It is also expected that by 2000-1, some 50,000 pensioners will be in receipt of one of the proposed new lower rates of the disability allowance (having claimed before reaching age 65).

(b), (c) and (d). There are no offsetting changes to other benefits from these proposals, and the benefit gains are not taxable.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if, pursuant to his statement on benefits for the disabled of 10 January, he will publish in the Official Report his estimate of the cost of the new disablement employment credit (a) gross, (b) net of benefit savings, (c) net of tax if appropriate and (d) net of benefit and tax if appropriate in each financial year 1992-93 to 1998-99 giving his estimate of the numbers who will be eligible and the expected take-up rate.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 15 January 1990]: (a), (b) The net effect on expenditure of the disability employment credit is difficult to predict and will depend on whether recipients of the proposed benefit were previously receiving out-of-work benefits. Our initial, tentative, estimate is that gross expenditure on the disability employment credit might be about £80 million a year. Consequential benefit savings—through non-payment of full incapacity benefits—are estimated to be about £90 million a year.

(c), (d) The disability employment credit itself will not be taxable, although any associated earnings will be subject to income tax and national insurance contributions in the normal way.

Eligibility for the proposed disability employment credit will depend not only on prior or current receipt of qualifying benefits but also on level of potential earnings and availability of suitable jobs. Existing data do not provide sufficient information about these factors to enable us to produce reliable estimates of the number who will be eligible or of take-up rates. Our tentative estimates suggest some 50,000 people could receive the new benefit.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if, pursuant to his statement on benefits for the disabled on 10 January, he will publish in the Official Report a breakdown of the additional net cost of his proposals broken down by measure for each financial year 1990-91 to 1998-99;

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the net cost or savings of the totality of the proposals contained in "The Way Ahead" in each of the financial years from 1990-91 to 2000-01; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 15 January 1990]: It is not possible to provide reliable estimates of the cost of each measure for every year, particularly in the longer term, since the costs depend on a large number of factors which cannot be accurately forecast. The table therefore gives estimates for the first four financial years, together with an indication of the likely effects of 2000-01. The figures for 2000-01 are subject to considerable margins of uncertainty.

[1] Additional expenditure on mobility allowance for the deaf-blind is included in the Disability Allowance totals after 1992-93.
[2] Subject to decisions about the future of the Independent Living fund.
[3] The net effect on expenditure of the Disability Employment Credit is difficult to predict and will depend on whether recipients of the proposed benefit were previously receiving out-of-work benefits.
[4] Totals revised upwards since the Autumn Statement to reflect a small downwards adjustment of estimated savings from the change in the Reduced Earnings Allowance. Totals may not equal sum of components because of rounding.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if, pursuant to his statement on benefits for the disabled on 10 January, if he will publish in the Official Report his estimate of (a) the number of people who will be eligible for each level of the care component and the mobility component of the new disability allowance, (b) the number of people who would have been eligible for attendance allowance and mobility allowance but will get the lower rate of the care and the mobility component and (c) the cost (i) gross, (ii) net of benefit, (iii) net of tax if appropriate and (iv) net of benefit and tax if appropriate of the disability allowance in each financial year 1992-93 to 1998-99.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 15 January 1990]: (a) Current projections of the likely number of recipients of the proposed disability allowance by 1993-94 are:

Self-care component	Number of recipients
Higher rate	150,000
Middle rate	250,000
Lower rate	140,000
Mobility component
Higher rate	700,000
Lower rate	150,000

Attendance allowance will remain to provide help with care needs for an estimated 600,000 people aged over 65.

(b) People will qualify for the upper level of the mobility component and the two upper levels of the care component on the basis of assessment criteria similar to those currently employed for mobility allowance and attendance allowance respectively.

(c) (i) and (ii). Details of the cost of introducing the disability allowance are set out in the table:

£ million

	Expenditure on disability allowance	Expenditure on other [1]benefits	Total

1992-93	+75	+40	+115

[1] Income support and housing benefit.
[2] Includes £100 million additional expenditure on help with mobility needs due to abolition of upper age limit for payments.

(c) (iii) and (iv). Adjustments net of benefit and tax are not appropriate: the disability allowance will not be taxable.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his statement on benefits for the disabled on 10 January, if he will publish in the Official Report (a) his estimates of the cost of the age-related addition to the severe disablement allowance (i) gross, (ii) net of benefit savings, (iii) net of tax savings if appropriate and (iv) net of benefit and tax savings if appropriate for each financial year 1990-91 to 1998-99, (b) his estimate of the number of people who will be eligible for the new addition and the expected take-up rate, (c) the number and percentage of invalidity allowance and invalidity pension claims which will be replaced by the new addition and (d) his estimate of the additional number of people who will gain benefit because of the new addition and those who will lose it.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 15 January 1990]: (a) It is not possible to provide reliable estimates of the costs of this measure for every year, particularly in the longer term, since the costs depend on a number of factors such as the future claims load which cannot be accurately forecast. The table therefore gives estimates for the first four years after implementation, together with an indication of the effect in 2000-01. Figures for 2000-01 are subject to considerable margins of uncertainty.

[1] Income-related benefits.

(iii) and (iv): Severe disablement allowance and the proposed age-related addition are not taxable.

(b) It is estimated that about 250,000 people will be eligible for the addition. All of these will receive the addition automatically with their existing severe disablement allowance payments.

(c) Invalidity allowance and invalidity pension claims are not affected by this proposal.

(d) Some 250,000 recipients of the severe disablement allowance will receive the addition. None will lose benefit. The number of severe disablement allowance recipients who will be better off in net terms is about 120,000.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his statement on benefits for the disabled on 10 January, if he will publish in the Official Report his estimate of the savings incurred in each financial year 1990-91 to 1998-99 as a result of ending new entitlement to the invalidity pension additional pension (a) gross, (b) net of benefits, (c) net of tax if appropriate and (d) net of benefits and tax if appropriate; what is his estimate of the number of people who will get (i) a reduced additional pension and (ii) no additional pension in each of the years; and if there will be a reduction in national insurance contributions as a result of this measure.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 15 January 1990]: It is not possible to provide reliable estimates of savings from this measure for every year, particularly in the longer term, since the level of savings depends crucially on a number of factors such as the future claims load and earnings growth which cannot be accurately forecast. The table therefore gives estimates for the first three years after implementation, together with an indication of the effect by 2000-1. The figures for 2000-1 are subject to considerable margins of uncertainty.

[1] This table simply shows the numbers with reduced additional pension (AP) entitlements. For many there will be consequential adjustments to invalidity allowance or income-related benefits which will offset part or all of the reduction in AP entitlement.

The effect on national insurance fund expenditure will be taken into account in determining future levels of contributions.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his statement on benefits for the disabled on 10 January, if he will publish in the Official Report his estimate of the savings incurred in each financial year 1990-91 to 1990-99 as a result of ending new entitlement to the industrial injuries reduced earnings allowance (a) gross, (b) net of benefits, (c) net of tax if appropriate and (d) net of benefits and tax if appropriate.

Long-Term Incapacity

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people are currently receiving a benefit for long-term incapacity under occupational sick pay schemes; and if he will break down the figures by sex and standard age cohorts.

Mr. Scott: Out of a total work force of 22 million it is estimated that just under 13 million (58 per cent.) have occupational sick pay cover for long-term sickness. These comprise about 6·5 million men (54 per cent. of the male work force) and 6 million women (61 per cent. of the female work force). Information about the coverage of age is not available. The information is based on the report on occupational sick pay schemes by IFF Research Ltd. for the Department of Social Security, published in November 1988.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average payment currently being received by recipients of a benefit for long-term incapacity under occupational sick pay schemes; and if he will break down the figures by sex and standard age cohorts.

Mr. Scott: I regret that information is not available in the form requested. The report on occupational sick pay schemes shows that 57 per cent. of all employees with long-term sick pay cover receive a percentage of salary when sick and a further 19 per cent. receive a scale rate. Payments for the remainder are calculated on a variety of different bases—for example, full basic salary, a flat rate amount or a discretionary rate.

Reduced Earnings Allowance

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people are currently receiving reduced earnings allowance as a supplement to their earnings; on what criteria he bases his proposal to abolish entitlement to reduced earnings allowance in such circumstances; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: On the basis of information for April 1988, just under 150,000 people received reduced earnings allowance. Of these, about 24,000 were likely to have been in work. Potential changes in benefits policy are assessed according to the criteria set out in paragraph 4 of Cm. 615 "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1989-90 to 1991-92".

Severe Disablement Allowance

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if entitlement to the proposed age-related addition to severe disablement allowance will be based on age at the introduction of the addition or the age of the severe disablement allowance recipient at the commencement of the period of their incapacity for work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: We propose to introduce payment of the new age-related addition to severe disablement allowance from December 1990. The rate of the addition will be related to the age of the recipient at the time the incapacity for work began.

Disability Allowance

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will place in the Library the models of a points system disability allowance referred to in paragraph 3.15 of "The Way Ahead."

Mr. Scott: I will shortly place in the Library further information about the disability cost allowance based on a points index which is referred to in paragraph 3.15 of "The Way Ahead".

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assumptions were made about existing entitlement to attendance and mobility allowance in the models of a points system disability allowance referred to in paragraph 3.15 of "The Way Ahead"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The points-based benefit schemes referred to in paragraph 3.15 of "The Way Ahead" would have replaced attendance allowance and mobility allowance.

Disabled People

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on what criteria he has decided to exclude from the Government's proposals in "The Way Ahead" any help for people with disabilities with extra costs other than those arising from mobility or attendance needs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The surveys of disability carried out by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys found that attendance allowance and mobility allowance are well directed towards the most common of the more costly disabilities. Locomotion and self-care disabilities are associated with relatively high disability-related expenditure. Equally important, the benefits provide help to people with other disabilities in the frequent cases where they are combined with locomotion or self-care disabilities.

Invalidity Pension

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the estimated saving in each year up to 2030-31 resulting from the phasing out of entitlement to earnings-related invalidity pension, gross and net of additional spending on invalidity allowance.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 16 January 1990]: The available information on gross savings from ending the accrual of new rights to invalidity benefit additional pension is given in the table. The estimates are based on long-term projections of expenditure on additional pension which are subject to considerable margins of error; the savings estimates beyond 2000-01 are particularly uncertain. Since annual figures would therefore imply a spurious precision, the estimates are given at five-year intervals. Projections beyond 2025-26 are not available.

Effect on expenditure	Gross change in additional pension expenditure at constant 1989-90 prices £ million (saving)

2020-21	1,525

These are gross savings in additional pension expenditure before offsetting adjustments to invalidity allowance and income-related benefits. I shall write to the hon. Member enclosing estimates isolating the effect of invalidity allowance when these are available.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the expenditure on the additional component to invalidity pension that would be incurred in each of the next 20 years (a) under pre-1986 legislation, (b) under current legislation and (c) under the proposals in "The Way Ahead"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: (a) Information on additional pension expenditure under pre-1986 legislation is not available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

(b) and (c) Projections of expenditure under current legislation and under the proposals in "The Way Ahead" (Cm. 917) are as follows. These estimates are subject to considerable margins of uncertainty, particularly in the longer term. Since the precision implied by annual estimates would therefore be spurious, the long-term projections are given at five-year intervals.

Projected expenditure on invalidity benefit additional pension at constant 1989-90 prices

2015-16	2,350	1,125

The figures illustrating the effect of the proposals in "The Way Ahead" show the gross effect on expenditure. The net effect on social security spending will be less because of offsetting changes in invalidity allowance and income-related benefits.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the reduction in national insurance contributions consequent on the proposed abolition of additional component to invalidity pension; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The level of contributions depends on the overall demands on the national insurance fund. The expenditure implications of the proposed change in invalidity benefit will be taken into account in determining future levels of contributions.

Disability Employment Credit

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what account will be taken of other income in calculating entitlement to the proposed disability employment credit; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what account will be taken of the income of a spouse in calculating entitlement to the proposed disability employment credit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The precise details of the new disability employment credit are still to be considered.

Community Care Grants

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications for community care grants were (a) met in full, (b) met in part, (c) dealt with by awarding a part-grant and part-loan, (d) dealt with by awarding a loan only and (e) refused for each month since January 1989.

Mr. Scott: Details of the numbers of community care grant applications, decisions, awards made and percentage refused are in the Library. The other information requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Crisis Loans

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of income support claimants (a) were repaying a budgeting crisis loan from their benefit, (b) were repaying a budgeting crisis loan at 10 per cent. or more of their benefit and (c) were repaying a crisis loan at 15 per cent. or more of their benefit for each month since January 1989.

Mr. Scott: The number of loans being repaid on the last day of each month expressed as a percentage of national income support caseload is shown in the table. Information regarding the percentage rate at which loans were being repaid by individual applicants is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Overseas Pensioners

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what arrangements are made by his Department to pay pensions to overseas beneficiaries; what number of contracts exists for payment of United Kingdom pensioners resident overseas; what schemes have been contracted out; and how many countries are used for paying United Kingdom pensioners resident overseas.

Mr. Scott: There are approximately 530,000 British pensioners living overseas and the majority of these—some 400,000—are paid by direct payment into the pensioners' bank accounts. Under the terms of the social security convention between the United Kingdom and New Zealand the Department of Social Welfare there pays some 30,000 British pensioners on our behalf from funds transferred monthly to them for the purpose. The remaining pensioners are paid by means of sterling payable orders sent by post.

The contract for handling this post was awarded last year to DHL International (UK) Ltd. following a tendering exercise for which it submitted the lowest bid. The specification for the tender required delivery within a time span comparable with the delivery schedule quoted by Royal Mail, which also tendered. The performance achieved is being monitored. Generally DHL takes mail to various countries abroad and posts it through the domestic mail service there.

Pensions

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the most recent estimates of (a) the number of people contracted out in personal pension schemes and money purchase occupational schemes, respectively, (b) the cost to the national insurance fund of the 2 per cent. inducement under sections 1 and 7, respectively, of the Social Security Act 1986 in each year up to 1990-91, and how much of this cost relates to contributions in respect of each year from 1987-88 onwards and (c) the total cost to the national insurance fund of personal pension schemes and money purchase occupational schemes, respectively, in each year up to 1990-91.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 12 January 1990]: I refer the hon. Member to appendix 7 of the report by the Government Actuary on the drafts of the Social Security Benefits Uprating Order 1990, and the Social Security (Contributions, Re-Rating) Order 1990 (Cm. 948) which was published yesterday. The number of people in contracted-out money purchase schemes is not known. Revenue forgone by the national insurance fund in 1988-89 in respect of personal pensions in 1987-88 was £289 million.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what information he has as to the sex and age distribution of persons contracting out by means of personal pension schemes.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 12 January 1990]: The following information is based on a 1 per cent. sample of personal pension optants at a time when about 1·7 million applications had been processed. It relates to persons who paid some class 1 contributions for the year 1987-88 and who backdated a personal pension for that year. The table relates to the whole of the United Kingdom.

TRANSPORT

Radioactive Material

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list for each of the past 10 years, how many tonnes of radioactive material were (a) imported and (b) exported through the ports of (i) Barrow, (ii) Dover, (iii) Felixstowe, (iv) Harwich, (v) Liverpool (vi) Portsmouth, (vii) Southampton and (viii) Workington; and, in each case, what method of transport was used to convey the material to or from the port.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Department does not collect this information, and it could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list by year for the last 10 years (a) the sources and (b) the destinations, of radioactive material (i) imported and (ii) exported through the port of Immingham-Hull.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Department does not collect this information on a routine basis and it can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will arrange for the publication of the safety requirements of the Channel tunnel design together with the supporting calculations.

Mr. Portillo: I refer my hon. Friend to the answers I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Hyndburn (Mr. Hargreaves) on 15 January, Official Report, column 45, and to my hon. Friend the Member for Hampshire, North-West (Sir D. Mitchell) on 19 December, Official Report, column 195. The general characteristics of the Channel tunnel are specified in the concession agreement (Cmnd 9769). It is for Eurotunnel to prepare detailed designs and submit them for approval by the Channel tunnel intergovernmental commission. On safety matters, the commission is advised by the Channel Tunnel Safety Authority, which has recently published its annual report for 1988-89. I understand that the authority intends to publish further reports in due course. The commission's recent decision on the non-segregation of passengers from their vehicles was accompanied by a number of binding safety requirements.

Light Rapid Transit Systems

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what is the current amount allocated for the development of light rapid transit systems for the financial year 1990-91, excluding London;

(2) what is the amount currently budgeted for allocation for the development of light rapid transit systems for the financial year 1991-92, excluding London.

Mr. Portillo: Total provision of about £50 million in 1990-91 and £40 million in 1991-92 has been made for the Manchester Metrolink project. No decisions have yet been taken on resource allocations for any other light rail schemes outside London.

Tamar Estuary Crossing

Mr. Robert Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends announcing details of the proposed study of a second road crossing of the Tamar estuary as outlined in his May 1989 "Roads for Prosperity" strategy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: I aim to invite tenders this spring from consultants experienced in this kind of study. I shall make an announcement when an appointment has been made.

A27

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to construct a road of motorway standard north of the existing A27 in East Sussex.

Mr. Atkins: We have no present plans to do so but we are putting in place a major study into the need for an east-west strategic route running from Kent to Hampshire within a corridor between the M25 and the south coast.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy not to allow construction to begin on a new roundabout at the junction of the A27 and A26 at Beddingham until such time as a projected route has been announced for the proposed improvements to the A27 between Lewes and Polegate, and a full public consultation period has elapsed.

Mr. Atkins: No. Provision of this roundabout is considered good value for money in the medium term and will not pre-empt consideration of options for improving the A27.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy not to approve a final route for the A27 Folkington link until such time as a projected route has been announced for the proposed improvements to the A27 between Lewes and Polegate, and a full public consultation period has elapsed.

Mr. Atkins: The issue about which the hon. Member is concerned has been raised by others in the context of public consultation on our Folkington link proposals and will be considered before we decide how the matter should be taken forward. An announcement will be made as soon as possible.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will provide details of traffic flows along the A27 between (a) Lewes and Beddingham, (b) Beddingham and Alfriston and (c) Alfriston and Polegate for any of the last 15 years for which figures are available; and if he will indicate the division between HGV and other traffic.

Mr. Atkins: The annual average daily traffic flows for the years 1985 to 1988, for which information is readily available, were as follows. Percentages of heavy goods vehicles are shown in brackets:

Lewes to Beddingham	17,500 (8·3 per cent.)	18,600 (8·3 per cent.)	18,800 (9·7 per cent.)	20,300 (9·6 per cent.)
Beddingham and Alfriston	11,600 (7·5 per cent.)	12,300 (7·4 per cent.)	12,700 (6·6 per cent.)	13,200 (10·3 per cent.)
Alfriston and Polegate	9,400 (9·2 per cent.)	10,000 (9·0 per cent.)	10,200 (7·9 per cent.)	11,000 (7·8 per cent.)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer in the Official Report, 16 January, column 154, what the possible option identified by East Sussex county council involved with regard to (a) the dualling of the present A27 road, (b) the demolition of houses along the A27 and (c) the construction of a flyover.

Mr. Atkins: It is not our policy to release information from scheme identification studies in advance of public consultation. To do so could be misleading and cause unnecessary planning blight for which there might not be a satisfactory recourse under existing legislation.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last corresponded with East Sussex county council in respect of projected improvements to the A27; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: There is regular contact between my Department and East Sussex county council about our four major A27—and seven A259—schemes in addition to a number of other schemes in our regional programme.

Rear Seat Belts

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport in which European Community states the installation of rear seat belts is mandatory; and from what date this took effect in each case.

Mr. Atkins: The table gives the available information on the mandatory fitment of rear seat belts in cars for each European Community member state.

Member state	Rear belt requirement/Date
Belgium	First registered from January 1987
Denmark	First registered from April 1989
France	First registered from October 1978
Federal Republic of Germany	First registered from May 1987
Greece	None
Italy	First registered from April 1990
Ireland	None
Luxembourg	First registered from 1988
Netherlands	First registered from January 1990
Portugal	First registered from January 1992
Spain	First registered from October 1990
United Kingdom	First registered from April 1987

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the effect on the number of fatalities and injuries occurring in the United Kingdom if rear seat belts were worn in all vehicles.

Mr. Atkins: Our latest estimate is that if all rear seat car passengers wore seat belts, some 200 deaths and 9,000 injuries would be prevented each year.

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the current position of draft European Community legislation 9228/88; and when the wearing of rear seat belts will become mandatory.

Mr. Atkins: Member countries have not yet taken a decision on this Commission proposal. In the United Kingdom it is already mandatory for children to wear available rear restraints where appropriate for their use. In the case of adults we have no plans to introduce mandatory wearing before a sufficient proportion of cars has the equipment fitted as standard.

M40 (Widening)

Sir David Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has considered responses to the environmental statement for the widening of the M40 motorway between High Wycombe and Stokenchurch; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: We have carefully considered the responses to the environmental statement issued on 15 September 1989 containing proposals for widening the M40 motorway. The Department has made various changes to the design of the scheme, in particular to take account of the interests of the environment in this attractive area. The improvements will make the best use of established planting and minimise the effects on wildlife. "Cut-off" lighting will be used to avoid unnecessary glare away from the highway. We shall be making full use of our discretionary powers to provide noise insulation for residential properties. The Department is about to invite tenders for the work.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Child Abuse

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has had concerning the proposal by the National Association for Pastoral Care in Education to set up a national standing conference for educational responses to child abuse; and if he will made a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: My right hon. Friend has received no such representations.

Disabled Students' Allowance

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to announce new proposals arising from the review of the disabled students' allowance.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend hopes to announce the outcome of his review of the disabled students' and other supplementary allowances in the spring, in time for any changes in the mandatory awards regulations to take effect from 1 September 1990.

European Parliament Reports

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what has been the response of Her Majesty's Government to resolution A2-327/88 of the European Parliament on genetic engineering known as the Rothley report and resolution A2-372/88 of the European Parliament on artificial insemination known as the Casini report.

Mr. Jackson: The Government have noted these resolutions, but have not responded.

National Curriculum

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he has taken to ensure that there are sufficient teachers to teach the national curriculum; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Cardiff, South and Penarth (Mr. Michael) on 12 December 1989 at column 553.

Medical Research Council

Ms. Primarlo: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to increase the budget allocation to the Medical Research Council for 1990-91.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend announced his decision on the science budget allocations for 1990-91 including that for the Medical Research Council in his answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Hexham (Mr. Amos) on 10 January at columns 623-24.

Teachers' Pay

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what guidance is given by his Department as to supply teachers' salaries; whether local education authorities are required to pay supply teachers additional increments in accordance with years of service; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Teachers employed on short-notice contracts are paid for the duration of each contract at the rate the LEA considers appropriate in the light of local needs and circumstances. In circular 12/89 the Department drew local education authorities' attention to the interim advisory committee's views on the dangers of setting a standard low point on the main scale and endorsed the suggestion of the IAC that such teachers should always be offered the opportunity of being involved in other duties as well as teaching pupils.

Learning Difficulties

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many letters he has received from parents of children with special learning difficulties, including dyslexia, on the issue of assessment and provision of statements under the Education Acts; and how many of these were in respect of children in Essex.

Mr. Alan Howarth: I regret that it is not possible to identify this information from the Department's records.

Alpha-rated Research

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what would have been the extra money required by each research council to have funded all the alpha-rated research projects in the financial year 1988-89; and how much money was spent by each research council on alpha-rated projects in that financial year.

Mr. Jackson: The additional amounts that would have been required to fund all alpha-rated research grant applications in the academic year 1988-89 were as follows:

	£ million
Agricultural and Food Research Council	0·3
Medical Research Council	17·9
Natural Environment Research Council	0·7
Science and Engineering Research Council	63·6
Economic and Social Research Council	5·0
	87·5

In the 1988-89 financial year the councils' spend on alpha-rated research projects was as follows:

	£ million
Agricultural and Food Research Council	9·1
Medical Research Council	44·5
Natural Environment Research Council	4·6
Science and Engineering Research Council	123·0
Economic and Social Research Council	4·3

Student Loans Company

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what progress has been made in acquiring premises for the Student Loans Company, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor [pursuant to his reply, 22 November 1989, column 5]: The Student Loans Company Limited has reached agreement with landlords on the terms of a lease on premises at 100 Bothwell street in Glasgow. I have been requested by the landlords to guarantee the company's obligations under that lease. I have considered the lease and the terms of the guarantee requested. I have concluded that I should give such a guarantee in accordance with the departmental minute laid before Parliament on 22 November 1989 and have indicated to the Student Loans Company that I will do so.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when the decision will be taken on the exact location in Glasgow of the headquarters for the Student Loans Company; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: I refer the hon. Member to the pursuant reply that my right hon. Friend gave today to my hon. Friend the Member for Richmond and Barnes (Mr. Hanley). The headquarters of the Student Loans Company Limited will be at 100 Bothwell street, Glasgow.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Social Security

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Attorney-General how many cases were heard by the social security commissioners in the last year for which statistics were available; how long on average each hearing took; and on what number of occasions the Department of Social Security and the appellant, respectively, was legally represented.

The Attorney-General: A total of 442 cases were heard by the social security commissioners in 1989. On average, each hearing took 2·25 hours. Statistics on the representation of parties are not kept.

Legal Aid

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Attorney-General what arrangements will be made to obtain evidence and advice from the solicitors' profession on legal aid, for the purposes of the review of the financial conditions for legal aid announced on 13 November 1989.

The Attorney-General: The solicitors' profession will be consulted as appropriate for information and for its views.

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Attorney-General (1) what is his estimate of the percentage of the population now potentially eligible on income grounds for legal aid for non-matrimonial cases; what was the equivalent figure obtaining in 1979 and each successive year; and whether he will place a summary of relevant calculations of the data used in the Library;

(2) what progress has been made in the study of family expenditure survey data and the conclusions to be drawn from it in relation to eligibility for legal aid since his answer of 20 March 1989, Official Report, column 449.

The Attorney-General: Estimates indicate that at present about 56 per cent. of the population is eligible on income grounds alone for civil legal aid in non-matrimonial cases. This estimate does not take account of the improvements announced on 13 November 1989, Official Report, column 3, which will be introduced in April. It was based on data obtained from the family expenditure survey—in relation to income for each household type and deductions for housing costs, tax and national insurance payments and allowances for dependants—grossed up and uprated to current level equivalents through a computer model. Such calculations cannot be made for earlier years except at disproportionate cost.

Legal Advice and Assistance

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Attorney-General whether he will take immediate steps substantially to increase the capital limit of £890 which applies to the legal advice and assistance green form scheme.

The Attorney-General: The capital limit for a single person for legal advice and assistance will be increased to £935 in April.

ENERGY

Nuclear Electricity

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the chairman of Nuclear Electric; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Baldry: My hon. Friend has met the chairman of Nuclear Electric on a number of occasions to discuss aspects of the nuclear industry.

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will set out those guarantees which were sought by the private sector in regard to nuclear stations in the negotiations over electricity privatisation.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) on 14 November 1989 at column 139.

Mr. Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what steps he is taking to ensure that the operational expertise of the electricity supply industry in running its nuclear plants will be retained when the non-nuclear sector of the industry is privatised.

Mr. Baldry: Nuclear Electric will inherit all the CEGB's nuclear-related assets, expertise and support, including its expertise in health and safety. The chairman of Nuclear Electric has stated that safety is a paramount priority of Nuclear Electric.

Sellafield

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what payments have been made by his Department to British Nuclear Fuels plc over the past five years in regard to post-operational decommissioning work on facilities at Sellafield used to carry out contracts for his Department; what proportion of the work required arose from the pre-1971 period when Sellafield was operated by the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority; and over what period of time negotiations were entered into over the payments for the work.

Mr. Baldry: None. My Department has no liabilities to British Nuclear Fuels plc for decommissioning.

"Energy Policy in the Greenhouse"

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make it his policy to obtain a copy of the recently published study "Energy Policy in the Greenhouse" prepared by the international project for sustainable energy paths.

Mr. Wakeham: My Department already holds a copy of this study.

Waste Tips

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he will make it his policy to promote methane extraction for useful energy generation of all controlled waste tips of over 1 million cu m of refuse;

(2) what is the most up-to-date estimate available to him of the minimum size, measured by cubic metres, of controlled household refuse tips, to sustain viable commercial methane extraction.

Mr. Peter Morrison: As I explained to the hon. Member in answer to his question of 18 January, my Department has a substantial programme to promote exploitation of methane from landfill sites. This work is not limited to sites with more than 1 million cu m of waste capacity. Landfill gas exploitation is being encouraged at all landfill sites containing a large proportion of biodegradable refuse providing such exploitation can be shown to be economic.

The minimum size of landfill sites for viable commercial methane extraction does not depend on volume alone. Factors such as locality of potential users are also important. For example, a small-scale greenhouse scheme could be supported by a site of only a few thousand cubic metres in volume. Hence, it would not be appropriate to suggest a minimum value, in terms of cubic metres of refuse on a landfill site, to sustain a viable extraction project.

Subsidence (Compensation)

Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Scretary of State for Energy when he expects to receive British Coal's second annual report on its administration of the system for subsidence compensation and repair.

Mr. Baldry: I have today placed copies of this report in the Libraries of both Houses.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list for each local authority district the number of outstanding subsidence claims lodged with British Coal.

Mr. Wakeham: British Coal has no operational need to compile details of subsidence damage claims on a district council basis. Details of claims broken down by British Coal area are contained in British Coal's annual report to the Secretary of State for Energy. As my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary announced today in reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Sherwood (Mr. Stewart), copies of the most recent report were today placed in the Libraries of both Houses. The provision of further information is a matter for British Coal.

Opencast Mining

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he will list proposals for opencast working made by the Opencast Executive of British Coal to the appropriate planning authorities, giving the name, location and proposed capacity in each case'

(2) if he will list the applications for licences to operate opencast mines presently being considered by British Coal, giving the name, location and capacity in each case;

(3) if he will list the names, locations and capacities of each opencast mine being operated by the Opencast Executive of British Coal;

(4) if he will list the names, locations and capacities of each opencast mine being operated by a private company under licence from British Coal;

(5) on how many occasions in each of the past 10 years British Coal has withheld repayment of a bond it held from licensed opencast operators; and what were the reasons in each case.

Mr. Wakeham: These are matters for the British Coal Corporation, and I have asked the chairman to reply to the hon. Member.

Fuel Exports and Imports

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will now provide the information given in his answers of 9 November 1989, Official Report, column 767, 19 December 1989, Official Report, columns 118-19 and 12 January, Official Report, columns 768-69, relating to fuel exports and imports at 1990 constant prices.

Mr. Wakeham: I regret that the information requested (on the basis of 1990 constant prices) is not available. The procedure used to provide figures at 1985 constant prices in the previous answers referred to in the question was to apply the 1985 unit value for exports and imports to the relevant volumes for the years concerned. The equivalent export and import unit value figures for the whole of 1990 will not be available until February 1991 at the earliest.

Nuclear Power (Overseas Production)

Mr. Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the examples of economic production of nuclear power abroad, referred to in his statement of 9 November 1989, Official Report, column 1182; and what information he possesses on how the cost of such nuclear electricity is calculated in each case.

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. Friend's remarks were informed by the IEA/NEA study "Projected costs of generating electricity from power stations for commissioning in the period 1995-2000", which gives information on the economics of nuclear power in a number of countries. The study will be published shortly.

PRIME MINISTER

Cults

Mr. Speller: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's mechanisms for the monitoring of cults in the United Kingdom.

The Prime Minister: The Government are aware of the distress that can be caused to individuals and families as a result of involvement with certain cults, particularly where young people are concerned. Provided these groups operate within the law, however, it would not be right, in the Government's view, for us to place restraints on freedom of expression or freedom of religion and belief. Any evidence of illegal activities should be referred to the police who will take appropriate action.

The Government believe that the best way of dealing with these cults is through public exposure of their true nature. For this reason the Home Office has been providing start-up funding since October 1987 over three years for INFORM—Information Network Focus on Religious Movements. Its work is supported by the major churches. Under the terms of its grant, INFORM is required to produce a report annually on its activities. The report for the calendar year 1988 was received in May 1989, and the report for 1989 is expected in due course.

Student Loans

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to discuss the future of the scheme for student loans with the chairman of Barclays bank.

The Prime Minister: No.

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Prime Minister if she will dismiss the Secretary of State for Education and Science for his conduct in relation to the banks' decision to pull out of the student loan scheme; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: No. I was very disappointed that the banks decided to react to external pressure and withdrew from the memorandum of understanding with the Government to administer the student loans scheme. It is the students themselves who will now not have the benefit of access to the banks' branch networks to obtain the loans. But the banks' withdrawal does not affect in any way the objectives, principles or funding of the scheme. Preparatory work is well in hand.

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Prime Minister if the Government have any plans to take fiscal or other action against those banks which pulled out of the Government scheme for student loans; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The Government have expressed strong disappointment at the banks' withdrawal from the memorandum of understanding: at no stage has there been any question of action against the banks.

Hong Kong (Ivory Stocks)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister for what reasons responsibility for the Hong Kong ivory stock rests with the Foreign and Commonwealth office.

The Prime Minister: Matters related to the CITES Convention are the prime responsibility of the Department of the Environment. The Foreign and Commonwealth Office is responsible for questions arising from the administration of Hong Kong as a dependent territory.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Footwear

Mr. Fry: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he intends to take to reduce the current imbalance of tariff and non-tariff barriers in footwear trade with (a) Thailand, (b) Brazil, (c) Australia, (d) India and (e) Japan.

Mr. Redwood: We and our Community partners fully support the objectives of the Uruguary round of multilateral trade negotiations in GATT, which include the specific aim of reduction or elimination by all participants of high tariffs and non-tariff measures.

The European Commission negotiates for the Community in GATT. It has details of all the concerns expressed to us by the United Kingdom footwear industry, and these will be carefully taken into account in formulating the Community's position in these negotiations.

Trade Surplus

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish in the Official Report, a table showing in dollars for each year since 1985, and for 1989 to the latest available date at an annual rate, the trade surplus in manufactures and the balance of payments surplus for Japan, Germany, the United States of America and the United Kingdom with the world, the EEC and the United Kingdom.

Mr. Redwood: The available information is in the tables. Care should be exercised in comparing trade balances in manufactures with current account balances because of inconsistencies in valuation. The figures for 1989 relate to the periods shown because annualised figures can be unreliable as a guide to the outturn for the year.

Accounting

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) whether he has asked the accountancy profession to develop any standard on price level accountancy;

(2) whether he has any plans to introduce a system of current value accounting for company accounts.

Mr. Redwood: The Government support the new accounting standards arrangements recommended by the Dearing committee in 1988, including the creation of a Financial Reporting Council and an Accounting Standards Board. In determining the work programme of the board, the council will no doubt take note of the existing commitment of the Accounting Standards Committee to explore effective means of developing a standard on accounting for the effects of changing prices.

Accountancy Firms

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will make it his policy not to appoint inspectors from firms of accountants which have been criticised in inspectors' reports.

Mr. Redwood: No. My right hon. Friend will continue to appoint competent inspectors.

Export Services

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will supply figures for spending by his Department on export services, in constant prices, for each year since 1979.

Mr. Redwood: The following figures show gross and net expenditure by the Department on export services in constant price terms:

£ million (1979-80 prices)

Year	Gross expenditure	Net expenditure
1979-80	25·7	21·2
1980-81	19·5	15·8
1981-82	19·4	15·4
1982-83	21·0	16·6
1983-84	20·8	15·5
1984-85	[1]24·6	[1]18·8
1985-86	[2]24·6	[2]17·4
1986-87	24·6	15·5
1987-88	[3]23·4	[3]14·7
1988-89	[4]25·4	[4]16·6

[1] Expenditure on publicity and promotion was transferred from the COI budget with effect from 1984-85. On a constant price basis, the expenditure amounted to £1·4 million in 1984-85.

[2] Export Intelligence Service revenue was transferred to the exports budget from another DTI budget with effect from 1985-86. On a constant price basis this reduced net expenditure by £0·3 million in 1985-86.

[3] Includes expenditure on publications for the then Statistics and Market Intelligence Library previously treated as part of general library expenditure (value £0·2 million on a constant price basis).

[4] Figures for 1988-89 include grant-in-aid to the International Customs Tariff Bureau (value £0·038 million on a constant price basis), and the "New Products from Britain" service transferred from the FCO in the second half of the year (value £0·2 million on a constant price basis).

All figures have been converted using the implied GDP factor cost deflator.

Car Exports

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has received assurances from each member state of the EEC that they will permit the import, without restriction, of cars produced in the United Kingdom by firms in Japanese ownership; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: The European Commission received an assurance from the French Government in April last year that cars produced in Sunderland by Nissan Motor Manufacturing UK Ltd. would be allowed to enter France without restriction and quite independently of the level of car imports into France from Japan.

No member state currently restricts in any way the import of cars produced in the United Kingdom.

The Commission has suggested that, during the transitional period over which it envisages that existing restrictions on imports of cars from Japan should be phased out, it may be necessary to take into account in some way the production of cars by Japanese-owned firms in the EC. The Government have made it clear that there is no question of the United Kingdom accepting any arrangement in which cars produced by Japanese-owned firms in the United Kingdom, or anywhere other than Japan, count towards ceilings on imports from Japan.

Japanese Car Imports

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the purpose of the voluntary restraint arrangement which limits Japanese car imports to 10·8 per cent. of the United Kingdom market; when it was introduced; and if he will now take steps to remove it.

Mr. Ridley: The voluntary restraint arrangement on imports of cars from Japan came into operation in 1975 following discussions between the vehicle industries of the United Kingdom and Japan.

The Government will consider the future of the arrangement within the context of Community-wide moves toward liberalisation of the European car market.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what restrictions are imposed on the import of Japanese cars by each member of the EEC; and if the EEC has any plans to remove these restrictions.

Mr. Ridley: In addition to the United Kingdom industry's arrangement, France has an unofficial limit on Japanese penetration of the market. There are formal quotas in Italy, Portugal and Spain. Although the Commission has not yet put forward detailed proposals, it envisages that restrictions should be phased out progressively over a transitional period which would extend beyond 1992.

Financial Services

Mr. Grylls: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the directives on financial services which have been issued by the European Communities in the last year and the directives that are still required to be issued during the next six months to achieve a fair competitive environment in such services in the member countries.

Mr. Redwood: The second banking co-ordination directive, the solvency ratios directive, the own funds directive, the insider dealing directive, the bank branches directive and the prospectus directive have been adopted by the Council of Ministers in the last year.

The investment services directive, the life insurance services directive, the directive on the annual accounts of insurance undertakings, the motor insurance services directive, the third motor insurance directive and the mutual recognition directive (of stock exchange listing particulars) might be adopted by the end of 1990. The Commission has indicated its intention to submit to the Council of Ministers during 1990 texts of a capital adequacy directive for investment business, a non-life insurance framework directive and of a life insurance framework directive.

Adoption by Council of these further directives would represent important progress towards completion of the single market through a fair competitive environment in financial services. The investment services and insurance directives are especially important to British businesses wanting to do business on the continent of Europe.

Environmental Technology

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans to meet the Ministers for Planning and the Environment of the Soviet Union to discuss opportunities for the sale of environmental clean-up and pollution abatement technology developed in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 19 January 1990]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is planning to visit the Soviet Union in the near future and will discuss all the main commercial opportunities available with Soviet Ministers during his visit.

Consumer Protection

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has indicating the percentage of the population supporting a change in legislation to strengthen consumer protection.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 19 January 1990]: No such information is available.

Consumer Guarantees

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many representations he has received from bodies opposed to the definition of a consumer guarantee in legislation; and how many of these bodies did not give evidence on the subject to the National Consumer Council.

Mr. Forth: A formal public consultation exercise has not been undertaken, but, following publication of the National Consumer Council report "The Consumer Guarantee", representations have been made both for and against the proposed overall approach and on various detailed aspects. It would be inappropriate to quantify the bodies involved in the same way as it would be to name them, since their views have been expressed in confidence.

Juno Project

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will outline progress in raising funds for the Juno project; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 19 January 1990:] The Juno project is being financed entirely by the private sector. While I wish it every success, Her Majesty's Government are not a sponsor and the hon. Member will need to seek the information he wishes from the project organisers.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Brazilian Rain Forests

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the visit to Brazil of Dr. Synott of the Oxford Forestry

Institute in November/December 1989, to discuss details of projects in sustainable forestry management and genetic resources of forests; and when such projects are likely to begin.

Mrs. Chalker: During this visit a number of possible projects were discussed with Brazilian institutions. These included the Tapajos forest management project, a tropical forest research project, a project to assist biological research in the Ducke reserve and a Varzea (floodplain forest) management study. Project proposals are currently being prepared for ODA consideration which will need to be cleared with the Brazilian Government. Implementation of these projects could begin in the second quarter of this year. Proposals for further projects are awaited from Brazil.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether work has begun on the joint five-year project by Brazilian scientific institutions and the Institute of Hydrology to improve knowledge of the critical effect of rainforests on climate; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: We have submitted a detailed proposal for this project to the Brazilian Government for their agreement. While we understand that the proposal is generally acceptable to the Government, we still await confirmation of their agreement to proceed. We hope to receive this within the next few weeks, in time to allow the participating institutions to start the first field season in July as planned.

Cambodia

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the recent visit to Cambodia by officials of the Overseas Development Administration.

Mrs. Chalker: During their visit to Cambodia officials identified a number of areas for potential ODA support, in co-operation with British non-governmental organisations and multilateral agencies. These included priority sectors such as food production, primary education and health care. There are also increasing opportunities for NGOs to extend their activities beyond Phnom Penh into the provinces. Severe skill shortages among Cambodians could be alleviated by the provision of volunteer experts (VSO) and by appropriate technical training. The ODA is actively discussing possible projects with the NGOs. In addition, as I announced in answer to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, East (Mr. Strang) on 8 January, I am making available a further £1 million to multilateral agencies for their programmes inside Cambodia in 1990-91.

Ethiopia

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the latest situation on the famine in Ethiopia; and what steps the Government have taken to alleviate starvation.

Mrs. Chalker: The international relief effort continues to be hampered by the civil conflict in northern Ethiopia. The most pressing need is to secure free access for relief supplies across the battle lines. We have been active in recent diplomatic efforts to try and secure this. It was reported on 18 January that agreement had been reached between the Ethiopian Government and the joint relief partnership of local church organisations on the necessary arrangements, but further details are awaited. We are meanwhile continuing to provide food and other emergency aid via British non-governmental organisations. The total value of our food and emergency aid in 1989 was nearly £18·5 million, including our share of the cost of assistance provided by the European Community.

Aid

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the proportion of gross national product given in aid by British Governments to developing countries, excluding commercial aid packages, in 1975, 1978, 1983, 1985 and 1989.

Mrs. Chalker: The aid and trade provision has been an integral part of Britain's aid programme since its inception. However, excluding aid reported to the development assistance committee of the OECD under the heading "Grants and Loans included in Associated Financing Packages", the figures are:

	per cent.
1975	[1]0·35
1978	0·45
1983	0·33
1985	0·31

[1] No associated financing was reported in 1975. The figure for 1989 is not yet available.

Britain's bilateral aid programme finances sound development projects and programmes of benefit to the recipient country. The bulk of it is tied to the procurement of British goods and services.

Forestry

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what visits he plans to make in order to evaluate the effectiveness of Britain's support for sustainable forestry projects.

Mrs. Chalker: I plan to visit East Africa and India in the spring. I expect to discuss our ongoing and planned forestry assistance during both these visits. The subject will also be covered during other visits later in the year.

WALES

Uniform Business Rate

14. Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the overall expected change in rateable values in Wales as a result of the publication of the provisional list of revised valuations for the uniform business rate.

Mr. Peter Walker: Rateable value of business properties in Wales have increased by a factor of 8·4 overall.

Mr. Coleman: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received regarding the operation of the uniform business rate in Wales and its effect upon small business.

Mr. Peter Walker: I have received a number of representations.

Rechem

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a further statement on the arrangements for the incineration of toxic waste at the Rechem plant.

Mr. Grist: My right hon. Friend has been assured by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution that the plant is operating to current requirements.

Welsh Language Board

19. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what reponse he has made to the proposals of the Welsh Language Board for a new Welsh Language Act.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend is considering the proposals.

River Pollution

20. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received from bodies concerned about river pollution in (a) Clwyd and (b) Wales.

Mr. Grist: We have received a number of representations from organisations through Wales.

Health Authorities

21. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he next plans to meet the chairmen of the health authorities; and what matters he proposes to discuss.

Mr. Grist: The date and agenda for the next meeting have not yet been agreed.

Ambulance Service

22. Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he last met representatives of the ambulance services in Wales; and when he plans to meet them again.

Mr. Grist: My right hon. Friend met a group of ambulance men during a visit to Merthyr on 7 November, while I talked to members of the Clwyd service in December. There are no plans for any further meetings.

Water Privatisation

23. Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of the shares in the recently privatised Welsh Water share flotation was allocated to applicants resident in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: I refer the right hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley) on Tuesday 19 December.

Ronald Greedy

25. Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about the decision to transfer Ronald Greedy to Whitchurch hospital, the basis on which he was accommodated, the physical security arrangements and his subsequent escape.

Mr. Grist: My officials have already instituted inquiries of the district health authority into the discharge of the conditions which attached to Mr. Greedy's transfer to Whitchurch hospital. I shall write to my hon. Friend when I have considered its advice.

Batteries and Accumulators

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what steps his Department has taken to promote research aimed a reducing the dangerous substance content and increasing the use of less-polluting substitute substances in batteries and accumulators, and into methods of recycling;

(2) what steps his Department has taken to reduce the volume of spent batteries and accumulators in household waste.

Mr. Grist: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the replies given to him by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Industry and Consumer Affairs on Friday 19 January, at column 444.

North Wales Initiative

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what factors changed during the previous six months which led him to announce his new north Wales initiative in early December.

Mr. Peter Walker: I announced in the Welsh Grand Committee in December 1988 that I had asked the Minister of State to discuss with local authorities and other bodies in north Wales how the opportunities presented by the upgrading of the A55 could best be grasped. These discussions resulted in the document "A55 —The Road of Opportunity" which sets out the developments which will take place in the next few years and indicates the decisions and activities required to maximise the potential brought by the road. As I said to the hon. Gentleman in my answer on 26 May a formal initiative for north Wales is unnecessary as existing mechanisms are adequate to allow continued improvement.

National Museum of Wales

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will publish in the Official Report the attendance figures for 1989 reported by the National Museum of Wales, including its outstations, with the percentage increase or decrease on the attendance figures for 1988.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: A total of 482,080 people visited the National Museum of Wales during 1989—42 per cent. fewer than the attendance reported for 1988. The difference is largely accounted for by the lower recorded numbers at the main Cathays park museum and, in this connection, I draw the hon. Gentleman's attention to my right hon. Friend's reply to the hon. Members for Pontypridd (Dr. Howells) and for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on 6 November 1989. The transfer of responsibility for the former national museum outstation, Yr Hen Gapel, Tre'r Ddol, from 1 January 1989 has also affected the totals.

Local Government

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many persons are employed in Welsh local government and what were the corresponding figures for 1970 and 1980.

Mr. Peter Walker: The numbers of persons employed in Welsh local government in 1980 and 1989 are shown in the table. Corresponding information is not available for 1970.

Number of employees as at September

	1980	[1]1989
Full-time	107,135	99,108
Part-time	46,646	55,670
Total full-time equivalents	126,100	121,753

[1] Provisional.

Out-patient Clinics

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what number of patients in each county in Wales had to travel distances of (a) over 10 miles, (b) over 20 miles and (c) over 30 miles in order to attend hospital out-patient clinics in 1988 and 1989;

(2) what percentage of patients in each county in Wales had to travel distances of (a) over 10 miles, (b) over 20 miles and (c) over 30 miles in order to attend hospital out-patient clinics in 1988 and 1989.

Mr. Grist: The information is not available centrally.

Chernobyl

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) holdings and (b) sheep, remain subject to post-Chernobyl movements and sale restrictions in north Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: Approximately 416 holdings and 300,000 sheep.

Radiation Monitoring

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) whether his Department has received any correspondence from the Friends of the Earth's radiation monitoring unit about post-Chernobyl contamination in north Wales; and if he will make a statement.

(2) whether his Department will review its sheep monitoring programme in the derestricted area between Bala and Lake Vyrnwy.

Mr. Grist: No correspondence has been received by the Department from the Friends of the Earth's radiation monitoring unit about its recent report about post-Chernobyl contamination in north Wales.

The area between Bala and Lake Vyrnwy referred to in the report was derestricted in 1986 and monitoring then and subsequently has shown that radiation levels in sheep are well within the action level of 1,000 bq/kg.

Llanelli General Hospital

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when the new Llanelli general hospital will open.

Mr. Grist: East Dyfed health authority advises that, on current programming expectations, the new Llanelli hospital should be open for out-patients at the end of February 1990 and for in-patients towards the end of April 1990.

Family Practitioner Committees

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the general managers of family practitioners committees, their qualifications and their date of appointment.

Mr. Grist: All eight family practitioner committees have now appointed general managers. The table indicates the dates on which appointments were or are to be taken up.

Family Practitioner Committee	General Manager	Date of Appointment
Gwent	Mr. H. T. Watkins	10 November 1989
Gwynedd	Mr. R. A. Thomas	10 November 1989
Mid Glamorgan	Mr. M. V. Jenkins	1 January 1990
Powys	Mr. R. G. T. Phillips	10 November 1989
South Glamorgan	Mr. B. A. Ruddy	10 November 1989
West Glamorgan	Mr. G. Plunkett	1 December 1989
Clwyd	Mr. C. N. Last	1 May 1990
Dyfed	Mr. J. P. French	1 May 1990

Information about the academic, professional or other qualifications of individual general managers is a matter for each family practitioner committee as the employing body.

Wages Councils

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he proposes to meet the statutory wages councils to discuss the rates of pay set for categories of workers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: No. Statutory wages councils are the responsibility of my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Employment.

Cerebral Palsy

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what research he has commissioned to investigate the causes of cerebral palsy.

Mr. Grist: None, but results of research funded by the Department of Health are available to Wales.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps his Department is taking to monitor trends in cerebral palsy.

Mr. Grist: The Welsh Office does not maintain a central statistical record of the incidence of this condition.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the number of children born in Wales, in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available, who have been diagnosed as having cerebral palsy.

Mr. Grist: Cerebral palsy is not necessarily diagnosed at birth, so information on the number of children born in Wales each year and diagnosed with this condition is not available centrally.

Supply Teachers

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has received any representations from teachers in West Glamorgan about the county council's policy of reducing the salary of supply teachers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Representations have been received from the West Glamorgan supply teachers' association. The pay of supply teachers is a matter for local education authorities to decide in the light of local circumstances and within the guidelines we have issued. LEAs have discretion to pay supply teachers at any point on the main scale provided that it is no lower than the minimum entitlement appropriate to the teachers' qualifications.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Ulster Museum

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will publish in the Official Report the attendance figures for 1989 reported by the Ulster museum, including its outstations, with the percentage increase or decrease on the attendance figures for 1988.

Dr. Mawhinney: In 1989 a total of 270,100 people visited the Ulster museum and the Armagh county museum—a decrease of 24 per cent. on the attendance figure for 1988.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Electoral Registration

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to amend the electoral registration form A so that persons registering can indicate if they are willing for the information to be available for sale by the registering authority.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No. I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 15 January at column 27.

Replica Firearms

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will ban the advertising, importation and sale of replica firearms in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The sale in England and Wales of any replica gun which can be readily converted to fire live ammunition is, under the Firearms Act 1982, subject to the same stringent controls as those imposed on actual firearms by the Firearms Acts 1968 and 1988. In addition, it is already an offence to use an imitation firearm to commit a crime or resist arrest the maximum penalty for which is life imprisonment.

Advertising on independent television and radio is, under the Broadcasting Act 1981, the responsibility of the Independent Broadcasting Authority. The authority has a duty to draw up and maintain a code of advertising standards and practice, and from time to time to consult me about the kind of advertisements which must not be broadcast. My right hon. and learned Friend has no power to take such a decision unilaterally. However the policy of independent television and radio companies is not to accept advertising for firearms whether replica or otherwise. Advertising in other media is a matter for the Advertising Standards Authority.

The importation of imitation firearms is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry.

We have no plans to introduce further controls on the sale of replica firearms in England and Wales.

Responsibility for firearms legislation elsewhere in the United Kingdom rests with my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and Northern Ireland.

Football Safety

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department further to his answer of 14 December, Official Report, column 789, to the hon. Member for Leeds, Central, when he now expects to write with further details about the Middlesbrough-Leeds United game on Sunday 9 December, and whether the reply will refer to any safety agreement between Middlesbrough football club and Cleveland police.

Mr. John Patten: I hope to be able to write to the hon. Member within the next few days. I do not think that I can usefully comment in advance on what the letter will say.

Birmingham Pub Bombings

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the earliest date after which the men convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings will be eligible for parole.

Mr. Mellor: Life sentence prisoners are not eligible for parole, but may be released on life licence at the discretion of the Home Secretary if this is recommended by the Parole Board. In accordance with our policy that no life sentence prisoner should be detained for more than 17 years without an independent review, consideration of these cases will begin in November 1991. However, such a review does not necessarily mean that the board will recommend release or that my right hon. and learned Friend would accept such a recommendation if it were made.

Mr. John Stalker

Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will institute an independent judicial inquiry, with full powers to compel witnesses to attend and give evidence, into the circumstances surrounding those matters concerning Mr. John Stalker, the former deputy chief constable of the Greater Manchester police, and Mr. Kevin Taylor, and into the wider implications of those matters.

Mr. Waddington: I see no grounds for instituting a judicial inquiry into matters relating to Mr. John Stalker or Mr. Kevin Taylor as a result of the failure of the recent prosecution of Mr. Taylor. It will be for the chief constable of Greater Manchester to consider whether the proceedings indicate any misconduct on the part of officers of his force and if so to institute appropriate disciplinary or criminal investigation.

Video Surveillance

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to change the regulations governing video surveillance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: We have no plans, at present, to change the guidelines on the use of equipment in police surveillance operations. Our information is that the guidelines work well and that the police service accept that they provide a clear statement of operational policy, with strict safeguards for the public. In the absence of evidence of abuse of the use of video surveillance, we have no plans to introduce regulations governing its general use.

Concessionary Television Licences

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received about concessionary television licences for retirement pensioners.

Mr. Mellor: In 1989 we received 212 letters and four petitions calling for reduced price or free television licences for pensioners. One hundred and one of the letters were from hon. Members and three of the petitions were submitted through them.

Efficiency Scrutiny

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he hopes to publish the efficiency scrutiny into Government funding for the voluntary sector.

Mr. John Patten: The question of publication is at present under consideration.

Crime and Compensation

Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average length of time between a crime and compensation being paid to the victim; and how many cases remain to be resolved as at 31 December 1989.

Mr. John Patten: On 31 December 1989, a total of 96,177 cases were awaiting resolution by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board. The board does not keep information on the interval between the dates of an incident and the application for compensation. Information about the proportion of cases resolved within certain times of application is given in the board's latest annual report (Cm. 900).

Entry Clearance

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) spouses and (b) children were awaiting entry clearance as at 30 November 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is available only for the Indian sub-continent, where 5,800 spouses and 4,300 children were awaiting a decision on their application for entry clearance for settlement in the United Kingdom at 30 November 1989.

Drugs

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of seizures of illicit drugs occurs at British ports of entry.

Mr. Mellor: Seizures at ports and airports from persons, luggage, private vehicles and freight, and from ships and aircraft, represented about 7 per cent. of a total of 38,235 seizures of controlled drugs in the United Kingdom in 1988. Such seizures are, however, often of large amounts: in 1988, port seizures accounted by weight for 76 per cent. of the cocaine, 55 per cent. of the heroin, 12 per cent. of the amphetamines and 87 per cent. of the cannabis seized in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the ports of arrival in Britain and state (a) the street value, (b) amount and (c) type of each drug seized in every month for 1989.

Mr. Ryder: I have been asked to reply.

I regret that this information is not readily available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Juvenile Crime

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from magistrates concerning juvenile crime; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: In the past 12 months the Magistrates Association and individual magistrates have made representations about various matters relating to juvenile crime and juvenile offenders. These include parental responsibility, cautioning, remands, suspended custodial sentences, custodial sentences for girls and the jurisdiction of the juvenile court.

Computer Crime

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he has taken to ensure that regional police forces have adequate resources to deal with computer crime.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The allocation of resources to particular forms of crime is an operational matter for chief officers. However, over the last 10 years we have approved 6,800 additional police officer posts for provincial police forces.

Sunday Trading

Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a further statement on the Government's plans for legislation on Sunday trading in the light of recent representations from the public and retail trade.

Mr. Mellor: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Bolton, North-East (Mr. Thurnham) on 17 January 1990 at column 266.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received regarding the recent higher than average increases in crime statistics in (a) South Yorkshire and (b) Barnsley.

Mr. John Patten: Two hon. Members have recently tabled questions on aspects of crime in South Yorkshire. The Department has received many other representations about crime levels. Some of these relate to crime in particular areas, including South Yorkshire.

Video Recordings Act

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he collects on the number of (a) prosecutions and (b) convictions, for contravention of the Video Recordings Act.

Mr. Mellor: Information is collected from the police on all defendants proceeded against under the Video Recordings Act 1984 and the result of these prosecutions. In 1988, 27 defendants were prosecuted under the Act and 17 convicted. Information for 1989 will not be available until autumn 1990.

DNA Testing

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when it is proposed to start the DNA testing scheme for applicants for settlement in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, Central (Mr. Darling) on 27 November at column 108.

Prisons (New Technology)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the prisons in England and Wales that have and use a fax machine or a computer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: All prisons in England and Wales have computers and 77 also have fax facilities. The prison service aims to improve IT support for the achievement of its objectives.

Mail Bags

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which prisons in England and Wales still have inmates working on the sewing of mail bags; and how many inmates were doing this work on 5 January.

Mr. Mellor: On 5 January 1990 there were 715 inmates employed in the manufacture of mail bags, in the following establishments.:

Acklington
Birmingham
Bristol
Canterbury
Camp Hill
Gartree
Gloucester
Haverigg
Hull
Lancaster
Leeds
Liverpool
Manchester
Oxford
Preston
Stafford
Swaleside
Swansea
Wandsworth

Prisons (Recruitment and Training)

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will next meet the officers of the Prison Officers Association to discuss recruitment and training.

Mr. Mellor: Recruitment and training were among the wide range of subjects discussed when my right hon. and learned Friend met the chairman and general secretary of the Prison Officers Association on 18 December. These matters also regularly arise when my right hon. and learned Friend and I meet local branches of the POA in the normal course of visiting prisons. Recruitment and training issues are regularly discussed with the POA at official level within Whitley council procedures.

Policing, Newham

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cost of policing the London borough of Newham in 1984-85; and what it is expected to be in the current year.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information is not available on the actual cost of policing individual boroughs. However, the estimated local manpower costs, increased by 30 per cent. to reflect non-manpower and central service costs, suggests a figure of £22·9 million is the cost of policing Newham in the current year. The data to produce a similiar estimate for 1984-85 are not available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Immigration

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what research he has undertaken regarding the consequential numbers of immigrants into the United Kingdom following the grant of the right of settlement in the United Kingdom to an immigrant from the New Commonwealth.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Under the Immigration Rules (HC 388) a person settling here may normally be accompanied or joined by his or her spouse and any children under 18 but other relatives are admitted only in strictly limited circumstances. The available information on immigration patterns from New Commonwealth and other countries is published in the Home Office volume "Control of Immigration: Statistics United Kingdom 1988" (Cm. 726). More detailed information is collected for the Indian sub-continent and published in "Home Office Statistical Bulletin" issue 44/89 "Immigration from the Indian sub-continent—1988". Copies of both publications are in the Library.

Hong Kong

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Hong Kong citizens will be eligible for British citizenship under the British Nationality Act, section 4(5) in return for rendering Crown services.

Mr. Waddington [holding answer 19 January 1990]: There are currently some 180,000 Hong Kong British dependent territories citizens in Crown service under the Government of Hong Kong who are eligible to apply for discretionary registration as British citizens under section 4(5) of the British Nationality Act 1981. An unknown additional number are eligible on the basis of past service. In accordance with the policy announced when the British Nationality Act was before Parliament, the limited powers under this provision are used sparingly.

Apart from a number of former members of the armed services in respect of whom certain assurances were given, there have been 540 applications from Hong Kong under section 4(5) since it came into force, of which nine have been granted. In view of the special scheme recently announced, I have no plans to change the policy within which section 4(5) applications are considered.

EMPLOYMENT

Jobcentres

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement regarding the future of jobcentres in (a) Doncaster and (b) Mexborough.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him on 15 January, Official Report, column 614. When decisions are taken about the future of offices in Doncaster and Mexborough he will be informed.

Labour Statistics

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many unemployed claimants since 9 October 1989, and for each region, and for Great Britain as a whole, have been (a) issued with warning letters for not actively seeking work, (b) had their claims referred to an AO for not actively seeking work, (c) had their claims allowed or disallowed and (d) have been referred to an AO for refusing suitable employment; and how many of those in (d) have had their benefits disqualified.

Mr. Eggar: The table shows the statistical information for the period 9 October to 24 November 1989 on questions of actively seeking employment and refusal of employment.

Mr. Eggar: If a UB672 has been completed because of doubts that the claimant is available for work or actively seeking it, current instructions provide that claimants or their representatives may receive a copy of the form on request at any time.

Employment and Training Schemes

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many of the participants in his training schemes and special employment measures referred to in his answer to the hon. Member for Norfolk, North of 14 November 1989, Official Report, column 148 (a) went on to get regular employment and (b) have started for a second or subsequent time.

Mr. Nicholls: Information on the number who went on to regular employment after attending a training opportunities scheme (TOPS) in 1979-80 is set down in the Manpower Services Commission's annual report 1980-81 filed in the House of Commons Library.

Of the young people on YTS in 1988-89, 66·8 per cent. were in regular employment three months after completing their programme.

In the period April 1988 to March 1989, 12 per cent. re-entered YTS.

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the total expenditure on Government training schemes since 1972 at current and at 1989 prices; and what assessment he has made of the cost-effectiveness of the expenditure.

Mr. Nicholls: Records are kept on the basis of the standard financial year for Government expenditure, which runs from 1 April to 31 March.

The Manpower Services Commission was established in 1974. The total spent on training schemes since 1974 by the Employment Department Group Training Agency (and its predecessors, the Training Commission and the Manpower Services Commission) is as follows:

£ millions

	cash value	constant 1988-89 prices
1974-75	96·4	376·1
1975-76	171·7	525·2
1976-77	256·0	682·9
1977-78	292·0	693·4
1978-79	373·6	793·6
1979-80	451·4	848·8
1980-81	560·4	889·0
1981-82	749·1	1,080·8
1982-83	868·5	1,169·2
1983-84	1,049·5	1,337·5
1984-85	1,144·1	1,382·8
1985-86	1,256·9	1,441·7
1986-87	1,441·4	1,609·8
1987-88	1,613·1	1,716·4
1988-89	2,062·3	2,062·3

The figures shown at constant 1988-89 prices were calculated by use of the GDP deflator index.

Figures are inclusive of expenditure on the following programmes:
Training for the Needs of Industry.
Training for the Needs of Individuals.
Improving Training Effectiveness and Efficiency.
Training Opportunities Scheme.
Skillcentre Training.
Youth Opportunities Programme.
Occupational Training.
Adult Training.
Industrial Training Organisations.
Technical and Vocational Education Initiative.
Non Advanced Further Education.
Youth Training Scheme.
Scientific and Technical Equipment in Schools (STEPS).
Employment Training and all related administration costs net of receipts.

Figures are taken from the appropriation accounts for all years except 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88 for which appropriation accounts do not provide the necessary detail. For those three years the Training Commission annual report has been used.

This growth in expenditure has been taking place at a time of rising unemployment as the economy adjusts to the demands of international competitiveness. Training schemes have provided unemployed school leavers and adults with the skills necessary to assist them back to work and help the economy.

The value for money of training schemes is monitored carefully. Cost-effectiveness will be a key aspect in the development of training and enterprise councils, when payments will be increasingly geared to the achievement of specific results.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Chemical Weapons

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has received any recent representations from the International Federation of Chemical, Energy and General Workers' Unions concerning the development of verification techniques for a chemical weapons ban.

Mr. Waldegrave: Not directly. A report of chemical weapons prepared jointly by the International Federation of Chemical, Energy and General Workers' Unions and the International Confederation of Trade Unions was forwarded last October by the general secretary of the Trades Union Congress.

Romania

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, during the visit of the right hon. Member for Bristol, West (Mr. Waldegrave) to Romania, he raised the issues of (a) the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty Review Conference and nuclear technology aid available under article IV of the treaty and (b) acid rain abatement technology available from United Kingdom suppliers for retro-fitting to fossil fuel power plants.

Mr. Waldegrave: Neither of these matters were raised though doubtless both will be as our relations develop. I did discuss Romania's acute environmental problems, in particular with members of the new Romanian Ecology party.

Hong Kong

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy, Official Report, 11 January, column 697, who gave the authorisation for force to be used against the boat people in Hong Kong.

Mr. Maude: Authority to use the minimum degree of force necessary during the operation to search for weapons in the Chi Ma Wan detention centre on Lantau island on 29 December 1989 was given by Police General Orders 29-01, made by the Commissioner of Police under section 46 of the Police Force Ordinance.

112. Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his recent visit to Hong Kong.

Mr. Maude: I refer the hon. Member to the statement my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs made in the House on 17 January at col. 291.

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what level of secondary immigration he would anticipate to arise from primary immigration of 225,000 on the basis of past experience.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 12 January 1990]. I have been asked to reply.

Experience in other contexts cannot be a basis for assessing the implications of the scheme to grant British citizenship to people in Hong Kong in a unique arrangement intended to give beneficiaries the confidence to remain there.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs at what time, on what day and by what means the Swiss Government were informed of the British Government's decision to enter an exemption to the ivory ban on behalf of Hong Kong; and when the CITES Secretariat learnt of the decision.

Mr. Waldegrave: The reservation was deposited with the Government of the Swiss Confederation at 10 am on Wednesday 17 January by the delivery of diplomatic notes to the Swiss Federal Department of Foreign Affairs in Berne and to the embassy of Switzerland in London. Notification of our decision was faxed to the CITES Secretariat by the Department of the Environment at 4.50 pm on 17 January.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he had with representatives of the ivory trade during his recent visit to Hong Kong.

Mr. Maude: None.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representation he has received during the last three months regarding the fate of the Hong Kong ivory stocks.

Mr. Waldegrave: We received a number of representations over the past three months, both in favour and against the entering of a reservation on behalf of Hong Kong. We took all these into consideration. We received no formal representations from other countries.

Eastern Europe

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment his Department has made of the proposal by the Hansard Society to establish, through moneys made available in the know-how funds, a course for politicians from Poland and Hungary to learn about the British parliamentary system.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have received various proposals for training courses for politicians from Poland and Hungary to be financed by the know-how funds. We are evaluating all such proposals with a view to tailoring them to Polish and Hungarian requirements. We have recently received more specific requests from the Polish Senate for training on several aspects of the United Kingdom system: parliamentary, legal, political and administrative and educational.

The Hansard Society will be involved in organising seminars to meet these requests along with the IPU, the Great Britain Eastern European Centre, the British Council, and other appropriate bodies.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what financial assistance and other advice he is considering offering to the Government of Yugoslavia to aid their efforts to broaden democracy and achieve economic stability.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have been helping the Yugoslavian economy by participating in the rescheduling of the principal and interest due on debts in the Paris Club. We believe that a new agreement with the IMF will be of central importance for the future of Yugoslavia's programme of economic adjustment and liberalisation. We have agreed with our partners within the European Community that, once an IMF agreement is reached, we will be ready to examine further aid measures and increased cooperation.

Immigration

Mr. Bidwell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will instruct the chief immigration officer at the British High Commission, New Delhi to issue immediate entry clearance to the close relatives of the late Mr. Sekhon, a constituent of the hon. Member for Ealing, Southall.

Mr. Sainsbury: I wrote to the hon. Member on 19 January advising him of the action which Mr. Sekhon's relatives should take if they wish their applications to be considered further.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs for what reasons the spouse of a British subject can be refused a visa to settle in Britain; which of these reasons was used in rejecting the visa application by Mrs. Pianov, who is a Polish national married to a British citizen, Oleg Pianov; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The spouse of a British citizen applying for an entry clearance to settle in this country must satisfy the relevant requirements of the immigration rules; these are set out in paragraph 50 of HC 388.

Mrs. Pianov has not been refused a settlement visa. She applied for a visit visa which has been granted.

EEC Overseas Territories

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the names and populations of overseas territories of members of the EEC; if he will further indicate what plans there are to allow persons from such territories the right of abode within the EEC; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: The list of member states' overseas territories and their populations (estimates for the year in brackets) is:

The Overseas Departments and the Territorial Collectives are part of metropolitan France and their citizens are therefore EC nationals. Gibraltar forms part of the EC and its citizens are therefore EC nationals. Citizens of the other territories listed in the table do not have rights of entry into the Community unless they hold a passport of a member state which specifically entitles them to entry.

We are not aware of any plans by other EC member states to amend the existing rights of entry to the Community for their overseas territories.

On Hong Kong, I refer my hon. Friend to the statement my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs made in the House on 20 December.

Holiday Visit Passages

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the approximate cost of holiday visit passages paid in respect of (a) children of his Department's personnel being educated in the United Kingdom and in receipt of education allowances and (b) members of the Diplomatic Service communications division being educated in the United Kingdom and in receipt of education allowances, and of any further travelling expenses paid for the latest available year.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 19 January 1990]: The total cost, with travelling expenses, of holiday passages for the children of staff serving overseas on Diplomatic Service terms, including those of the communications division (for whom separate statistics are not kept) was £1·05 million in 1988-89.

THE ARTS

Curatorial Staff

30. Mr. Gregory: To ask the Minister for the Arts what percentage of public musuem and gallery curatorial staff have received recognised curatorial training; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: The information requested is unavailable at present. I understand that the newly established museums training institute is currently researching the training needs of museums and galleries staff as part of its overall review of training requirements.

Arts Council

32. Mr. Adley: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he last met the chairman of the Arts Council; and what was discussed.

Mr. Luce: I meet Mr. Palumbo regularly to discuss various matters of mutual interest.

Admission Charges

31. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he has met the chairman of the Museums and Galleries Commission to discuss the Education, Science and Arts Select Committee's report on charging for admission to national museums.

Mr. Luce: I meet the chairman of the Museums and Galleries Commission on a regular basis to discuss matters of mutual interest. I have not met him since the Select Committee's report was issued on 10 January 1990.

33. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he intends to reply to the report of the Education, Science and Arts Select Committee on charging for national museums; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he plans to respond to the Education, Science and Arts Committee's report on charging for admission to national museums.

Mr. Luce: I am studying the report and will issue a response in the near future.

36. Mr. Dennis Turner: To ask the Minister for the Arts what is his policy on admission charges to national museums.

39. Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will make a statement on the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards charges for admission to national galleries and museums.

40. Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Minister for the Arts what is his policy on charging for admission to national museums.

Mr. Luce: I refer the hon. Members to the answer that I gave earlier to the hon. Member for Wrexham, (Dr. Marek).

Disabled People (Access)

34. Mr. Stern: To ask the Minister for the Arts, what steps he is taking to increase access to the arts by disabled people.

Mr. Luce: I announced in December 1988 that I was giving £150,000 to the ADAPT fund which the Carnegie Trust is setting up to improve the accessibility of arts venues for disabled people. I am pleased to say that the work of the trust is now well under way. In addition to this initiative, the Arts Council has a disability officer to ensure that the needs of disabled people are taken fully into account in the work of the council and its clients.

Wilding Report

35. Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he intends to publish his response to the Wilding report on funding of the arts.

45. Ms. Short: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he intends to announce his reponse to the Wilding review of arts funding.

Mr. Luce: I expect to make an announcement as soon as possible after I have had an opportunity to consider the responses to the report.

41. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Minister for the Arts how many responses he received to the proposals in the Wilding report on altering the boundaries of regional arts associations.

Mr. Luce: I have received nearly 5,500 responses which include comment on this issue.

42. Mr. Allen: To ask the Minister for the Arts what representations he has had from the east midlands on the Wilding report on arts funding.

Mr. Luce: I have received a number of representations from individuals and organisations in the east midlands area about the Wilding report.

43. Mr. Janner: To ask the Minister for the Arts what representations he has received concerning the amalgamation of the east and west midlands arts organisations.

Mr. Luce: I have received a number of representations from individuals and organisations on this matter. I have met the chairmen and directors of the two organisations to hear their concerns.

44. Mr. Key: To ask the Minister for the Arts, what representations he has received on proposed reorganisation of regional arts associations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: I have received almost 6,000 responses to the Wilding report of which approximately 4,500 are postcards. I shall be announcing my response to the report as soon as possible.

Tours

37. Mr. David Martin: To ask the Minister for the Arts what steps he is taking to encourage arts bodies to tour both at home and abroad.

Mr. Luce: The Arts Council is responsible for actively encouraging touring within the United Kingdom. The council has established a Great Britain touring fund to encourage arts bodies to tour throughout the country. The fund's budget has gone up from £1·5 million last year to £2 million for this year and for 1990-91. Support for overseas touring is the responsibility of the British Council.

Uniform Business Rate

38. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will make special provision for the arts in London to take account of the revaluation of business premises and the impact of uniform business rate.

Mr. Luce: The aim of my three-year settlement is to give arts bodies a clear view of the Government resources available, so that they have a firm basis on which to plan their activities and meet their final commitments. I see no reason to make special additional provisions to take account of the revaluation of business premises and the unified business rate.

Arts Funding

46. Mr. Burns: To ask the Minister for the Arts what increase in the funding of the Arts Council is proposed for the next two financial years.

Mr. Luce: I announced in November that next year the Arts Council's grant-in-aid will be set at £175 million, an increase of 12·5 per cent. over 1989-90. In 1991-92 that will rise by a further 4·6 per cent. to £183 million. Over the next three years, the overall increase will be 22 per cent.

Museums and Galleries (Refurbishment)

47. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Minister for the Arts what increase there has been in provision for the refurbishment and maintenance of museums and galleries for the year ahead.

Mr. Luce: I am providing £48 million in the current financial year for the building and maintenance programmes at the national museums and galleries which I sponsor. I announced on 16 November last year that this provision will increase by 19 per cent. to £57 million, in 1990-91.

Works of Art (Exports)

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he will list the items for which the issuing of export licences was withheld on the recommendation of the reviewing committee on the export of works of art during the half year ended 31 December 1989, specifying in each case the valuation and whether an item was eventually exported or retained, with particulars in the latter event of the acquiring institution; whether he will list any items for which licences have been withheld but the final disposal of which is not yet decided, specifying in each case (a) the valuation and (b) the relevant time limit; and whether a press notice will be issued from the Office of Arts and Libraries covering the information given in his reply.

Mr. Luce: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry accepted my recommendation, following consideration by the reviewing committee on the export of works of art, to defer making for a specified period a decision on an export licence application in respect of the items listed. Details of the items listed were given in press notices issued at the time the Secretary of State decided to accept the recommendation; however, a further press notice will be issued.

Mr. Luce: The estimated number of visitors during 1989 to the 11 national museums and galleries for which I am responsible are as follows:

NATIONAL FINANCE

Privatised Businesses

Mr. Knapman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many of the major businesses privatised since 1979 were in profit in 1979.

Mr. Lilley: Of the 29 major businesses privatised since 1979, the following were in profit in 1979: British Petroleum, British Aerospace, Cable and Wireless, National Freight Consortium, Britoil, Amersham International, Associated British Ports, Sealink, British Telecom, British Gas, British Airways, Royal Ordnance, Rolls-Royce, BAA, Northumbrian Water, South West Water.

Public Sector Pensions

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list those instances in which a retrospective amendment has been made to public sector pension schemes.

Mr. Ryder: A distinction has to be drawn between, first, amendments where the effect is backdated to cover the elapses of time between agreement on, or the announcement of, a change and the making of regulations to give effect to it and, secondly, amendments which have effect prior to an agreement on, or announcement of, a change.

There have been many amendments of the first kind. They are acceptable because they ensure that scheme members are not deprived of agreed improvements in benefits for the time that it may take to finalise the necessary amendment of the scheme's rules. It would entail disproportionate cost to provide a complete list of such amendments.

It has rarely been possible to amend schemes to provide for retrospection of the second kind because of the costs that may be involved and considerations of equity and administration. It has, therefore, been the policy of successive Governments not to allow such retrospection, save in the most exceptional circumstances. In the past 20 years, the only major instances of which I am aware have been the amendments made in the 1970s to bring the public services generally into line with the Civil Service by allowing war service to count at half rate for pension purposes; and, in 1979, for the armed forces pension scheme to provide pensions for pre-1950 widows.

Commercial Accounting and Auditing

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Norfolk, North on 9 January, Official Report, column 576, which specific sectors of the public sector in which normal accountancy and auditing methods (a) are already employed, (b) are being developed and (c) are considered to be inappropriate.

Mr. Ryder: The position in different parts of the public sector is as follows:

(a) Government Departments

Some Departments already produce commercial-style accounts. These include the existing trading funds (The Royal Mint, Her Majesty's Stationery Office and The Crown Suppliers) and some other Departments with major trading functions, for example, Ordnance Survey, ECGD and the Forestry Commission.

The Government's White Paper "The Financing and Accountability of Next Steps Agencies" sets out plans for the future. The arrangements proposed for agencies which become trading funds are described in paragraphs 5.9 to 5.13. The arrangements proposed for those which remain under full Vote accounting are described in paragraphs 5.14 to 5.17. Normally only cash-based appropriation accounts will be published for Departments or parts of Departments which do not become next steps agencies.

(b) Non-departmental public bodies (NDPBS)

NDPBs are bodies which have a role in the process of national Government—but which are not Government Departments. Many NDPBs which are classified as executive bodies already produce commercial-style accounts on an accruals basis. The expenses of NDPBs which are classified as advisory and judicial bodies are generally brought to account in the cash-based appropriation accounts of their sponsoring Department.

(c) National Health Service

In the National Health Service accounting has been developed along more commercial lines over recent years, with the exception of accounting for capital. It is intended to implement capital accounting, including the preparation of balance sheets for the financial year 1991-92. It is planned that the Audit Commission should take over the audit of the NHS under the provisions proposed in the NHS and Community Care Bill, and the Local Government and Housing Bill.

(d) Local Authorities

In February 1989 the local authority associations and CIPFA published "Capital Accounting in Local Authorities", containing proposals to change the way local authorities account for capital receipts and expenditure, and to secure improvements in local authority accounting. These proposals could form the basis of a code of practice for local authority capital accounting which would apply to all authorities from 1991-92. The proposals would move local authority accounting closer to commercial accounting principles. But they reflect legal constraints: for example, those applying to grants and rates, which do not apply to the private sector.

(e) Nationalised Industries

Nationalised industries produce accounts on a commercial basis.

Mortgage Interest Tax Relief

Mr. Soley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many (a) first-time buyers in the first five years of home onwership and (b) other home owners, would be expected to benefit from an increase in the ceiling for mortgage interest tax relief above the current £30,000 limit; what percentage of all home buyers in each category this would represent; and what would be the cost of the increased benefit to each group were the ceiling to be raised to (i) £35,000, (ii) £40,000 and (iii) £50,000, respectively;

(2) what would be the cost of adjusting the maximum ceiling for mortgage interest tax relief to (a) £35,000, (b) £40,000, (c) £45,000 and (d) £50,000, on the assumption that (i) relief continues to be available at the higher marginal tax rate where applicable, and (ii) that relief is restricted to the standard 25 per cent. rate of income tax.

Mr. Lilley: I regret that information on mortgage interest relief for first-time buyers in the first five years of home ownership is not available. Provisional estimates of the costs of increasing the ceiling are given in the table. All estimates exclude behavioural effects, which would be substantial for the higher ceilings.

Direct revenue costs at 1989-90 income levels of raising the ceiling for mortgage interest relief

Ceiling	Relief at marginal tax rate £ million	Relief at basic rate of 25 per cent. £ million
£35,000	320	−140
£40,000	580	90
£45,000	770	270
£50,000	900	390

Mr. Soley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the additional average relief receivable by those people with incomes of (a) up to £5,000 a year, (b) between £5,000 and £10,000 a year, (c) between £10,000 and £15,000 a year, (d) between £15,000 and £20,000 a year, (e) between £20,000 and £25,000 a year, (f) between £25,000 and £30,000 a year, and (g) over £30,000 a year if the ceiling on mortgage interest tax relief were to be raised to (i) £35,000, (ii) £40,000, (iii) £45,000, and (iv) £50,000; and how many beneficiaries there would be in each income band, assuming (x) that relief would continue to be available at the higher marginal tax rate where applicable and (y) that relief was restricted to the standard, 25 per cent. rate of income tax.

Mr. Lilley: The information requested is given in the table. All estimates exclude behavioural effects which would be substantial for the higher ceilings.

Increasing the ceiling for mortgage interest relief 1989-90

Total Income £	Number of beneficiaries thousands	Average gain if ceiling is increased to £35,000 £	£40,000 £	£45,000 £	£50,000 £
Up to 5,000	20	160	250	290	330
5,000—10,000	140	130	230	290	320
10,000—15,000	360	150	260	330	380
15,000—20,000	520	160	270	360	410
20,000—25,000	400	160	290	390	450
25,000—30,000	220	160	290	390	470
Over 30,000	390	190	350	470	580
TOTAL	2,050	160	280	380	440

If relief was restricted to the basic rate at the same time as the ceiling was increased, the number of beneficiaries with incomes above £30,000 would be reduced. About 190,000 basic rate taxpayers would still benefit, and about 70,000 higher rate taxpayers with mortgages above £48,000 would be net beneficiaries if the ceiling were raised to that level or above.

Capial Loss Relief

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to change the availability of capital loss relief for transactions in oil rights and oil assets.

Mr. Lilley: For disposals made on or after today, the Government intend two changes to stop unwarranted loss relief being available on certain oil assets. These are assets of an essentially wasting nature, whose value in 1982 was very high because of the high oil price at that date but where no actual loss compared with acquisition cost arises. First, unquoted shares deriving the larger part of their value from United Kingdom and United Kingdom continental shelf oil rights and assets will no longer be eligible for an election that rebasing to 1982 for capital gains tax purposes shall apply to all disposals. Secondly, in certain circumstances where oil assets, rights and unquoted shares are disposed of, indexation allowance will be calculated on the acquisition cost rather than the 1982 market value. The necessary legislation will be included in the 1990 Finance Bill. Further details are in a press release being issued by the Inland Revenue.

SCOTLAND

Radioactive Waste Disposal

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the implications of the findings of the European Commission's PAGIS study into the suitability of Scottish geology for high-level radioactive waste disposal for the search by Nirex to establish a deep disposal facility for intermediate-level and low-level radioactive wastes.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to her on Thursday 18 January at column 363 by my hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment and Countryside.

Teenage Smoking

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if his Department is planning any additional expenditure during the current year for a teenage smoking prevention programme.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In Scotland the main responsibility for promotion of health education and prevention of ill health lies with the Scottish health education group. It currently expects to spend about £297,000 on anti-smoking material and campaigns during the current financial year—an increase of £17,000 over its original estimate for the year. The Scottish committee for Action on Smoking and Health will receive grant-in-aid of £40,000 in 1989-90. Both organisations undertake anti-smoking initiatives directed at teenagers.

Forestry

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library a copy of the Scottish Development Department's draft circular on indicative forestry strategies.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I have placed a copy of the draft circular and related material in the Library. I am most grateful for the many valuable comments received from a wide range of interests on this proposed advice on the preparation of indicative forestry strategies by regional authorities in Scotland. This confirms the value of these strategies as a framework for future decision-making on forestry planting. The final version of the circular and related technical advice, taking into account the comments received, will be issued shortly. A copy will be placed in the Library.

Hospital Building

Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the five largest hospital building projects in Scotland currently under construction; and what is the projected cost of each.

Museums and Galleries

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will publish in the Official Report the attendance figures for 1989 reported by the national museums and galleries in Scotland, broken down into the individual institutions but including their outstations, with figures in each case of the percentage increase or decrease on the attendance figures for 1988.

Mr. Lang: The information is as follows:

	1989	Percentage change since 1988
National Galleries of Scotland	709,582	+39·0
National Museums of Scotland	899,351	+30·7

Attendance figures for the national museums of Scotland for 1989 are inclusive of visitors to the Scottish United Services museum at Edinburgh castle which were not previously attributed to the museums. In 1988 there were 156,614 visitors to the Scottish United Services museum.

The national galleries of Scotland comprise the National Gallery of Scotland, the Scottish National Gallery of Modern Art and the Scottish National Portrait Gallery. The national museums of Scotland comprise the Royal Museum of Scotland buildings at Chambers street and Queen street, Edinburgh, the Scottish Agricultural museum, the Scottish United Services museum, the Museum of Flight and the Shambellie Museum of Costume.

Pesticide Alternatives

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress is being made in the use of sea-lice and ctenolabrus rupestris as alternatives to pesticides.

Mr. Lang: A full evaluation of the Sea Fish Industry Authority's initial trials of gold sinny wrasse to reduce sea lice infestation is not expected until the end of the year. Further trials may be needed before commercial viability could be established.

Work on the development of a possible vaccine treatment, which is being co-ordinated by scientists from the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland, is also at a very early stage.

Lupus Group

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he is taking as a result of the Fife, Lothian and Borders Lupus group letter to the Prime Minister.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I responded to the points raised in this letter in a reply which I sent to the hon. Member for Clackmannan (Mr. O'Neill) on 17 November 1989. A copy has been placed in the Library of the House.

Kelvin Central plc

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has granted financial assistance to the management team of Kelvin Central plc in its bid to purchase the company; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Financial assistance has been offered by the Scottish Transport Group to the management-employee buyout team led by the managing director of Kelvin Central Buses Ltd. The assistance, which will not exceed £48,750, will cover 75 per cent. of professional advisers' fees up to £65,000. In the event of the bid being successful, no assistance will be paid.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide to the employee-led consortium the equivalent financial assistance to that provided to the management-led consortium in its bid for Kelvin Central plc; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Financial assistance is being made available by the Scottish Transport Group to one management-employee buyout team per company. In the case of Kelvin Central Buses Ltd. this assistance has been offered to the management-employee team led by the managing director.

Conveyancing

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the Scottish-based organisations which have supported his proposals for reform of the law and procedures related to conveyancing; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The following Scottish-based respondents to the consultation paper "The Legal Profession in Scotland" expressed support for some or all of the proposed changes to the conveyancing market in Scotland:

Citizens Advice Scotland
Clydesdale Bank plc
Confederation of British Industry, Scotland
Dunfermline Building Society
National Association of Estate Agents, Scottish Branch
Scottish Consumer Council
Stuart Wyse Ogilvie, Estate Agents

All representations on the proposals for reform were taken fully into account before the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) (Scotland) Bill was introduced.

New Building Regulations

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on what grounds it was decided not to introduce the new building regulations concerning the conservation of fuel and power in Scotland in April 1990.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The building regulations which will come into effect in April 1990 were made under the Building Act 1984, which applies only to England and Wales. I have included similar improvements for the conservation of fuel and power in a major revision of all parts of the Building Standards (Scotland) Regulations, made under the Building (Scotland) Act 1959, which I intend to lay before Parliament later this year.

Land and Property Holdings

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he is yet in a position to publish a schedule of the land and property holdings of the South of Scotland Electricity Board and the North of Scotland Hydro-Electric Board.

Mr. Lang: I have no plans to publish such a schedule.

Eastern Scottish Bus Company

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to privatise the Eastern Scottish bus company.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Sales of the subsidiaries of the Scottish Bus Group will begin soon and it is expected that the whole programme will be completed early in 1991. It is not possible to say at this stage when Eastern Scottish Omnibuses Ltd will be offered for sale.

Cerebral Palsy

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what research he has commissioned to investigate the causes of cerebral palsy.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Scottish Home and Health Department has not funded any research specifically to investigate the causes of cerebral palsy. It has funded some research which might be relevant to this condition. Funds are available and applications for soundly based research will be sympathetically considered.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps his Department is taking to monitor trends in cerebral palsy.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Health boards monitor the numbers of children with cerebral palsy who are less than 16 years old. The information is held by the information services division of the Scottish Health Service's common services agency in the handicapped children's register.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the number of children born in Scotland, in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available, who have been diagnosed as having cerebral palsy.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is as follows:

Children with cerebral palsy new registrations in year ending 31 December

Year	Number
1978	79
1979	n/a
1980	69
1981	78

Homelessness

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made on the latest annual report by Shelter on homelessness in Scotland.

Mr. Rifkind: The reported results of Shelter's recent survey on homelessness in Scotland have been given careful consideration within my Department. Shelter does not make it clear the basis on which the statistics it presents have been collected, and its figures do not accord with those provided by local authorities to the Scottish Office. Nevertheless, both Shelter's and our own figures show that the number of households applying to local authorities under the homelessness provisions of the Housing (Scotland) Act 1987, and the number of them assessed as being homeless or potentially homeless, has remained fairly stable over the last three years.

The figures quoted by Shelter represent its estimate of the number of applications made to local authorities over a full year. Most of those households are found accommodation by local authorities, and others arrange their own accommodation. The figures are not an indication of the number of households without a home at any one time.

Court of Session

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many meetings he has attended with Lord President Hope since 1 November 1989; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Rifkind: Since 1 November 1989 I have had one meeting with the Lord President of the Court of Session, at which a range of matters were discussed.

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on what date he was informed that Lord Dervaird was resigning from the Court of Session; and who informed him.

Mr. Rifkind: By letter dated 21 December 1989, Lord Dervaird advised me that for personal reasons he wished to resign his appointment as a Court of Session judge from 1 January 1990.

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what part the Lord Advocate took in initiating by advice or otherwise the meeting between Lord President Hope and senior members of the Scottish media.

Mr. Rifkind: None.

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent discussions, and on what dates, the Lord Advocate held with the Lord President of the Court of Session about impending vacancies in the membership of the court.

Mr. Rifkind: The Lord Advocate has regular discussions on judicial matters with the Lord President of the Court of Session.

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent meetings he has held with judges of the Court of Session.

Mr. Rifkind: I have meetings with judges of the Court of Session from time to time.

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent meetings the Lord Advocate has had with judges of the Court of Session.

Mr. Rifkind: The Lord Advocate has meetings with judges at the Court of Session from time to time.

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether any recent information has been given by Crown Office officials to the Lord President of the Court of Session.

Mr. Rifkind: Information on a wide range of matters is made available on a regular basis by officials of the Lord Advocate to the Lord President of the Court of Session and to his officers of court.

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether being a practising homosexual within the law bars the nomination and appointment of persons to the Court of Session, or requires resignation from among those presently appointed.

Mr. Rifkind: There is no such legal bar.

Inward Investment

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list each of the announcements made by his Department on new planned jobs locating in Scotland in each of the last five years.

Mr. Lang: Details of every inward investment decision cannot be published as information is supplied by some companies on a commercially confidential basis.

The following table gives information on inward investment in Scotland for the years 1984-85 to 1988-89, as previously announced. The planned job figures are based on company forecasts.

	Number of projects	New jobs	Safeguarded jobs	Total jobs
1984-85	69	8,169	1,274	9,443
1985-86	58	4,663	3,554	8,217
1986-87	50	4,106	978	5,084
1987-88	84	6,363	4,856	11,219
1988-89	55	4,846	2,243	7,089

The figures for the years 1987-88 and 1988-89 relate only to projects where there was direct involvement by Locate in Scotland or the Industry Department for Scotland. Locate in Scotland is aware of a further four projects which came to Scotland in 1987-88 without such involvement and of a further five in 1988-89.

Civil Service Relocation

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what is the number of actual jobs created in each of the last five years by new companies and organisations or Government Departments locating in Scotland;

(2) what is the number of civil service posts relocated to Scotland in each of the last five years.

Mr. Lang: The information on non-Government employment is not available for the first question and the information on Government Departments is not available in the form requested for both questions.

In the five years since 1985 around 1,490 posts were transferred to Glasgow under the Government's earlier dispersal programme; of these, 1,400 were in the Ministry of Defence and the remainder in the Passport Office. In addition there have been some minor moves by Departments to Scotland taken on their own initiatives, but no central records are kept.

Mentally Ill Patients

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the cost of undertaking an individual assessment of the needs of all long-term mentally ill patients in Scotland over a two-year period.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The cost of undertaking an individual assessment of the needs of long-term mentally ill patients will vary depending on the particular circumstances of the person involved and it is not possible to give an estimate of the costs.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take steps to ensure that all long-term mentally ill patients in Scotland will have an assessment made of their individual needs within the next two years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: People with mental illness have individual care plans to meet their needs while they are receiving treatment in hospital. The White Paper "Caring for People" indicates that health boards and local authorities will be required to complete an assessment of the needs of each person with a long-term mental illness due to be discharged from hospital and prepare joint care programmes for them. The intention is to introduce these care programmes from 1 April 1991.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what extra resources will be available to local authorities to pay for the individual needs assessments for long-term mentally ill patients in Scotland; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what extra resources will be made available to local authorities to develop community care for long-term mentally ill patients in Scotland;

(3) what new resources are currently being planned to offset the reduction in long-term beds for patients who are mentally ill.

Mr. Lang: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which I gave on 16 January 1990 to his earlier questions on the same subject. (Official Report, Vol. 165, col. 208-09.)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the proportion of long-term mentally ill patients currently in Scottish hospitals that could satisfactorily be cared for in a community context.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Whether a long-term mentally ill inpatient could be satisfactorily discharged into the community is a matter of clinical judgment. No comprehensive estimates of the likely proportion involved are currently available.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to develop a system of bridging finance to develop services for the provision of community care of long-term mentally ill patients in Scottish hospitals.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Under the arrangements set out in the White Paper "Caring for People", health boards and local authorities will each prepare a community care plan. As a basis for these plans, the White Paper recognises a need for planning agreements between boards and authorities setting out shared assumptions and objectives. A key requirement of planning agreements will be funding agreements setting out the basis on which health and social care will be funded. The details will be the subject of consultation in due course.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to establish an independent body to undertake any needs assessment of individual long-term mentally ill patients in hospitals in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: None. The needs assessment of mentally ill patients in hospital is a matter for the relevant health boards. The Mental Welfare Commission for Scotland has a statutory duty to inquire into any case where there appears tc be any deficiency of treatment or care and to follow this up as appropriate.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he proposes to take to reduce the number of inappropriate hospital admissions for patients who are mentally ill.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The proposals in the White Paper "Caring for People" are designed to help the mentally ill to be cared for in a community setting and to ensure that they are admitted to hospital only where, on the basis of clinical judgment, it is necessary for the purposes of treatment.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he plans to develop systems of community and institutional care for long-term mentally ill patients in hospitals in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The White Paper "Caring for People" sets out in detail the Government's proposals for the provision of comprehensive community facilities for the long-term mentally ill and other priority groups. At the same time we are providing the necessary resources to develop and improve hospital facilities for those whom this remains the most appropriate form of care.

Judges

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the Lord Advocate will initiate a review of the system of appointment and of the terms of service of Scottish judges.

Mr. Rifkind: There are no plans to do so.

Businesses

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the number of new businesses registered and bankruptcies in Scotland in each year since 1984.

Mr. Lang: The table shows the number of new companies registered in Scotland and the number of liquidations notified for Scottish registered companies in each year between 1984 and 1989. The table shows the number of bankruptcies. Bankruptcies are awards of sequestration and relate solely to individuals, partnerships, clubs etc and exclude limited companies.

Companies registered and liquidated and bankruptcies in Scotland

Year	New companies registered[1]	Liquidations[1]	Bankruptcies[2]
1984	4,976	757	296
1985	5,417	757	298
1986	5,999	762	437
1987	5,860	636	[3]826
1988	6,879	651	1,420
1989	6,779	674	2,294

[2] Source Accountant and Bankruptcy Office
[3] New legislation was introduced in 1986, which affected the number of sequestrations.

Living Elsewhere Grants

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many students receive grants based on living elsewhere than in the parental home; and what proportion this is of the number of students receiving grants.

Mr. Lang: The latest available figures are for the academic session 1988-89, when 31,981 Scottish domiciled students received the elsewhere rate of maintenance grant. This represented 65·8 per cent. of the total number of students receiving a maintenance grant.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the effect of the imposition of the poll tax on the workload of sheriff officers; and if he anticipates a need for any increase in the number of sheriff officers as a result of the poll tax.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Sheriff officers are independent contractors and it is for them to consider how best to respond to requests for their services.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many summary warrants were issued by Scottish regional councils for non-payment of the poll tax at the most recent date for which figures are available; and what was the equivalent number of summary warrants issued by Scottish regional councils for non-payment of rates on the same date in the previous year.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 12 January 1990]: Information on the total number of persons subject to summary warrant procedure for non-payment of domestic rates or community charge is not held centrally. The use of the summary warrant procedure is a matter for regional councils.

HEALTH

Teaching Hospitals

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what exercises have been carried out by his Department to determine the excess costs of teaching hospitals; and how often these exercises have been repeated.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: In the last 15 years the Department has several times sought to determine the excess costs of teaching hospitals, and to establish what proportion of this excess is attributable to teaching—as opposed to research, the tendency to treat more complex cases, or other factors. Exercises have been undertaken on four occasions: for the Resource Allocation Working Party (RAWP) in 1975, and again in 1976, and subsequently during reviews of the RAWP formula in 1978-80 and 1986-88.

For the future, my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State has accepted a recommendation from the Steering Group on Undergraduate Medical and Dental Education that the basis and level of the service increment for teaching (SIFT), which is intended to compensate hospitals for those excess costs, should be re-examined in 1992.

Service Increments for Teaching

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the changes in the service increment for teaching formula since 1980.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The formula used to calculate the service increment for teaching (SIFT) has been changed on two occasions in this period; following the work of, first, the Advisory Group on Resource Allocation which reported in 1980, and the NHS Management Board's review of the Resource Allocation Working Party (RAWP) formula, which reported in 1988. The changes on each occasion were:

In 1980-81:
Expansion to cover new medical schools at Cambridge, Leicester, Nottingham and Southampton;
Expansion of the number of teaching hospitals covered by the formula;
Replacement of the previous method of compensating for higher London costs; introduction of the London weighting addition in its place;
Introduction of separate recognition for dental hospitals' excess service costs—equal to 85 per cent. of their average outpatient expenditure.

Recommendations of the RAWP Review: to take effect in 1990-91:
Increase in the proportion of excess service costs met by medical SIFT from 75 per cent. to 100 per cent.;
Recalculation of the average amount by which teaching hospitals' service costs exceed those of other hospitals, on the basis of an updated survey;
Recalculation of dental SIFT in recognition of increased costs in dental hospitals, relative to the rest of the NHS.

In addition to these changes to the formula, in November 1989 important new advice was issued to the regional health authorities on the principles which should govern their allocation of SIFT to individual hospitals.

AIDS

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by year for the last eight years, for each regional health authority, the number of people who have died from AIDS; and if he will show in his answer, their sex and age by categories (a) aged under 20 years, (b) aged 20 to 30 years, (c) aged 31 to 40 years, (d) aged 41 to 50 years and (e) aged over 50 years.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: In line with the procedure followed in reports under the AIDS (Control) Act, to safeguard confidentiality numbers below 10 in tables showing AIDS data are represented by an asterisk. A table showing the breakdown requested would include so many asterisks that it would be uninformative. The data have therefore been aggregated to some extent.

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of children receiving immunisations have suffered vaccine damage, in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available; how many received compensation; and what was the total amount of compensation paid each year.

Mr. Freeman: Information is not available in the form requested, but in the last 10 years over 25 million childhood vaccinations have been given. Over the same period there were 556 successful claims for a vaccine damage payment. The table sets out the numbers of awards and the expenditure of the scheme.

Vaccine damage payments are not compensation—that is an entirely separate matter to be pursued in the courts.

Chernobyl

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has received any communication from his counterpart in Norway concerning new evaluations by the Norwegian Food Control Authority over the health effects of Chernobyl radioactive fall-out.

Mr. Freeman: No, neither the Department nor the National Radiological Protection Board have received any information from the Norwegian Food Control Authority about new evaluations of the health effects of Chernobyl fall-out.

Environmental Medicine Foundation

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether his Department makes any funds available to the Environmental Medicine Foundation.

Mr. Freeman: No funds are provided to this foundation by the Department of Health.

Community Care

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will place in the Library a copy of his report to Parliament on the development of community care services to be published under section 11 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultations Representation) Act 1986.

Mr. Freeman: The report was laid in draft before Parliament on 21 December last year. Copies will be placed in the Library as soon as they are printed.

Personal Stereos

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the dangers to public health of loud music played on personal stereos.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Caithness and Sutherland (Mr. Maclennan) on 15 January at column 89.

Ambulance Service

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much money the national ambulance service raised by public donation in the last year for which figures are available.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information is not held centrally on the extent to which the individual ambulance services raise money by public donation.

Hospital Cleaning Standards

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he proposes to take to ensure that adequate cleaning standards are guaranteed at (a) Guys hospital, Southwark, (b) Battle hospital, Reading and (c) St. John's hospital, Chelmsford.

Mr. Freeman: The setting of such standards, and their maintenance, is a matter for the health authorities concerned.

Cervical Screening

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by regional health authority, the family practitioner committees that do not issue the Health Education Authority's leaflet, "The Cervical Smear Test, Why You Need It", to accompany the invitation letter sent to women for a National Health Service cervical cytology screening.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by regional health authority, the percentage of women who did not attend for a cervical cytology screening when invited for the last year for which he has figures, under the categories (a) inaccessability, (b) ineligibility, (c) unsuitable, (d) failed communication, (e) incorrect classification and (f) refused to attend.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Although the information will not be available in exactly the form requested, it is hoped shortly to be able to give information about women screened in 1988-89 following the introduction of a new cancer screening return from April 1988.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will take steps to reduce the interval time between cervical cytology screening to three years for all women.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have recommended to health authorities a maximum interval of five years between tests, which we know can reduce deaths among women screened by more than 80 per cent. We know that the majority of women who die from cervical cancer have never had a smear test. We therefore believe that it is more important to achieve as a first priority a high response rate from all women in the eligible age group rather than aim to reduce the interval between screening. The recommended recall interval is kept under review.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by regional health authority, those district health authorities that do not send notification to women who have had a cervical cytology screening, when the results are negative.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by regional health authority, those district health authorities that do not offer cervical cytology screening at the age range recommended by his Department; and if he will show in his answer the age range applied by each such district health authority.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have asked district health authorities to invite all women aged 20 to 64 for cervical cancer screening by March 1993, unless their general practitioner has indicated that they should be excluded. We do not have information on the age ranges currently being invited in each district health authority.

Kent Contract

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the extent to which the Kent contract for general practitioners conforms with the Statutory Instruments approved by Parliament.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the Kent contract for general practitioners conforms with the Statutory Instruments approved by Parliament.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Some reports have appeared in the medical press which appear to suggest that Kent FPC is proposing to remunerate its GPs and modify its terms of service in accordance with a local contract rather than the contract approved by Parliament. Such suggestions are inaccurate. There is no question of any FPC drawing up an alternative contract to that set out in the NHS (General Medical and Pharmaceutical Services) Regulations as amended last year. Kent FPC has always understood that and is making its preparations on that basis.

Paramedics

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether ambulance paramedics trained under local schemes such as that operated by Torbay health authority will qualify for the £500 award.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Only staff with extended training to NHS training authority standard and required to use paramedical skills will be entitled to an additional payment of £500 a year under the terms of the management side's final offer. But the management side has also offered to discuss with the staff side recognition of staff with intermediate training with any payment agreed backdated to 1 April 1989.

Cancer Screening

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list in the Official Report those health authorities in the South East Thames regional health authority which (a) maintain a full breast screening service and (b) do not do so.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have asked health authorities to implement breast cancer screening services over the three years to 1990 and services will be provided to all district health authority areas. The table shows the three screening centres serving South East Thames regional health authority, the districts presently served, and the districts to which services will be extended in 1990.

Psychiatric Hospital Land

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how much land used by psychiatric hospitals in the South West regional health authority and Wessex regional health authority areas was sold in each year from 1985 to 1989; how much money was realised from each of these sales; what proportion of the proceeds was allocated to community care programmes and facilities for people with mental health problems; what these programmes and facilities were; and what the remaining proceeds were spent on;

(2) what land presently occupied by psychiatric hospitals in the South West and the Wessex regional health authority areas is to be sold over the next five years; what timetable is planned for these sales; and what plans are in place for the utilisation of the moneys produced.

Mr. Freeman: Property transactions are delegated to regional health authorities and information on sales and future sales of surplus NHS property and land is not collected centrally by functional group. To do so by means of a special exercise would involve disproportionate cost. The instruction to health authorities set out in "Property Transactions in the NHS" (a copy of which is in the Library) is that closures of hospitals for the mentally ill and handicapped must be preceded by the provision of comprehensive alternative services and that proceeds must be used specifically for the development of the alternative services.

Severn Clinic

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what response he has made to the request by the charity MIND for an investigation into the circumstances surrounding the closure of the Severn clinic at Wrington near Bristol and the operations of the owning company, Britannia Health Care; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The Department wrote to MIND on 5 January and that letter has been copied to the hon. Member. Health authorities' responsibility for private hospitals is limited to ensuring that there has been no breach of registration requirements. They are not empowered to investigate financial stability.

Chiropractors

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many complaints his Department received in the last full year for which there are records about chiropractic treatments; and how many of the complaints related to (a) qualified and (b) unqualified chiropractors.

Mr. Freeman: The Department received one complaint during the past year. It is understood that the practitioner concerned holds a chiropractic qualification.

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many representations he has received from members of the public calling for compulsory registration of chiropractors.

Mr. Freeman: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Taunton (Mr. Nicholson) on 13 December 1989 at columns 675-76.

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what qualifications are required of anyone who advertises treatment as a chiropractor.

Mr. Freeman: No qualifications restrictions are placed on chiropractors who are free to offer their services privately to the public subject only to those provisions of statute and civil law which apply.

Back Pain

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the estimated annual cost to the National Health Service of providing treatment to sufferers from back pain.

Mr. Freeman: This information is not available centrally.

Medicines Directive

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he intends to incorporate the provisions of the European Community directive 89/381/EEC into United Kingdom legislation; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: EEC directive 89/381, which is binding on all member states, was adopted on 14 June 1989 and requires member states to take measures necessary to comply with its provisions before 1 January 1992. We are currently examining what measures are necessary to give effect to the directive by that date.

Bioethics

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the members of the Council of Europe's ad hoc committee of experts on bioethical issues (CAHBI) and the countries from which they come.

Mr. Freeman: The membership of the Council of Europe's Ad Hoc Committee of Experts on Bioethics (CAHBI) is a matter for the member states concerned. At the last meeting in December 1989 the members were:

Austria
Dr. Renate Kausek
Mme Ingrid Djalinous

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those who represented the United Kingdom at the Council of Europe's first symposium on bioethics held in Strasbourg in December 1989; and if he will place in the Library papers presented and records of the proceedings.

Mr. Freeman: There were no formal representatives of the UK. However, Dr. Jeremy Metters, deputy chief medical officer, Department of Health, attended as chairman of CAHBI. There were in addition a number of independent participants from the United Kingdom at the symposium.

Papers and records of the proceedings have not yet been published by the Council of Europe. As soon as they become available they will be placed in the Library.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will state the procedures for appointment by member states of the Council of Europe of members of the CAHBI committee.

Mr. Freeman: Members are appointed by the member states of the Council of Europe.

Council of Europe

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been Her Majesty's Government's response to Council of Europe Parliamentary Assembly Recommendation 1100; and whether it has passed through the Council of Europe's internal consultative machinery.

Mr. Freeman: Her Majesty's Government have not yet been asked to respond to Recommendation 1100 of the Parliamentary Assembly which is still being considered within the Council of Europe's internal consultative machinery.

Medico-ethics

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether any proposals have been submitted by the European Commission on harmonisation of medico-ethical questions following the Ulburghs report adopted by the European Parliament Document A2-78/88.

Mr. Freeman: The European Commission has not made any proposals on harmonisation of medico-ethical questions following the Ulburghs report.

Meningitis

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of meningitis have been diagnosed in (a) under 18's and (b) over 18's in each of the last five years for which figures are available in (i) Suffolk, (ii) Norfolk, (iii) Essex, (iv) England and (v) the United Kingdom.

Mr. Freeman: Information is not available in the form requested. However, the available information on meningitis notifications is set out in the table.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the notification and action procedure for all doctors in a health authority area once a case of meningitis has been diagnosed.

Mr. Freeman: By regulations made under section 13 of the Public Health (Control of Disease) Act 1984, doctors are obliged to notify cases of meningococcal meningitis or septicaemia to the Medical Officer for Environmental Health or proper officer. The Chief Medical Officer wrote to all regional medical officers on 2 February 1988 asking them to ensure that they had action plans to deal with meningitis (PL/CMO (88)1). He also wrote to all doctors on 3 February 1988 to pass on expert advice on the epidemiology, early management and prevention of the spread of meningococcal infection. A copy of the Gloucester health authority leaflet on meningitis was enclosed with the letter (PL/CMO (88)2).

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice to parents his Department issues about meningitis (a) in general and (b) once a case has been confirmed.

Mr. Freeman: It is for health authorities to determine their own policy on issuing parents with advice about meningitis.

The Department recommends Gloucester health authority's "About Meningitis" leaflet and the Meningitis Trust's "Meningitis—the Facts". Both leaflets contain useful and clearly written information on meningitis and include a list of signs and symptoms of the disease. The Department values the work the Meningitis Trust does in promoting awareness of the disease, and the support it gives to sufferers' families.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps his Department will take to curtail a suspected outbreak of meningitis in Suffolk and Essex.

Mr. Freeman: This is a matter for the local directors of public health who are taking action in accordance with guidance issued by the Department's Chief Medical Officer.

Air Ambulance

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the total monthly running costs for the Cornwall Air Ambulance.

Mr. Freeman: This information is not held centrally. I understand that the running costs for air ambulance vary from month to month. The total annual cost is reported to be around £350,000.

Cerebral Palsy

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research he has commissioned to investigate the causes of cerebral palsy.

Mr. Freeman: The main agency through which the Government support biomedical and clinical research in the United Kingdom is the Medical Research Council. However, the following research, funded by Department of Health, includes investigation of causes into cerebral palsy together with other impairments.

The Oxford region child development study was funded by the Department between April 1983 and September 1989. It is a population-based register of pre-school impairment, including cerebral palsy. Data collected in this study established the prevalence rate of cerebral palsy and the register provides a framework for satellite studies which may look at causes of cerebral palsy. This register is currently funded by Oxford region health authority.

The Department has been funding the National Perinatal Epidemiology Unit, Oxford, which coordinates clinical trials as part of its functions, since 1989. Children who as babies participated in some trials have been followed up, enabling study of the causes of cerebral palsy.

A study at University College London (jointly funded by DH and MRC) is focusing on neurodevelopmental disorders in very small babies.

A study in Liverpool is looking at the long-term outcome in small babies.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps his Department is taking to monitor trends in cerebral palsy.

Mr. Freeman: The Department does not monitor trends in cerebral palsy on a national basis. However, we observe the results of local population based studies of such trends. Whether or not we need to monitor more closely is being considered in the larger context of the development of child health surveillance policies.

Ambulance Dispute

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in which health authorities have (a) the Army, (b) the police, (c) the Red Cross and (d) St. John Ambulances been deployed on ambulance duties.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 8 January 1990]: (a) On 15 January 1990 military vehicles were deployed in the following regional health authorities.

Trent RHA
North West Thames RHA
West Midlands RHA
Wessex RHA
North East Thames RHA
South West Thames RHA (including London)
Oxford RHA

(b) The police are assisting the ambulance services in the above authorities, and also in:

Northern RHA
Mersey RHA
Yorkshire RHA
South East Thames RHA

(c) Information on the assistance provided to health authorities by the Red Cross and St. John Ambulance service is not held centrally.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what date (a) the Army and (b) the police began performing ambulance duties.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 8 January 1990]: The Army began ambulance duties on 7 December 1989 and the police on 23 October 1989.

DEFENCE

Laser Weapons

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what investigations his Department has carried out, or is aware of, into the effects of laser or other dazzle light on the eyes and brain functions of human beings; and what are the results of such investigations.

Mr. Neubert: MOD research establishments have studied the effects of lasers and other high power light sources on human eyes. This research is continuing, with particular reference to quantifying the impact of such sources, and to devising techniques to counter these effects.

Faslane

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the incident in early December when a Royal Navy vessel was damaged and had to return to Faslane; and whether any inquiry has been instigated.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No Royal Navy vessel returned to Faslane due to damage during December.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are his plans to insert a magnetic facility in the middle of the loch at Faslane; for how long this facility would be in use per annum; and what restrictions will apply to those who live on boats or sail yachts on the loch.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In order to remove the magnetic signature, which is acquired by all steel-hulled vessels, submarines are required to undergo periodic treatments. While existing arrangements meet the present requirement, these will be incapable of treating the larger Vanguard class of submarine. A new magnetic treatment facility is, therefore, required and this will be permanently located at a position in the Gareloch some 305 metres off Rowmore Point which meets the operational requirement and is sufficiently far away from other constructions with a steel content.

Following completion, which is planned for the end of 1992, up to 30 treatments per year are expected to be necessary with each treatment likely to last up to two days. It will be necessary to establish an exclusion zone around the facility of 160m to the west and north. To the east, the exclusion zone will join the existing prohibited zone around the Faslane base. The resulting proposed amendment to the Ministry of Defence byelaws will be the subject of consultation and advertisement in the normal way. Outside the prohibited zone, it is not expected that there will be any restrictions on those who live on boats or sail yachts on the loch; a residual channel will allow navigation to and from Garelochhead.

Gareloch

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans, and for what purpose, his Department has to dredge a channel at the mouth of Gareloch; and what effect this will have upon Rhuspit site of special scientific interest.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Work has started on improving the existing access channel to the Clyde submarine base Faslane through the Rhu Narrows. The work is necessary in order to permit safe transit in all tidal states by the larger Vanguard class submarines being introduced as part of the Trident programme. The dredging will have no detrimental affect on the nearby site of special scientific interest.

Soviet Nuclear Test Site

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has received any invitation from his counterpart in the Soviet Union to visit the Soviet nuclear test site at Semipalatinsk.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No.

Flora and Fauna

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his Department's participation in the project to film a major wildlife documentary series on the fauna and flora of the defence estate.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Ministry of Defence takes its responsibilities towards the conservation of its estate very seriously. The diversity of habitats means that many rare and uncommon species are to be found on defence land and a number of wildlife documentary programmes have either already been made, or are in the process of production. It is hoped, in due course, to complement these individual programmes with a major series.

Property Services Agency

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the £9 million increase in his Department's budget relating to the costs of privatisation of the Property Services Agency; and if he will give details.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The £9,182,000 increase in the Ministry of Defence's cash limit for 1989-90 to which the hon. Member refers is not connected with the decision to privatise the Property Services Agency announced on 26 October 1989. It is the share borne on Class 1, Vote 4 of additional expenditure arising from the reorganisation of the PSA on more commercial lines in preparation for Government Departments being untied for works services from 1 April 1990. The principal areas of expenditure covered information technology support, the setting up of the Business Development Directorate and the taking over of some functions of the Crown Suppliers such as the Government car service.

Tynedale Hunt

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action is to be taken following an entry by the Tynedale hunt through Albermarle barracks, Stamfordham, on 1 January.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None. The Tynedale hunt has a licence to hunt in this area.

Trooper Wayne Cross

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will exercise clemency to give early release to Trooper Wayne Cross, found guilty of being absent without leave at a court martial at Tidworth barracks on 16 January.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Trooper Wayne Cross presented a petition to the confirming officers against the sentence of the court-martial court. His case is therefore under consideration by the appropriate military authorities.

Absences Without Leave

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the average term of imprisonment imposed on service men found guilty of being absent without leave over the last five years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There have been no cases in recent years of a court-martial awarding imprisonment for absence without leave. The usual punishment is military detention, which is a form of corrective training, with or without dismissal from Her Majesty's service.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what rights of appeal there are for service men found guilty of being absent without leave.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A soldier found guilty of absence without leave may present a petition against finding and/or sentence to the confirming officer before confirmation. After confirmation, he has the further right to present a petition to the reviewing authority in respect of finding or sentence or both. Finally, he has the right to petition against finding to the Army Board of the Defence Council as a first step to having his case heard by the courts-martial appeal court. A soldier who is convicted by court-martial is required by Queens Regulations to be given a pamphlet explaining his rights of petition and appeal. Comparable appeal arrangements exist for the other two services.

Ships (Nuclear Weapons)

Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the implications of the recent experiment on the Black sea, in which short-range passive methods were used to supplement long-range detectors to verify the presence of nuclear weapons on board surface ships for the policy by successive United Kingdom Governments neither to confirm or deny the presence of such weapons on board United Kingdom vessels.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are no implications for our policy neither to confirm nor to deny the presence of nuclear weapons in particular ships at particular times.

Namibia

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has received any request from the new Government of Namibia to provide training for Namibia's armed forces.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Kingswood (Mr. Hayward) on 10 January at column 939.

Military Training

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what instructions are issued to those participating in mud runs in relation to heat stress.

Mr. Archie Hamilton [holding answer 15 January 1990]: All participants in diver training will have been instructed on the recognition and first aid treatment of heat-related illness, and other preventive measures include regular reminders to instructors of the problems associated with heat exhaustion and heat stroke; a minimum interval of two hours between normal physical training and training across mud; the participants' being bareheaded as an aid to body cooling; and the provision of a standby vehicle in case urgent medical evacuation should be necessary.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what representations have been received calling for the cessation of mud runs; and what advice he has received regarding their value and purpose;

(2) whether mud runs are being used in (a) aptitude tests and (b) training in the armed forces.

Mr. Archie Hamilton [holding answer 15 January 1990]: There may be a requirement, in operations, for divers in the Royal Navy and the Army to cross mud at speed or carrying heavy equipment, and their training necessarily reflects this. Moreover, this form of training is valuable in developing the qualities required generally of military divers, whose work is arduous and potentially dangerous. However, mud runs are no longer used during aptitude tests.

I am not aware of any representations calling for the cessation of mud runs having been received in 1989, but one letter on this subject has been received from an hon. Member this year.

Procurement

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list his Department's major procurement purchases which have followed competitive tendering in each year since 1984.

Mr. Alan Clark [pursuant to his reply, 16 January 1990, c. 136]: The following further information is now available:

1989 'AS90' Self Propelled Howitzer.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action has been taken by the EEC to fulfil its general agreement on tariffs and trade commitment to participate in substantial progressive reductions in agricultural support and protection.

Mr. Curry: The Community, in common with other GATT members, has tabled proposals for reform of agricultural policies. Negotiations in the GATT round are continuing.

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the trend in common agricultural policy support prices, expressed in national currencies, for cereals and dairy products in each member state over the past three years.

Mr. Curry: The buying-in prices for common wheat and the intervention prices for butter over the last three years are given in the table. Prices are in national currencies per tonne, applicable at the start of each marketing year. No figures are supplied for Portugal, since cereals and dairy products are not supplied to intervention in that country.

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the EEC proposal in the current general agreement on tariffs and trade negotiations that an agricultural price freeze is sufficient to meet its short-term commitment to reduce agricultural support and protection levels in 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The United Kingdom expects reforms in the CAP which have been agreed in recent years to result in aggregate levels of support in 1990 consistent with the Community's short-term GATT obligations.

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether the EEC uses the producer subsidy equivalent for the purpose of calculating total agricultural support; and why its outline proposals for agricultural reform tabled in the general agreement on tariffs and trade Uruguay round, measure reductions against a 1986 starting level.

Mr. Curry: The European Commission uses an aggregate measure of support known as the support measurement unit which is based on the OECD's producer subsidy equivalent. A 1986 starting level reflects agreement that credit is to be given for measures taken since the current GATT round was launched.

Fish Disease

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentage of (a) dab, (b) flounder, (c) cod, (d) herring and (e) plaice caught in water around the United Kingdom showed evidence of disease for each of the ad hoc surveys conducted since 1980 by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, together with the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland.

Mr. Curry: Since 1980, the Department's surveys for fish diseases in water around the United Kingdom have shown wide differences in prevalence between fish species. For dab and flounder, external diseases are recorded at higher prevalence rates than in cod, herring or any other species.

The prevalence rates of disease vary not only between species but in relation to abundance, size, sex, spawning state and food availability. For dab and flounder, up to 10 per cent. prevalence would be expected in some areas, and then fluctuations would be expected according to the season. For cod, diseases are noted only when the migrations occur inshore during the autumn. At this time approximately 10 per cent. has been recorded, but this figure varies between years. Diseases in herring are rare, that is, less than 1 per cent. in all our surveys.

Monitoring prevalence of disease in marine fish is only useful when it is made over an extended time period, and when all biological and physical parameters have been taken into account. We know that all current diseases in the above species have been documented since the turn of the century.

Grants

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the total cost of grants to farmers from the Agricultural Development Advisory Service for each of the past 10 years, together with equivalent figures in other European Community nations.

Mr. Curry: Grants to farmers in the United Kingdom under common agricultural policy and United Kingdom national schemes for the years 1984-85 to 1988-89 (forecast) are set out in the publication "Agriculture in the United Kingdom 1988". Figures for preceding years are contained in the annual review of agriculture White Papers. Forecasts for 1989-90 are contained in the Supply Estimates. No comparable figures are available for other European Community nations, but any schemes which they operate have to comply with the appropriate EC legislation or be approved by the Commission under articles 92 to 94 of the treaty.

Radioactive Contamination

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether his Department will introduce monitoring of the levels of radioactive contamination in sheep sold from derestricted areas bordering those areas where bans have been in operation.

Mr. Maclean: Periodic surveys are carried out immediately outside the restricted areas in England and Wales to confirm the continuing validity of the boundaries set. There is no case for special, additional, monitoring of sheep sold from outside the restricted areas.

Milk Lorries

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will meet representatives of the Direct Sellers Co-operative Limited to discuss milk lorries.

Mr. Curry: I have no such plans.

Cattle Offal

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what restrictions he has imposed on the export of cattle offal from the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: I have imposed no restrictions on the export of cattle offal from the United Kingdom. Within the limits of Community rules where they apply, it is up to importing countries to determine the conditions under which such imports may take place.

Microwave Ovens

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) whether he will conduct his own research into the effects of microwave oven heating on food containing amino acids; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether he will conduct his own research to ascertain the chemical effects of microwave oven heating on milk; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: No. I gave a clear explanation of my Department's views of Professor Lubec's research on 13 December 1989, Official Report, column 698. I have no new information at this time that would justify my Department conducting its own research in this area.

Food Surpluses

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his latest estimate of the amount which the European Economic Community is spending per week on the storage, destruction and dumping of food surpluses; what is the comparable sum actually spent per week, five and 10 years previously; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: European Community expenditure in 1990 on storage, withdrawal and export refunds for agricultural products is expected to be about £9,000 million, or £173 million per week. Comparable figures for 1985 are £6,965 million (£134 million per week) and for 1980 £4,610 million (£89 million per week).

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the reasons for refusing the Cumbria county council trading standards department details of the movements in Cumbria of cows found to be suffering from bovine spongiform encephalopathy.

Mr. Maclean: The handling and, if necessary, the investigation of cases of bovine spongiform encephalopathy is the responsibility of the Ministry. Details of individual cases are held in confidence.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has about the extent of the use of bovine products in the pharmaceutical and cosmetic industries; whether such use includes the use of offals banned from human consumption; whether he has any estimate of the amount of such products; and whether there are any controls, either current or proposed, to regulate such use.

Mr. Maclean: Returns from the pharmaceutical industry confirm that only a small percentage of their products include materials of bovine and other animal origin. I have no comparable information about the cosmetic industry. Bovine offals account for only a small proportion of the animal material and they are mainly imported from countries where bovine spongiform encephalopathy has not been detected. The Southwood committee concluded that the risk of transmitting bovine spongiform encephalopathy via medicines appears remote and theoretical, but as a precautionary measure, special guidelines from the Committee on Safety of Medicines and the Veterinary Products Committee on the use of bovine materials in the production of medicines were circulated to pharmaceutical companies last March. If any evidence were to be found that a medicinal product might be unsafe, Ministers have powers under the Medicines Act to revoke or suspend the licence.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all those animal species which are currently or proposed to be researched with a view to determining susceptibility to spongiform encephalopathy from scrapie of bovine spongiform encephalopathy sources.

Mr. Maclean: The following animal species are currently or proposed to be the subject of transmission experiments to determine their susceptibility to bovine spongiform encephalopathy:

Cattle
Sheep
Goats
Pigs
Chickens
Marmosets
Mink
Hamsters
Mice

Research on species' susceptibility to scrapie is being funded at the AFRC/MRC neuropathogenesis unit through the science budget.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will detail work being undertaken to develop a diagnostic test for bovine spongiform encephalopathy in the live and clinically affected animal.

Mr. Maclean: Bovine spongiform encephalopathy is currently diagnosed on the basis of histopathology in the brain of clinically infected animals. MAFF is funding research to develop diagnostic tests in the live, pre-clinical affected animal using molecular biological techniques. This research is being carried out at MAFF's central veterinary laboratory, Weybridge and the AFRC-MRC neuropathogenesis unit in Edinburgh. Relevant slow virus research is being funded at the neuropathogenesis unit through the science budget.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he is currently researching into the effects of scrapie-infected material being incorporated into feeding compounds for pigs and chickens; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The Southwood working party pointed out that no naturally occurring spongiform encephalopathies had been recorded in pigs and poultry and did not suggest that action was necessary to stop the use of ruminant protein in their feed. However, it was suggested that further research should be carried out and MAFF is conducting transmission experiments to investigate the susceptibility of pigs and poultry to bovine spongiform encephalopathy.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he intends researching into the infectivity of organs and tissues from bovine spongiform encephalopathy-infected cattle other than those currently banned from human consumption; and which such organs he regards as his research priority.

Mr. Maclean: MAFF will be funding research into the infectivity of the full range of organs and tissues from bovine spongiform encephalopathy-infected cattle not currently banned from human consumption.

Priority will be given to those organs and tissues consumed by humans in significant quantities, to confirm their safety as currently assessed from research on scrapie. Tissues of possible relevance in the transmission of the disease in cattle will also be tested.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he received the interim report of the Tyrell committee on research into bovine spongiform encephalopathy; and why he decided not to make the report immediately available to the public.

Mr. Maclean: The report was received on 16 June 1989. It makes many recommendations on a wide range of research topics which necessitated detailed, and inevitably time-consuming, study to enable a properly considered response in respect of the work to be done and its funding. There have, however, been no delays and a good deal of the most important research is already under way.

Enzymes

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy for meat which has been treated with proteolytic enzymes, or which is derived from an animal that has been so treated, to be labelled with the words treated with vegetable enzymes.

Mr. Maclean: I have no plans to do so. The hon. Member's suggestion does not seem to offer any particular improvement in terms of consumer understanding over the present requirement to describe meat so treated as "tenderised".

Veterinary Manpower

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he will make a decision on the Page report on veterinary manpower.

Mr. Maclean: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science and the Minister will be making an announcement shortly.

Standing Veterinary Committee

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how the standing veterinary committee of the EEC is constituted; and how he ensures that Her Majesty's Government's views are represented at this committee.

Mr. Maclean: The arrangements for the operation of the standing veterinary committee are contained in a Council decision of 15 October 1968. Attendance by Government officials ensures that the views of the United Kingdom are fully represented.

Agricultural Products (Trade)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food under what EEC provision the West German Government have banned the import of beef from the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maclean: The German Government have not banned imports of beef from the United Kingdom. I do not consider that the conditions they have imposed on such imports are consistent with Community rules.

Tyrell Committee

64. Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his policy towards the recommendations of the Tyrell committee that the results of all research should be open for scrutiny and published at the appropriate time.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) on 16 January col. 217.

Scrapie

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research is currently being undertaken into the incidence of scrapie; and whether he has any programme to reduce such incidence.

Mr. Maclean: Scrapie has existed in this country for many years and no specific research into its incidence is currently being undertaken. Advice is available to farmers from ADAS on the control of the disease and flock owners may participate in a monitoring scheme under the Ministry's sheep and goat health scheme. Work is being undertaken at both the central veterinary laboratory and the neuropathogenesis unit to develop a diagnosis test. Work is being funded through the science budget to evaluate the genetic predisposition of sheep to scrapie. In addition, MAFF continues to fund work on a scrapie-resistant flock to assess the potential of breeding programmes for control and reduction of the incidence of scrapie in sheep.

Cattle Semen (Exports)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what restrictions currently apply to the export of semen from British cattle.

Mr. Maclean: The animal health conditions covering the export of semen are established by negotiation with the importing country. These may include confirmation of freedom from certain disease in relation to the collection centre and the donor, its herd of origin or the country as a whole and specific requirements in relation to the method of collection. In almost all cases the importing country will require the semen to be accompanied by an export health certificate signed by an official veterinarian to confirm that the necessary conditions have been met.

The United States, Australia, New Zealand, Sweden and Iran have currently suspended imports of bovine semen from Great Britain because of concerns about bovine spongiform encephalopathy.

North Sea Conference

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the proposals he will be putting to the North sea conference later in the current year.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I have been asked to reply.

One of the main objectives of the third North sea conference is to review the work undertaken by member states in implementing the recommendations of the second North sea conference held in London 1987. As with its predecessor, the third conference will review all the major activities with an impact on the marine environment, including discharges of dangerous substances via rivers and the atmosphere, nutrients, dumping, shipping and offshore installations. The United Kingdom has taken a very full part in preparations for the conference and I am confident that the conference declaration, which will be the product of work by all the North sea states, will include valuable new measures, including a number proposed by the United Kingdom.

Cetaceans

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has made an assessment of the reason for the deaths within the last 12 months of seals in the Liverpool bay area.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I have been asked to reply.

An assessment carried out by Liverpool university department of veterinary pathology on the basis of post-mortem examinations shows that viral or bacterial pneumonia was the commonest cause of death in seals washed ashore in this period.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what species of cetaceans are known to inhabit the Liverpool bay area; whether any species previously logged within the last 25 years are now thought to have disappeared from the area; and if he will provide any readily accessible information to indicate changes in estimated population levels of all species of cetaceans in the Liverpool bay area over the past 25 years.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I have been asked to reply.

In United Kingdom waters generally there is as yet no reliable population and status information on small cetacean species although valuable data are available from sightings and strandings reporting schemes. Recent reports do not suggest that cetaceans are resident in Liverpool bay, but migratory animals are reported. In the last five years Liverpool university department of veterinary pathology has examined stranded animals from the following species:

Pilot whale
Bottle-nosed dolphin
White-beaked dolphin
White-sided dolphin
Common porpoise

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether dead seals from the Liverpool bay area within the last 12 months showed evidence of blocked uterine ducts.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I have been asked to reply.

I understand that work carried out by Liverpool university department of veterinary pathology indicates that two out of a total of 12 dead seals washed ashore in the Liverpool bay in the last 12 months have been found to have blocked uterine ducts. There is no evidence that this contributed to the animals' death.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Hardship Payments

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people under 25 years have received hardship payments from his Department's office in Durham since October 1988.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I regret that the information requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Independent Living Fund

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will list by month since 1986 to date, for his Department's offices in (a) Doncaster and (b) Wath on Dearne (i) the number of independent living fund payments made and (ii) the amounts paid;

(2) if he will list by year since 1986 to date for his Department's offices in (a) Doncaster and (b) Wath on Dearne what surplus has remained from the independent living fund.

Mr. Scott: The independent living fund was established in June 1988. It is a charity which is administered centrally from Nottingham under the guidance of its trustees. Information on the number of payments and amounts paid is not available by local office area.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether any reviews are being made by his Department of the independent living fund.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Exeter (Mr. Hannam) on 10 January at column 657.

Actors

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received from actors reluctant to accept contracts in excess of eight weeks for fear of losing full entitlement to the payment of mortgage interest if subsequently unemployed; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Department has no record of any such representations.

Mrs. I. E. Hart

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he hopes to make a decision with regard to the back payment of the widow's pension for Mrs. I. E. Hart of 21 Greenswood road, Brixham, Devon; and if he will make a statement as to the reason for the delay.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I am grateful to my hon. Friend for bringing this matter to my attention. Mrs. Hart's case is a complicated one which involves inquiries going back a number of years. However, I have to say that there has been an unacceptable delay in the handling of her case, and for this I offer Mrs. Hart my apologies. Urgent action is now being taken to put this right. A member of the Department's management at Torbay local office will visit Mrs. Hart today to explain the reasons, and apologise for the delay. The local office manager will write to my hon. Friend as soon as the case has been resolved.

Budget and Crisis Loans

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what number of claimants on income support were repaying a budgeting or crisis loan for each month since January 1989; and what number of (a) one-parent families, (b) sick and disabled claimants, (c) pensioners and (d) unemployed claimants on income support were repaying a budgeting or crisis loan for each month since January 1989.

Mr. Scott: The information available is given in the table. The figures represent the number of loans being repaid on the last day of each month.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total amount of budget or crisis loans to claimants on income support for each month since January 1989.

Mr. Scott: The information available is set out in the table. The information represents the amounts outstanding on the last day of each calendar month.

Statutory Sick Pay

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what information he has concerning the impact on people's incomes of not receiving sick benefit or statutory sick pay during the first three days of any absence from work due to illness.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Advertising

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his latest estimate of the total cost of advertising by his Department in 1987-88, 1988-89 and 1989-90; and what is his planned expenditure for 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The total cost of advertising in the year 1987-88 was £0·82 million; in 1988-89 it was £4·57 million. In 1989-90 the planned expenditure is expected to be £7·16 million; the estimate for 1990-91 is £4·1 million. The forecast for 1991-92 is £7·4 million.

Social Fund (Wales)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many local Department of Social Security offices have reported overspending on money allocated for social fund payments in Wales in each county; and which offices have overspent by more than 10 per cent.

Mr. Scott: No social security office has overspent its allocation for social fund loans and grants for 1989-90.

Earnings Limit

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether unemployed people were given advance warning of the effect that the £43 earnings limit might have on their benefit entitlement if they worked for one or more days in the week preceding 10 December 1989.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: People are only required to declare their earnings at the end of the benefit week in which they work. It would not have been possible to identify individuals who may have had earnings in the week commencing 3 December 1989 prior to the declaration of these earnings in week commencing 10 December 1989.

Pension Fund Surpluses

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what he estimates has been the level of aggregate pension fund surpluses each year since 1979.

Mr. Lilley: I have been asked to reply.

Information is not available in the form requested. The table gives information on large self-administered pension funds reporting to the Inland Revenue action which they propose to take to remove surpluses following the provisions of the Finance Act 1986.

Note: The amounts shown in the final column represent figures for schemes reporting to the Inland Revenue in each year. They do not provide a basis for estimating the aggregate level of pension fund surpluses.

ENVIRONMENT

Chemical Discharges

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to reply to the letter of 27 November 1989, from the hon. Member for Stretford in his capacity as honorary secretary of the north-west group of Labour hon. Members of Parliament, requesting a meeting with him and a delegation from that group to discuss accidents involving the discharge of harmful chemicals; and if he intends to meet a delegation.

Mr. Trippier: I have written to the hon. Member today.

Hylands Park, Chelmsford

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment pursuant to the answer on 15 January concerning the date of the public inquiry on the Hylands park, Chelmsford, planning application, what negotiations he is referring to in his answer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: The negotiations are being undertaken by Chelmsford borough council with the Sue Ryder Foundation and other parties, in the light of the objections to the present planning applications, and with the aim of submitting revised proposals. Those revised proposals are expected to reduce the issues which need to be considered at the public inquiry, with savings on its duration and costs.

Catnip

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he is taking concerning the smoking of the herb catnip.

Mr. Mellor: I have been asked to reply.

None. The herb catnip is not a controlled drug and I am not aware of any evidence to suggest that it gives rise to such harmful effects that it ought to be considered for control under the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the average delays for elderly people waiting for housing benefit determinations; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I have been asked to reply.

I regret that information is not collected in the form requested. Local authorities have statutory responsibility for determining housing benefit claims. Returns for the financial year 1988-89 have not yet been received from all local authorities, but the information available indicates that 75 per cent. of all claims for housing benefit have been processed within 14 days.

Source: Housing benefit management information system.

Uniform Business Rate

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the estimated level of unified business rate payments due to metropolitan district councils in 1990-91; and what was the income from the business rate in 1989-90.

Mr. Chope: Tables placed in the Library on 11 January show that under our proposals business rates payable to metropolitan district councils from the non-domestic rate pool total £2·4 billion in 1990-91. The estimated amount to be raised from non-domestic properties in metropolitan districts in 1989-90 is £2·1 billion.

Electrical Contractors

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to reach a conclusion about the proposals of the Electrical Contractors Association for reciprocal recognition of electrical contractors in the single European market; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: We are considering the proposals put forward by the association and hope to reach a conclusion shortly.

Energy and Environment Research Unit

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he, or any ministers in his Department, have any plans to meet the director and staff of the energy and environment research unit at the Open university.

Mr. Trippier: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has no plans to visit the energy and environment research unit at the Open university in the immediate future.

Private Bills

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his discussions with the Nature Conservancy Council on the use of private Bills to circumvent planning issues.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My right hon. Friend has had no discussions with the Nature Conservancy Council on the use of private Bills to circumvent planning issues. The Government's initial response to the Joint Committee's report on private Bill procedures (HC 625, Session 1987-88) was given by the Leader of the House in the debate on 20 April 1989.

Conservation Programmes

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what curtailment has taken place in the programmes for (a) marine conservation and (b) urban nature conservation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The development of marine and urban nature conservation programmes is primarily for the Nature Conservancy Council. It is for NCC to decide where its priorities lie and to implement them in accordance with its corporate plan, copies of which have been placed in the Library.

Drinking Water

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his proposals for the protection of drinking water in the light of the recommendations of the report of the Lowermoor incident health advisory group.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Following publication of the report of the Lowermoor incident health advisory group (LIHAG), the Department wrote to all the water undertakers in England drawing their attention to its conclusions and recommendations. The substance of LIHAG's recommendation No. 8 requiring a water undertaker to notify the relevant health authorities without delay of any incidents such as Lowermoor had already been included in the Water Supply (Water Quality) Regulations 1989 (SI. No. 1147). The water undertakers were asked to confirm that the remaining recommendations, Nos. 7 and 9, relating to water supply had been or were being incorporated into their standard procedures. I am pleased to report that they have confirmed that these recommendations had been or were being implemented.

Environmentally Friendly Building Materials

Mr. Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce an incentive scheme for developers, builders and specifiers to use environmentally friendly materials and techniques when maintaining the existing building stock; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has no plans to introduce such a scheme.

Occupiers of domestic, commercial and industrial buildings are increasingly demanding evidence of the "green" credentials of their properties. Many of the nation's major developers, builders and specifiers have recognised this and are responding to this market demand.

Compensation

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will publish in the Official Report the time scale for making changes to current compensation arrangements for those individuals and institutions affected by road and rail building projects.

Mr. Moynihan: We are currently considering proposals for changes in land compensation arrangements in the light of the responses received to the Department's consultation paper of 7 March 1989. Any proposals to change the law will be introduced at the earliest suitable opportunity.

Property Services Agency

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what accounts and bill-paying functions are currently performed by the Property Services Agency at Hastings; how many staff are engaged on this work; and what arrangements are being considered for the future of this work and the staff.

Mr. Chope: Currently 366 staff are employed on the following accounts and bill-paying functions by the Property Services Agency at Hastings:

a. Payment of contractors' accounts for construction and maintenance work at civil central Government properties and defence establishments, including United States bases, in the United Kingdom.
b. Payment of fees to consultants engaged by PSA and suppliers of materials and equipment.
c. Payment of gas, water and electricity accounts for the central Government civil estate.
d. Payment of rents for leasehold civil estate properties.
e. Calculation and payment of salaries to PSA and DOE non-industrial staff.
f. Payment of travelling etc claims to PSA employees.
g. Invoicing clients for works services supplied on payment terms, tenants for rents and services charges, and government departments for accommodation, gas, water and electricity charges on the civil estate.
h. Maintenance of costing, management information and vote accounting records, the latter incorporating expenditure by PSA overseas.
i. Supply of information about expenditure on properties and projects, administration cost budgets, vote subheads to PSA divisions.
j. Supply of expenditure information to other departments.
k. Operation of resource costing management information systems, and supply of information.

Firm decisions have not yet been taken about the location of the accounting functions which will support the operating divisions of PSA Services and Property Holdings, but it is likely that some functions will be dispersed to local units of the operating divisions. Responsibility for the payment of gas, water and electricity accounts is currently being transferred to Departments. The agency will make every effort to find other posts, in PSA or in other Departments, for staff whose posts are no longer required as a result of these changes.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what work DITMOS is carrying out for the Property Services Agency; how many staff are engaged on this work; when the work will be complete; and what arrangements will be made to find alternative work for DITMOS staff.

Mr. Chope: PSA's directorate of information technology management and office systems (DITMOS) provides the agency with a range of IT and business support services. Its headquarters is in Hastings and it currently has some 490 staff in post. This number is likely to reduce over the next two to three years. It will then stabilise at a level reflecting the need for continuing systems support.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he intends to keep open the option of compulsorily transferring the Property Services Agency's executive, administrative and support staff to the Government-owned company.

Mr. Chope: If PSA is incorporated as a Government-owned company it is intended that the staff in it will be transferred by a scheme under clause 1 of the Property Services Agency and Crown Suppliers Bill. The PSA will use its best endeavours, in advance of that incorporation, to find other posts within Government for staff who do not wish to transfer.

Politically Restricted Posts

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment by what date local authorities must complete the list of politically restricted posts referred to in section 2(2) of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989.

Mr. David Hunt: By section 2(4) of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989, local authorities must deposit their first list under section 2(2) with the proper officer of the authority by 29 January. Thereafter they must maintain the list, and from time to time deposit any necessary modifications with the proper officer.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he issued the consultation document

"Restrictions on Public Political Activity by Senior Local Government Staff", what was the last date for submissions on the document; and when he will issue his response.

Mr. David Hunt: The answers are as follows: 2 October 1989; 27 November 1989 (although we agreed to consider later submissions); soon.

Local Government and Housing Act 1989

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many Government amendments were made to the Local Government and Housing Act 1989.

Mr. David Hunt: The figure is 1,037.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on what date the Local Government and Housing Act 1989 was published.

Mr. David Hunt: The date was 6 December 1989.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to publish the regulations to be made under section 1(5) of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989.

Mr. David Hunt: As soon as possible.

Sellafield (Waste Discharges)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consents are held by British Nuclear Fuels plc for the discharge of non-radioactive toxic wastes from Sellafield; what is the annual volume of each such waste discharged from Sellafield; and what changes in consents have been necessitated by the Water Act 1989.

Mr. Trippier: I shall write to the hon. Member shortly.

BNFL Plants

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps are taken to ensure that British Nuclear Fuels plc plants at Sellafield, Springfields, Capenhurst and Chapel Cross are operated within the appropriate regulations under the Alkali Works Regulation Act 1906, the Radioactive Substances Act 1960, the Nuclear Installations Act 1965, the Health and Safety at Work etc Act 1974, the Control of Pollution Act 1974, the Control of Pollution (Special Wastes) Regulations 1980 and the Treaty of the European Atomic Energy Community (the 1957 Euratom Treaty).

Mr. Trippier: I shall write to the hon. Member shortly.

Radioactive Waste (Clifton Marsh)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what volumes of radioactive waste are currently disposed of at Clifton Marsh; what radionuclides are deposited; how many bequerels of (a) gamma, (b) beta and (c) alpha radioactivity are at the site; and when disposal of radioactive waste was first begun at Clifton Marsh.

Mr. Trippier: Radioactive wastes disposed of at Clifton Marsh originate from British Nuclear Fuels plc's plant at Capenhurst and Springfields and are measured by weight (tonnes) not by volume. In 1988 a total of 10,000 tonnes was disposed of which equates to approximately 6,600 sq. m.

Uranium and its short-lived daughter radionuclides are authorised for disposal at Clifton Marsh.

It is estimated that for the period up to 1988 0·7 terabecquerels of alpha activity and less than or equal to 0·7 terabecquerels of beta/gamma activity have been disposed of at Clifton Marsh.

Disposals at Clifton Marsh commenced in 1974.

Community Charge

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the highest sums (a) per local authority and (b) per community charge payer, being paid under the safety net arrangements to (i) a London borough and (ii) non-London local authorities in England; what is the sum being paid or received in the London borough of Newham (1) in total and (2) per community charge payer; and if he will illustrate his calculations relating to the levels of each of these receipts or payments.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 17 January 1990]: Under our proposals the highest sums to be paid under the safety net arrangements to a London borough is £32·96 million to Greenwich; and to a non-London local authority in England is £38·57 million to Sheffield.

When divided by relevant population, the highest amounts paid are £212 to Greenwich and £138 to Calderdale.

The London borough of Newham would contribute £3·06 million to the safety net, a payment of £19 per charge payer.

A description of the calculation of the safety net contributions and receipts can be found in the annex to the revenue support grant transition report (England) laid before the House on 11 January 1990.

Standard Spending Assessments

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each local education authority in England the standard spending assessments in the categories and sub-categories (a) education, (b) under-fives, (c) primary schools, (d) secondary schools, (e) 16 to 19-year-olds and (f) other.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 18 January 1990]: I have today placed in the Library a table showing 1990-91 standard spending assessments for under-fives education, primary education, secondary education, post-16 education, other education and all education services; for each local education authority in England.

Lancashire County Council

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total amount his Department estimated Lancashire county council should have collected from commerce and industry in rates during 1989-90; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 19 January 1990]: The amount expected to be raised by Lancashire county council from commercial and industrial ratepayers in 1989-90 is £101 million.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his best estimate of the total cost in 1990-91 of exempting all YTS trainees from liability to pay the poll tax.

Mr. David Hunt [holding answer 16 January 1990]: The gross cost of exempting all YTS trainees before any allowance for community charge benefit would be about £20 million. This assumes a total of 73,250 YTS trainees liable to pay the community charge.

Virtually all non-employed trainees, and a proportion of employed trainees, would be entitled to community charge benefit.

DEFENCE

Nuclear Accidents

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what accidents with nuclear weapons involving United States military forces, aircraft or ships and submarines afforded operational rights on United Kingdom territory have taken place on United Kingdom territory or in United Kingdom territorial waters since 1979.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There has never been an accident in United Kingdom territory involving damage to a United States nuclear weapon.

Low Flying

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many low-flying sorties by military jet aircraft of the NATO air forces, were carried out for the last year for which he has figures; and what were the figures for (a) five years and (b) 10 years ago;

(2) how many low-flying sorties by military jet aircraft of the Royal Air Force were carried out for the last year for which he has figures; and what was the figure (a) five years and (b) 10 years ago.

Mr. Neubert: Central records are not held in a form which would allow the information requested to be readily provided. Of the total number of low-flying sorties carried out in the United Kingdom low flying system in 1988, 84 per cent. were carried out by British military aircraft, 15 per cent. by United States aircraft based in the United Kingdom and under 2 per cent. by other NATO aircraft and others by special agreement.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are (a) the minimum and (b) the maximum heights authorised by his Department for low-flying sorties by military jet aircraft over the United Kingdom.

Mr. Neubert: Low-flying training by military jet aircraft in the United Kingdom low flying system normally take place between the heights of 2,000 ft and 250 ft. A limited amount of training by military jet aircraft is also authorised down to 100 ft in three specially designated areas in northern Scotland, central Wales and the Borders.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the criteria laid down by his Department for low-flying sorties by military jet aircraft over the United Kingdom, carried out by (a) the Royal Air Force and (b) other NATO air forces.

Mr. Neubert: The United Kingdom low flying system is primarily reserved for low-flying training by British military and United Kingdom-based United States air force aircraft. Other NATO air forces carry out some limited low-flying training in the United Kingdom, normally associated with exercises or on an exchange basis, but this element accounts for under 2 per cent. of the total low-flying activity in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether there has been any increase in the amount of low-flying activity over the Hexham constituency during the past year and during the past five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: Central records are not held in a form which would allow the information requested to be provided. The overall amount of low-flying activity in the United Kingdom did, however, increase in the years up to 1986, largely as a result of the introduction into service of the Tornado GR1 aircraft, but has been reasonably constant since then. I have no reason to believe that this position was not reflected in the Hexham constituency.

Ethnic Minority Recruitment

Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he is able to make a statement on the outcome of the study into ethnic minority recruitment into the armed services.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A copy of the report by independent consultants has today been placed in the Library of the House.

The report was commissioned by the MOD after a survey had revealed that only 1·1 per cent. of recruits to the armed forces during 1987-88 came from the ethnic minorities. My hon. Friend the Member for Kettering (Mr. Freeman) made clear at the time his wish to see more members of the ethnic minorities joining the services and asked the consultants to advise on why comparatively few applied to the services, why their applications were less likely to succeed and how the situation could be improved.

The report falls into three parts. The first deals with the results of research designed to establish attitudes towards employment generally and towards employment in the armed forces in particular. The results suggest that in most respects the attitudes of young people from the ethnic minorites are not markedly different from those of their white counterparts. However, they are less likely to consider a career in the armed forces for a number of reasons, including in many cases the fear that they will encounter racial discrimination.

The second part of the report reviews the services' existing recruitment criteria and practices as they affect the ethnic minorities. It concludes that the selection process is thorough and objective, conforming generally to the Commission for Racial Equality's code of practice and the Institute of Personnel Management's equal opportunities code. However, the report identifies scope for building upon existing good management practice and also some possible areas where indirect discrimination could arise, though there was no evidence that this was happening.

The third part of the report suggests ways in which the situation might be improved. It proposes a long-term marketing strategy to encourage a more positive attitude towards the services by young people from the ethnic minorities; a short-term marketing strategy to target recruiting efforts more effectively towards members of the ethnic minorities who are interested in a career in the services; an internal strategy for improving selection procedures; and some organisational changes intended to achieve a more co-ordinated and effective implementation of these strategies. In all the report contains 23 separate recomendations.

We welcome the report and have accepted all but two of the recommendations. We intend to adopt a policy of giving positive encouragement to applications from members of the ethnic minorities. This will involve, among other things, projecting a more positive message in our advertising, making recruiting offices more welcoming, special training for recruiting staff, greater use of recruiters from the ethnic minorities in selected areas and the building up of more contact between the services and young people from the ethnic minorities. In addition, we will be introducing a more detailed form of ethnic monitoring of applicants to help us identify where special difficulties are being encountered during the selection process and we shall be looking critically at a number of the selection tests employed to ensure that any possibility of indirect discrimination is eliminated.

We are concerned at the finding that fear of racial discrimination deters members of the ethnic minorities from applying to join the services. The services are equal opportunity employers, under the terms of the Race Relations Act, and we will continue to make it clear that no form of racial discrimination will be tolerated and that all complaints will be properly investigated. Many service men and service women from the ethnic minorities are already pursuing successful careers in all three services: we intend to give greater publicity to their achievements as an encouragement to others.

Implementation of the report will be closely monitored by Ministers, who attach great importance to increasing the number of recruits from the ethnic minorities, while recognising, as does the report, that a sustained effort will be required if attitudes are to be changed and that dramatic increases in the number of ethnic minority recruits are unlikely in the short term.

This last point is confirmed by the provisional results of the 1988-89 survey of applicants by ethnic origins, which show very little change from the 1987-88 results: 1·6 per cent. of applicants and 1·1 per cent. of successful recruits identified themselves as belonging to the ethnic minorities.

Copies of the final results of the 1987-88 survey and the provisional results of the 1988-89 survey have been placed in the Library of the House. As last year, the provisional 1988-89 results will be published in the Statement on the Defence Estimates.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Mr. Kevin Taylor

Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department is he will order an immediate inquiry into the handling of the investigation and prosecution of Mr. Kevin Taylor, formerly of Wood Road lane, Summerseat, Bury, by Greater Manchester police; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Barrow and Furness (Mr. Franks) on 22 January 1990 at column 514.

Immigration

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list by nationality the numbers of people who have immigrated to the United Kingdom during the last 12 months for which he has figures.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The number of people accepted for settlement in the United Kingdom in 1988, analysed by individual nationality, is published in table 2 of the Home Office volume, "Control of Immigration: Statistics United Kingdom 1988" (Cmd 726). An analysis by geographical and nationality group of those accepted in the 12 months ending 30 September 1989 is published in table 1 of Home Office Statistical Bulletin, Issue 45/89, "Control of Immigration: Statistics—Third Quarter 1989". A copy of both these publications is in the Library.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list, in the Official Report, the total number of immigrants accepted for settlement in the United Kingdom for each year since 1974 inclusive, specifying how many in each were dependants of immigrants already settled in the United Kingdom from (a) the new Commonwealth, (b) Pakistan and (c) United Kingdom colonies.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The available information for the groups requested is shown in the following table. The figures of acceptances of spouses and dependants relate to the nationality of the spouse or dependant, not of the sponsor. They include spouses and dependants of sponsors born in the United Kingdom as well as of those who were themselves accepted for settlement, either at an earlier stage, or at the same time as the spouse or dependants. Information on spouses and children from Pakistan, along with those from India and Bangladesh, distinguishing those where the sponsor was born in the United Kingdom and those where he or she has earlier been accepted for settlement, is published in tables 3, 7 and 10 of Home Office Statistical Bulletin, Issue 44/89, "Immigration from the Indian Sub-Continent 1988", a copy of which is in the Library. However, corresponding information is not available for the other nationality groups requested.

Litter

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions there were for dropping litter in the last 12 months.

Mr. John Patten: In 1988, the latest year for which figures are available, there were 1,760 prosecutions for litter offences in England and Wales. Information on prosecutions in 1989 will not be available until autumn 1990.

Horse Racing

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether he has reached a decision on an inquiry into racing finances; how the review of betting shop hours of opening, announced by the Department of Trade and Industry on 21 December 1989, fits into the general inquiry; and what is the likely timetable of this review;

(2) whether he is still considering the Lloyds bank report on the privatisation of the horserace totalisator board; and when he proposes to start an inquiry into opening hours of betting shops; and whether he will mount a wide-ranging inquiry into every aspect of racing finances.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: As to an inquiry into the financing of horse racing and greyhound racing, and the deregulation review of the opening hours of licensed betting offices, I refer my hon. Friend to my reply on 17 January to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Langbaurgh (Mr. Holt). Advice from Lloyds merchant bank on the feasibility of privatising the horserace totalisator board remains under consideration.

Firearms

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what definition his Department uses of a replica firearm.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Controls on imitation firearms are contained in the Firearms Act 1982. The 1982 Act provides that any imitation firearm which has the appearance of being a firearm to which section 1 of the Firearms Act 1968 applies and is so constructed as to be readily convertible to fire live ammunition, is subject to the same controls as those imposed on actual firearms by the Firearms Act 1968.

Under the 1982 Act, the test of whether an imitation firearm is readily convertible to fire live ammunition is whether it can be so converted without special skill on the part of the person converting it and the work involved does not require tools or equipment other than such as are in common use by persons carrying out construction and maintenance works in their homes.

Gun Clubs

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further steps are proposed to impose tighter controls on gun clubs.

Mr. Waddington: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Dumfries (Sir H. Monro) on 14 November at column 208, which set out proposals to amend the criteria applied to gun clubs approved by the Secretary of State under section 15 of the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1988. I said that before reaching a final decision on the proposed new controls I would ask the firearms consultative committee for its views. I have now received and carefully considered the advice of the committee.

As I originally proposed, I have decided on the grounds of public safety that any club which operates a scheme of uncontrolled day or temporary membership shall no longer be approved by me. However, in response to representations which have been made to me, by the committee and by many members of the shooting community, I accept that some provision should be made to ensure that the continued recruitment of new members to gun clubs is adequately safeguarded. I shall therefore permit novice members to receive instruction in an approved club in the safe handling of firearms, but without access to ammunition, on no more than four occasions a year. Such arrangements for a novice must be made by the club secretary at least 48 hours in advance. Approved clubs will also be allowed to hold guest days, on no more than four occasions per year, when limited numbers of people known to the club may be invited to visit the club by its secretary. On these limited occasions guest members would, under constant personal supervision, be allowed to handle firearms and ammunition. Clubs will be required to give reasonable prior notice to the local police of when they intend to hold such guest days. The police have statutory powers of inspection of approved clubs under the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1988.

I have also decided to implement my proposals, which the committee fully endorsed, that probationary members of approved clubs, when in possession of firearms or ammunition, must be under constant personal supervision by a range master or by a full member of the club who holds a firearm certificate, and that they should undergo a probationary period of not less than six months, during which they should receive a course of instruction on the safe handling and use of firearms. The committee will be providing further advice to me on the nature and standards of such instruction. I have also decided to implement my proposal that the number of probationary members of a club should not exceed the number of full members. Full members of approved gun clubs will continue to be allowed to become members of other approved clubs.

I have also decided that probationary members should be sponsored by one current full member of the club and one person who knows the applicant personally.

In considering individual applications by clubs for my approval, variations from these criteria may be permitted in exceptional circumstances, but considerations of public safety will always remain paramount.

I am satisfied that these new criteria for club approvals are justified in the interests of public safety.

The new criteria will be implemented with immediate effect in respect of any new applications for approval. Clubs currently approved will be advised of the changes and permitted a reasonable time in which to comply with the revised criteria.

I understand that my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland will adopt the same policy for his approval of clubs.

National Joint Unit Records

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many searches of the national joint unit records were undertaken following a request by police officers at ports of entry in each year from 1980 to 1989, inclusive.

Mr. Waddington [holding answer 17 January 1990]: The information requested is not recorded separately. The number of searches of national joint unit records following requests from police officers either at ports of entry or elsewhere was as follows:

	Number
1980	48,090
1981	50,687
1982	44,696
1983	44,906
1984	47,779
1985	55,328
1986	59,481
1987	81,060
1988	77,472
1989	101,766

It is thought that the majority of these searches were carried out in response to requests by police officers at ports.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what allocations he has made to local education authorities for initiatives aimed at combating the misuse of drugs in the latest available year in terms of (a) education support grant and (b) in-service training programmes.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Allocations to local education authorities under the new education support grant for preventive health education, and the associated LEA training grants scheme national priority area, both of which give priority to education about drugs, are as follows:

Access Funds

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his Department's estimate of (a) the average and (b) the maximum amount payable from the access funds; and whether any such estimates were taken into account when calculating the amount of money allocated to the funds.

Mr. Jackson: The amount payable to individual students will be at the discretion of the higher and further education institutions which will be administering the access funds from this autumn. It is not therefore possible to make estimates of the sort requested. The overall provision for the funds reflects the Government's judgment of what is affordable and appropriate to meet the funds' objectives.

Disabled Students Allowance

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what percentage of the disabled students listed in his answer to the hon. Member for Exeter of 16 November, Official Report, columns 382-83, received no disabled students' allowance because they were in receipt of minimum grant.

Mr. Jackson: Information about the amount of grant actually received by students who qualify for the disabled students allowance is not collected centrally.

In 1987-88, the latest year for which figures are available, 25 per cent. of all mandatory award holders received no maintenance payments from their local education authorities because their parents', their spouses' or their own assessed contribution was sufficient to cover the entire grant entitlement. It is not known whether the same proportion applies to students qualifying for the disabled students allowance.

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the total expenditure in each of the last three years by his Department on the disabled students allowance.

Mr. Jackson: This information is not available in the form requested.

In the academic years 1985-86 to 1987-88, the latest year for which figures are available, amounts assessed in respect of the disabled students allowance were as follows (cash prices):

1985-86	106,036
1986-87	192,123
1987-88	157,586

The sums actually paid by LEAs will be less than this because parental, spouses' and students' own contribution to the grant will in some cases be sufficient to cover a proportion of the assessed disabled students allowance.

Student Loans

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much of the access funds associated with individuals' difficulties caused by student loans will be allocated to Scotland.

Mr. Jackson: The access funds are intended to help students who are in financial difficulties in spite of the availability of top-up loans, not because of them. A total of £1·4 million has been allocated to the Scottish Education Department for distribution to students at non-university higher and further education institutions in Scotland. Universities in Scotland will receive an allocation for their students from the Universities Funding Council. The council's total allocation is £5·6 million and it is for it to decide how much to allocate to individual universities.

Polytechnic Colleges

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has yet reached a decision on the creation of a new category of polytechnic colleges; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend is close to completing his consideration of this question and expects to write to the PCFC with his conclusions very shortly.

Local Education Authorities

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to abolish local education authorities.

Mr. Alan Howarth: No.

National Curriculum

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to set up the national curriculum working parties in (a) music, (b) art and (c) physical education; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: I hope that an announcement will be made soon.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what consideration has been given to the introduction of road safety into the national curriculum.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Aspects of road safety are or will be covered within national curriculum foundation subjects. It is for schools to decide how best to provide road safety education.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what assessment he has made of the sufficiency and adequacy of supply of books and equipment appropriate to deliver the national curriculum.

Mr. MacGregor: Since the national curriculum builds on current best practice, large-scale replacement of books and equipment should be unnecessary. The adequacy of current stocks for the national curriculum will vary between LEAs and schools. The Government are using the education support grant mechanism to support expenditure on books and equipment for this purpose. Otherwise, it is for each local education authority to determine how to deploy the total resources available to it in order to meet the requirements of the national curriculum, including for books.

Haberdashers' Aske's Schools

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his policy on the payment of capital costs in respect of the establishment of a Haberdashers' Aske's city technology college in Deptford while it remains open to the governors of the present Haberdashers' Aske's schools to withdraw the notices to discontinue these schools.

Mrs. Rumbold: No capital grant payments have yet been made by my right hon. Friend for the establishment of a Haberdashers' Aske's city technology college. The timing of payments, and what capital costs they meet, will depend on a number of factors including the power of the governing body of the schools to withdraw notice to discontinue the schools.

School Funding

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what estimates he has made of the amount of money raised by parents to fund basic school costs.

Mr. MacGregor: The Government are aware that many parents are willing to contribute additional financial support to schools, and welcome that. But my Department does not collect data on the scale of such contributions, or the uses to which they are put. Her Majesty's inspectorate collects some information as part of its routine inspection of schools, but not on a systematic basis. Its most recent assessment is set out in paragraph 56 of the senior chief inspector's first annual report, "Standards in Education 1987-88". A copy is available in the Library.

Surplus School Places

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the total number of surplus school places available for removal represented by decisions made by him or pending in respect of proposals for the closure or reorganisation of schools for each year from 1986-87 to the latest available year.

Mr. MacGregor: The information in respect of proposals on which my or my predecessors' decision to approve has been made, or which local education authorities have, in the absence of local objections, determined to implement themselves, is given in the following table; figures in respect of proposals on which a decision is still pending are not available. The figures are in respect of the calendar years in which the decisions were made.

Calendar year	Number of places
1986	62,828
1987	45,326
1988	27,170
1989	41,831

Eastern European Studies

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has received the report on eastern European studies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: I have received a copy of the report that was made to the Universities Funding Council, the successor body to the University Grants Committee that commissioned it. I shall respond to the report when I have completed my consultations with other Government Departments and organisations to which some of its recommendations relate.

Computers

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent representations he has received from parents objecting to their children using computers as part of their school lessons.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend and I have received a number of representations from parents who are members of the Brethren. They object to their children using some applications of information technology such as computers, and are seeking the right to withdraw their children from the IT aspects of the national curriculum. The Government's view is that IT education is a vital part of preparing pupils for adult life and employment, and should therefore be a requirement rather than an option under the national curriculum in maintained schools. It remains open to parents with objections to aspects of the national curriculum to make alternative educational arrangements.

Pupils' Dress

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what advice he has issued to local education authorities concerning the admission to schools of pupils wearing dress reflecting religious belief; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what information he has on the policy of city technology colleges concerning the admission of children wearing dress reflecting religious belief; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Uniform and dress rules are matters for determination by individual local education authorities and schools, including city technology colleges. We look to LEAs and governing bodies, in devising these rules, to take account of the cultural and religious backgrounds of pupils. The Commission for Racial Equality has recently issued a code of practice for the elimination of racial discrimination in education, which my right hon. Friend has commended to school and college governing bodies. It includes guidance on dress and uniform.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many complaints he has received in each of the years 1985 to 1989 that a local education authority was in breach of its duty to identify and assess a child with special educational needs, as laid down in sections 4 and 5 of the Education Act 1981; on how many of these occasions he has used his default powers under sections 68 and 99 of the Education Act 1944; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: This information can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Higher Education (Fees)

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what has been the outcome of his consultations on the introduction of differential fees in higher education; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: The Department's consultation paper, "Shifting the Balance of Public Funding of Higher Education to Fees", issued on 25 April last year, proposed a two-stage plan for increasing the responsiveness of higher education institutions to student demand.

In the light of responses, we confirmed last July the first stage increase in the maximum fee for full-time undergraduate students met through the award arrangements from £607 to £1,675 for the academic year 1990-91.

The consultation paper set a later deadline for responses to the second stage proposal for differential fees. Such fees would apply the market force of student demand more evenly across courses of different costs. Again, the overwhelming majority of the responses supported this proposal. A significant number of those consulted stressed the advantages of setting three fee levels, broadly on the same basis as those set for fees for overseas students, rather than the four proposed.

The Government have accordingly decided to introduce differential full-time undergraduate maximum tuition fees to be met through mandatory student awards for most first degree and designated comparable courses in publicly funded institutions from the academic year 1991-92 onwards. At 1990-91 prices, these fees will be set for three band levels as follows:

Band		£
1	Classroom-based courses	1,675
2	Laboratory/workshop-based courses	2,500
3	Clinical courses	4,500

We shall now consult the funding bodies and representatives of universities, polytechnics and colleges about the detailed arrangements for allocating courses to bands and the consequent adjustment between institutional grant and fees provision within the agreed expenditure plans in respect of the student numbers to which they relate.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Eastern Europe

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a further statement on the special programme of aid for ex-Communist countries in eastern Europe.

Mrs. Chalker: We already have a know-how fund for Poland of £50 million, and a similar fund for Hungary of £25 million will come into operation from April. We have announced that we shall extend these funds to cover other east European countries once they are fully committed to reform.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Parking

Mr. Cox: To ask the Lord President of the Council what steps he is taking to ensure the strict enforcement of the parking restrictions in the Palace of Westminster; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I understand that, following two recent incidents, security staff have been instructed to ensure that the roadways through the inner courtyards are not blocked by vehicles making deliveries and that no unauthorised parking takes place.

Manchester Evening News

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Lord President of the Council whether he will make inquiries as to why copies of the Manchester Evening News are no longer regularly available in the Tea Room and Smoking Room.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: Until recently six copies of the Manchester Evening News were suplied free of charge and delivered by hand to the House by the publisher. Under new arrangements introduced by the publisher, three copies are now posted to the House.

The authorities of the House have discussed these new arrangements with the publisher, who has agreed to re-provide six copies and to see what can be done about speeding up delivery arrangements. Meanwhile, copies of the Manchester Evening News will be placed in the Tea and Smoking Rooms as soon as they are received.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Barlow Clowes

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he proposes any investigation into the role of Spicer and Pegler, now Spicer and Oppenheim, in the Barlow Clowes affair.

Mr. Redwood: No. The terms of reference of the Companies Act 1985 inspectors investigating the affairs of Barlow Clowes Gilt Managers Limited and the affairs of James Ferguson Holdings plc enable them to inquire into the role of Spicer and Oppenheim if they consider it necessary for the purpose of their investigations.

GATT

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether Her Majesty's Government support the view of the EEC Commission, in the current General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade negotiations, that there can be no negotiations on the United States proposal for ending agricultural dumping within five years; what assessment he has made of the impact of this view on the prospects for a successful outcome of the negotiations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The proposals tabled by the United States on agriculture in the current Uruguay round of multilateral trade negotiations, including that to eliminate export subsidies within five years, would cause a number of difficulties for the European Community. However, these proposals, like the others which have been tabled, including those by the Community, will be the subject of further negotiation. The Government are urging the Community to respond positively to proposals for more open trade in all areas and are keen to see a good liberal settlement for the Uruguay round as a whole. I am hopeful that a settlement can be reached in the agriculture negotiations which satisfies all parties, as this is likely to be an important element for the successful conclusion of the Uruguay round, and one to which the United Kingdom attaches great importance.

Public Safety

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans to introduce legislation to provide exemption from penalty under the Official Secrets Act for any scientist who speaks openly on matters affecting public safety.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Secretary of State for Trade and Industry has no plans to introduce such legislation.

Methanol

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give the end uses of methanol for the most recent year for which figures are available and the number of United Kingdom manufacturers.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: ICI is the only company which manufactures methanol in the United Kingdom.

The main use for methanol is as a feedstock for the production of a wide range of other chemicals.

The majority of methanol consumed in the United Kingdom is used in the production of formaldehyde (a component of melamine resin), methyl tert butyl ether (an octane enhancer for unleaded fuel), acetic acid, chloromethanes, methyl methacrylate (a resin), and methylamines (solvents and photographic developers).

Insider Dealing

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list what current inquiries his Department are carrying out into suspected insider dealing rings in the City of London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 19 January 1990]: Investigations into possible insider dealing offences are not normally announced. However, an announcement may be made in a particular case if it is considered to be in the public interest to do so. There are at present 18 cases where inspectors have been appointed by my Department to investigate possible insider dealing offences. In only one of those cases was the appointment announced. That investigation concerns possible offences with respect to the securities of Consolidated Gold Fields plc in the period from 3 August 1988 to 20 September 1988.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Legal Aid

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Attorney-General how many people used the legal advice and assistance green form scheme analysed by numbers of bills paid to the Legal Aid Board during the years commencing 1 April 1987 and 1 April 1988; and whether legal aid is reaching more people than ever before.

The Attorney-General: The Legal Aid Board did not take over the administration of the legal aid schemes until 1 April 1989. The figures requested for 1987-88 are available in appendix 1A of the Law Society's legal aid annual report for 1987-88. In 1987-88, 1,077,454 bills were paid and the figure for 1988-89 was 994,606.

The number of full civil legal aid certificates issued compared with figures for five and 10 years ago indicates that more people than ever before are taking up legal aid. The figures are as follows:

	Number
1979-80	190,677
1984-85	221,209
1989-90	[1]259,000

[1] Estimated.

Over the same period, expenditure on legal aid as a whole increased some fivefold.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Social Fund

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people have been refused social fund loan applications by social fund offices in each of the ILOs of Redcar, Eston, Middlesbrough, Stockton and Hartlepool, on the grounds that the applicants could not afford to repay such loans.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 12 January 1990]: The precise information requested is not available. Social fund officers may refuse an application for one or more reasons and each reason given is recorded. The information in the table gives the number of occasions between 1 April 1989 and 1 December 1989 when "inability to repay" was recorded as a (but not necessarily the only) reason for refusal:

Social Security local office	Number of refusals
Redcar	61
Eston	8
Middlesbrough	131
Stockton	108
Hartlepool	74

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Namibia

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what considerations were taken into account by the international contact group of nations on the question of the exclusion of Walvis bay from incorporation into the independent state of Namibia.

Mr. Sainsbury: In view of the apparently irreconcilable views of the parties concerned on the status of Walvis bay, the five Governments in the contact group decided not to include any provision on this question in their proposal for achieving Namibian independence.

Bulgaria

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on relations with Bulgaria.

Mr. Sainsbury: We are pleased with recent moves towards democracy in Bulgaria, including the decision to restore their rights to the minorities in that country. We hope to have closer and more fruitful relations in future.

Hong Kong

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many representations he has received concerning Government plans to allow Hong Kong's ivory stockpiles to be exempted from the agreed worldwide ban on ivory trading; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: We have received a number of representations, both in favour of and against the entering of a reservation on behalf of Hong Kong. We took all these into consideration. We received no formal representations from other countries.

Whaling

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last made representations to the Japanese Government concerning its research whaling agreements; what representations he has made to them about a total ban on whaling; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs raised the Japanese scientific research whaling programme with Foreign Minister Nakayama on 12 January, as did my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister with Prime Minister Kaifu. The Japanese Government are well aware of our views on whaling.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions his Department has had with the chemical industry regarding the implementation of a chemical weapon convention.

Mr. Sainsbury: Officials of this Department and other Government Departments concerned meet regularly with representatives of the United Kingdom chemical industry to discuss issues involved in the chemical weapons convention under negotiation in Geneva.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether any groups or individuals that are independent of the chemical industry will be invited to assist with the work of the national authority, established under the chemical weapon convention.

Mr. Sainsbury: The structure and procedures of any national authority which might be established under a chemical weapons convention have yet to be decided.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the oversight of the implementation of the verification procedures under the terms of a chemical weapon convention will involve any personnel or organisations that are independent of the chemical industry.

Mr. Sainsbury: It is currently envisaged in the negotiations in Geneva for a chemical weapons convention that the implementation of verification procedures will be carried out by an international technical secretariat established by the convention.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the Government's policy on the renunciation of the present reservation to retaliate in kind if subjected to chemical weapon attack, under the terms of the Geneva protocol 1925 (a) before a chemical weapon convention is signed, (b) upon the signing of a chemical weapon convention and (c) at some stage during the implementation of a chemical weapon convention.

Mr. Sainsbury: The United Kingdom, in common with a number of other states parties to the 1925 Geneva protocol, entered a reservation in the interests of national security, permitting retaliation in kind if subjected to attack with chemical weapons. This remains the United Kingdom's position.

On the second and third parts of this question, I refer the hon. Member for Western Isles to the answer given to his earlier question on 11 December last year.

Immigration

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) when Mr. Muhammad Jamshed, who has re-applied to the United Kingdom post in Islamabad to join his wife in the United Kingdom (Ref: IMM/80967), is to be interviewed; and why Mr. Jamshed, at the interview relating to his first application, was interviewed in Pahari;

(2) when Ruksana Riaz (serial number: 66429), who applied to the United Kingdom post in Islamabad to join her family in the United Kingdom on 5 July 1989, is going to be interviewed.

Mr. Sainsbury: In accordance with the guidelines on the handling of representations by Members of Parliament in immigration cases, issued to Members on 14 December 1988, I have referred the questions to the correspondence unit of the migration and visa department of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. The hon. Member will receive replies from the unit as soon as possible.

Nuclear Non-proliferation

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information the Department has concerning the policy of (a) India, (b) Pakistan, (c) Israel, (d) Argentina, (e) Brazil and (f) Libya towards (i) the international nuclear non-proliferation regime and (ii) the 1968 nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Sainsbury: Of the countries listed in the hon. Member's question, Libya is a party to the nuclear non-proliferation treaty (NPT), and its nuclear facilities are under International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) safeguards. The other countries are not parties to the treaty. All of them have nuclear installations, some of which are under IAEA safeguards while others are not.

Mr. Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information his Department has concerning the policy of (a) France and (b) the People's Republic of China towards the nuclear non-proliferation treaty; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Both France and the Republic of China remain non-parties to the nuclear non-proliferation treaty (NPT).

School Fees

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the number of allowances and the total amount paid by the Government for boarding school fees in both the United Kingdom and overseas for the education of the children of (a) members of his Department, (b) members of the Diplomatic Services communication division and (c) the Overseas Development Administration including children of technical co-operation officers for the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 19 January 1990]: An allowance towards the cost of their children's day school education at boarding schools in the United Kingdom is paid to very few members of the diplomatic services during home postings. Details of the amounts paid are subsumed in the overall figures for boarding school allowances. Separate statistics are not kept.

Only limited information is kept by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office on schools used overseas. Each mission maintains its own list of authorised schools.

A total of £1,784,000 was paid in overseas education allowances for children of diplomatic services officers (including £79,000 for the communications division) and £286,000 to employees of the Overseas Development Agency (including technical co-operation officers) in the financial year 1988-89. Details of the total number of children for whom such allowances were paid are not available.

South Africa

Mr. Cabom: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether any representations have been received on behalf of Sibusiso Senele Masuku and Oupa Josias Mbonane currently under sentence of death in South Africa for their alleged involvement in offences arising out of political protest; and what action he has taken about these cases.

Mr. Maude [pursuant to his reply, 16 January 1990, c. 165-67]: We have in fact received a number of representations about Mr. Sibusiso Senele Masuku and Oupa Josias Mbonane. We consider intervening, exceptionally, in such cases only when all legal avenues of appeal have been exhausted. Our criteria are that the case must be clearly political and there must be strong extenuating circumstances or grounds to doubt the fairness of the judicial process. We are not prepared to make appeals in cases involving indiscriminate terrorism. With legal avenues yet to be exhausted, we have not intervened with the South African Government in these cases.

WALES

NHS (Wales)

124. Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the proposed reorganisation of the National Health Service in Wales.

Mr. Grist: The Government's proposals for the further improvement of the National Health Service in Wales are set out in the White Paper "Working for Patients" (Cm. 555) and in my right hon. Friend's published letter of 1 August 1989 to health authority and family practitioner committee chairmen. Insofar as the proposals require legislation, provision is included in the National Health Service and Community Care Bill which is presently before the House.

Prescriptions

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many prescriptions were issued in each of the years from 1980 for (a) psychotropic drugs and (b) hypnotic drugs.

Mr. Grist: Information on number of prescriptions by type of drug is readily available only by therapeutic class. Hypnotic drugs are a class on their own, but psychotropic drugs are included in classes comprising sedatives, tranquillisers and anti-depressants.

Number of prescriptions (Thousands)

	Hypnotics	Sedatives/ tranquillisers/ anti-depressants
1980	1,149	1,925
1981	1,138	1,931
1982	1,129	1,885
1983	1,103	1,692
1984	1,137	1,598
1985	1,104	1,514
1986	1,216	1,493
1987	1,211	1,513
1988	1,139	1,383

Welsh Language Studies

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how he intends to implement those recommendations in the Welsh Language Board's strategy document, "The Welsh Language.—A Strategy for the Future," directly relating to the responsibilities of his Department;

(2) what formal response he has made to the strategy document prepared by the Welsh Language Board and entitled "The Welsh Language—A Strategy for the Future" and its proposals for recommendations.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The proposals in the Welsh Language Board's strategy document are being considered together with other related proposals made by the board.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how his Department proposes to implement the recommendations and policy contained in the Welsh Language Board's document, "A Bilingual Policy—Guidelines for the Public Sector;"

(2) if he will arrange to review the Welsh language policy of each body of which the Welsh Office is the sponsor Department;

(3) if he will issue guidance to local authorities in Wales based on the Welsh Language Board's document entitled, "A Bilingual Policy—Guidelines for the Public Sector."

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Welsh Language Board has already invited every public body in Wales to review its Welsh language policy having regard to the board's voluntary guidelines. The Welsh Office is among those currently considering its response. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will consider whether there is need for further guidelines in the light of the overall response.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what criteria he will use in considering applications from schools to be excluded from the Welsh language teaching requirements of the national curriculum.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Secretary of State has been considering this issue in the light of the responses to his consultation on proposals for Welsh in the national curriculum. As a result of that consultation the Secretary of State is publishing today a draft order in accordance with section 21(3) of the Education Reform Act, prescribing attainment targets and programmes of study for Welsh, together with an explanatory statement and an account of the consultation. Copies have been placed in the Library. Consultation on the draft order ends on 28 February and the Secretary of State intends to make a final order in April.

The draft order and its associated document set out attainment targets and programmes of study which are designed to be achievable in schools of different kinds throughout Wales. Nevertheless there may be circumstances where a school may need to be exempted at least temporarily. The Secretary of State has powers to make regulations under section 17 of the Act to prescribe exceptions from the national curriculum. He will be consulting soon on proposals for such regulations.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all suggestions he has received from the Welsh Language Board regarding statutory and administrative changes designed to enhance the use and status of the Welsh language, together with his response.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Welsh Language Board's main proposals are those contained in its strategy document, its voluntary guidelines for the public and private sectors, and its draft Welsh Language Bill. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is considering the practical implications of the board's proposals before he responds. In addition, there has been considerable progress on a range of other matters concerning legislation and administrative practice which have been raised by the board.

Circulars

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many circulars and circular letters have been issued by his Department's education division since 1 January 1989; and how many were (a) in Welsh and (b) bilingual.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Forty-seven circulars and circular letters have been issued, of which 13 were bilingual. None was issued in Welsh only.

(2) if he will make a statement on the role of the national language unit in the implementation of the national curriculum in Wales;

(3) when the national language unit was last subject to inspection by Her Majesty's inspectorate.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The national language unit is one of the agencies involved in preparing Welsh language materials for the national curriculum. Grants have been given to enable the unit to employ development officers for Welsh and modern foreign languages including French. The language unit has not been the subject of a report by Her Majesty's inspectorate.

Simultaneous Translations

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all meetings between his Department and outside bodies at which simultaneous translation has been used, indicating the language used, since January 1989.

Welsh Language

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will list the representations he has received against the Welsh Language Board's practical options for the use of Welsh in business;

(2) if he will take steps to encourage businesses located and operating in Wales to implement the Welsh Language Board's practical options for the use of Welsh in business.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Businesses in Wales will wish to consider their own response to the board's guidelines for the private sector. No formal representations have been received following their publication.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the total direct expenditure by his Department in support of the Welsh language in each financial year between 1980-81 and 1989-90.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Direct Government support for the Welsh language is provided through grants for developments in bilingual education and for assistance to the Welsh language. The figures are shown in the following table:

1988-89	3,345,987
[1]1989-90	4,431,000

[1]Provision (outturn figures for other years).

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will make a statement on his approach to the principle of equal validity in respect of the Welsh language;

(2) what consultations he is undertaking with interested people and organisations on the Welsh Language Board's recommendations for legislation for the care of the Welsh language.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Welsh Language Board has presented my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State with proposals for legislation based on the principles of equal validity. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is considering with the board the practical implications of these proposals.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy that Welsh-speakers should have the right to require all public bodies to deal with them, in writing and verbally, in Welsh whenever practicable.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: This is one of the features of the Welsh Language Board's legislative proposals which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is currently considering.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether the supplement to attract students to Welsh medium initial teacher training courses has been effective; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The incentive supplement was introduced in 1988 as a two-year pilot project aimed at increasing the supply of Welsh medium teachers in the secondary sector. The supplement was available only to those students who it is thought needed extra tuition in Welsh so that they have the confidence to pursue their studies and classroom training through the medium of Welsh.

In 1988, 30 students received a supplement and 26 of these subsequently obtained teaching posts in Wales. Forty-three students received supplements in 1989.

I have concluded that the supplement appears to have been successful in encouraging Welsh-speaking graduates to pursue Welsh medium initial teacher training courses. However, in order that a more detailed evaluation of the scheme can be undertaken, I have decided that the pilot should be extended for a further two years.

The demand for Welsh medium teaching in Wales continues to increase in both primary and secondary phases. To ensure that this demand is met, I have asked my officials to discuss with the relevant initial teacher training institutions ways in which a supplement might be provided to increase the number of students attending Welsh medium initial teacher training primary courses.

Welsh Language Board

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place in the Library copies of all correspondence between his Department and the Welsh Language Board.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: No.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) on how many occasions he has met the chairman of the Welsh Language Board to discuss the affairs of the board;

(2) when he last held discussions with the chairman of the Welsh Language Board; what was discussed; on how many occasions he has met the Welsh Language Board; and when his officials will next meet representatives of the Welsh Language Board to discuss the board's suggested legislation.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: We have had one formal meeting with the chairman of the Welsh Language Board and his board. We have discussed issues relating to the board with the chairman on numerous occasions. Welsh Office officials meet representatives of the board as and when the need arises.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he proposes to make further appointments to the Welsh Language Board to restore the board to its original size.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has no immediate plans to make further appointments.

Pharmacists

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to expand the definition of pharmaceutical services in order to use the expertise of pharmacists in matters like health education, supervision of dispensing in residential homes, preventive work, and services to people in sheltered accommodation in Wales.

Mr. Grist: The Government's policy on developing the role of the community pharmacist was set out in chapter 6 of "Promoting Better Health" (Cm 249).

The majority of the measures proposed in the White Paper have now been implemented. For example, new allowances have been introduced for pharmacists who participate in schemes to provide advice to residential homes, and also for those who maintain records of medicines supplied to certain patients on long-term medication. Funds have also been made available to support the enhancement of the health educational role of the community pharmacist.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what arrangements he intends to make in Wales to cover the responsibilities currently undertaken by the rural dispensing committee.

Mr. Grist: In line with the new management arrangements for family practitioner services, it is proposed that family practitioner committees will take all decisions of first instance in relation to dispensing. We shall be consulting the professions about the detailed arrangements for dealing with appeals as soon as possible.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of the income of pharmacies (a) in Wales generally and (b) in rural areas of Wales comes from dispensing.

Mr. Grist: Pharmacies' income can be derived from a variety of sources in addition to the dispensing of NHS prescriptions. The only information held centrally refers to NHS payments. In 1988-89 pharmacies in Wales received £143 million for providing pharmaceutical services.

No separate statistics are collected centrally in respect of rural pharmacies.

Community Charge

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what advice has been given to employers in Wales about their responsibility for collecting cash from poll tax defaulters.

Mr. Peter Walker: Attachment of earnings is one of the remedies which is available to a charging authority that has obtained a liability order from a magistrates court in respect of a individual who has failed to pay the community charge. The attachment order served on employers will contain all the information necessary for the correct deduction to be made.

Community charge practice note No. 15, "Enforcement of the Community Charge", sets out a model form and explanatory notes which a local authority may use in correspondence with individual employers. Employers will be entitled to deduct £1 towards their administrative expenses each time an attachment is made.

Low Pay

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has commissioned research concerning new policies to lessen the incidence of low pay in (a) Clwyd, (b) Gwynedd, (c) Powys, (d) Mid Glamorgan, (e) South Glamorgan, (f) West Glamorgan, (g) Dyfed and (h) Gwent.

Mr. Peter Walker: No. Economic expansion and new investment are increasing earnings in Wales. Between 1988 and 1989 the average weekly earnings for full-time adults in Wales increased by 9·9 per cent., which was a higher increase than in six of the other nine regions of Great Britain.

Welsh College of Agriculture

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total number of students attending full-time courses at the Welsh college of agriculture, Aberystwyth, for each year since 1979.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The total number of full-time students attending courses at the Welsh college of agriculture, Aberystwyth for each year since 1979-80 is shown in the following table:

Academic year	Number of students
1979-80	229
1980-81	262
1981-82	288
1982-83	281
1983-84	282
1984-85	272
1985-86	276
1986-87	271
1987-88	225
1988-89	181

West Wales General Hospital

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many beds there were available for use by patients at West Wales general hospital, Glangwili, Carmarthen, at the end of each calendar month from 31 March 1989 to 31 December 1989; and what are the projected figures for 31 January, 28 February and 31 March 1990.

Mr. Grist: Information on bed availability is collected on a quarterly basis and the information for the first three quarters of 1989 is shown in the following table. No projections of available bed numbers are made centrally.

West Wales General hospital
Average daily available beds[1]

Quarter ending	Number
31 March 1989	509·4
30 June 1989	510·8
30 September 1989	500·4

[1] Includes mental illness and mental handicap beds.

General Practitioners

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many applications he has received for the creation of fund-holding general practitioner practices.

Mr. Grist: A booklet explaining the fund-holding initiative was issued to all Welsh GPs on 5 January. Included with the booklet was a form enabling practices to express interest in becoming fundholders. It is far too early to put a realistic figure on the level of potential interest from the inquiries that have come in since 5 January.

Teacher Training

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the recruitment to teacher training courses in 1988 and 1989 in the public sector and the University of Wales colleges.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Details of teacher training students recruited in 1988 and 1989 are as follows:

	1988	1989
Public sector
BEd Primary	580	709
BEd Secondary	69	66
PGCE Primary	167	161
PGCE Secondary	97	89

PGCE Primary	136	206

	1988	1989
PGCE Secondary	425	447
Total	561	653

Recruitment to courses in the public sector increased by 12 per cent. and to courses in the University of Wales by 16 per cent.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many self-employed persons have been taken into account in recalculating the unemployment percentages for each of the employment offices in Wales; and what was the source of these figures of self-employment and the date to which they refer.

Mr. Nicholls: I have been asked to reply as the methodology used to calculate unemployment rates in the United Kingdom is the responsibility of my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State.

The smallest areas for which unemployment rates are calculated are travel-to-work areas. Local rates calculated as a percentage of the total work force were introduced for these areas and for counties in October 1989. These calculations incorporate local allowances for the self-employed based upon census of population and labour force survey results. The latest estimates relate to June 1988 and will be updated in the light of forthcoming information. These local self-employment estimates are sufficiently reliable to be used only as a small component of the work force denominator. Estimates of the total work force for these areas are available in the Library.

TRANSPORT

A1 (Accidents)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the number of accidents, serious injuries and deaths, involving heavy lorries on the sections of the (a) A1(M) and (b) A1 that runs through South, West and North Yorkshire during the last five years, giving the location of such accidents; and if he will show in his answer (i) the approximate time of the accident and (ii) what type of cargo the vehicle was carrying or equipped for.

Mr. Atkins: Not all the requested information is available. Details of cargo are not held on the road accident report form. The table below gives the number of accidents by time of day, and the number of casualties by severity:

As over 400 accidents are involved, I shall write to the hon. Member, giving details of the time of accident, the Ordnance Survey grid reference of the accident locations, and in the case of accidents near junctions, the number of the intersecting road.

London Air Traffic Control

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he is yet in a position to identify all the alternative sites for LATCC-2.

Mr. McLoughlin: I understand that the Civil Aviation Authority has identified a number of possible sites for its new en route air traffic control centre, including one near Fareham in Hampshire, but that no decision has yet been taken.

Road Humps

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the new regulations controlling road humps will be brought into force; and how soon the local authorities will be allowed to make road humps legally enforceable as a consequence of the new regulations.

Mr. Atkins: These representations are in the final stages of preparation and will be laid before the House very shortly. We have now incorporated the additional relaxations designed to allow road humps in a wider range of circumstances and at lower cost, that were canvassed in our consultation exercise and widely supported.

Electronic Road Pricing

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether his study into electronic road pricing will consider the privacy implications of the ability to monitor the movement of vehicles; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: My right hon. Friend has made it clear that he sees major practical difficulties with the implementation of road pricing. The maintenance of individuals' rights of privacy would be an important consideration. There are no plans to introduce road pricing at the present time.

London Road Assessment Studies

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will extend the consultation period on the London road assessment studies until 31 March.

Mr. Atkins: No.

Oil Tankers, Fawley

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take steps to make public the findings and recommendations of the inquiries into the three incidents at Fawley involving the bulk carriers MV Worthy, SS Mobil Petrel and SS British Resolution; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: As the incident concerning the Mobil Petrel resulted in damage to the ship, it is being investigated by the Marine Accident Investigation Branch as a marine accident. A report of the findings will be published in due course. The MAIB is not involved in the incidents concerning the Worthy or British Resolution as they were not classified as marine accidents.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, in the light of the incidents involving bulk carriers at Fawley in the last four months, he has any proposals to change the way in which the port state control regulations are working; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The way in which port state control is effected and inspections are carried out is subject to continual review. Account will be taken of any lessons to be learnt from the incidents at Fawley, when investigations have been completed.

A66

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to start work on improvements to the A66 between Scotch Corner and Penrith.

Mr. Atkins: Work on improvements to the A66 between Bowes and the Durham county boundary is planned to start later this year. A scheme to improve the section from Stainmore to Banksgate in Cumbria is planned to start in April 1992.

Road Accidents

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has by which to meet his target of reducing road accidents by one third by the year 2000.

Mr. Atkins: I refer the right hon. Member to my reply of 9 January to the hon. Member for Wakefield (Mr. Hinchliffe) Col. 584-85.

Birmingham Northern Relief Road

Mr. Richard Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has made available the inspector's report of the public inquiry for the Birmingham northern relief road to serious prospective tenderers; and whether the report will be made available to the eventual concessionaire.

Mr. Portillo: This report has not been made available to prospective tenderers, nor will it be made available to the concessionaire. It is not relevant to the private sector proposals.

A2

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it the policy of his Department to provide lighting on all sections of the A2 which are of dual carriageway standard in Kent.

Mr. Atkins: No. Provision of lighting on sections of trunk road is considered on the merits of the cases, and reflects safety, economic and environmental factors. We have plans to light the following lengths of the A2:

London boundary to M2
Brenley to Harbledown
Shepherdswell

Lorries

Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has given any general guidance to the local highway authorities and others concerned in dealing with the environmental problems caused by lorry traffic in residential areas and town centres.

Mr. Parkinson: I am pleased to be able to announce today the publication of two documents that address the problems that lorries can cause to local communities. "Lorries in the Community" and the "Lorries and Traffic Management" manual have been produced following a lorry management study co-sponsored by my Department, the Civil Trust and the County Surveyors Society. Copies of these documents have been placed in the House Libraries.

"Lorries in the Community" describes problems that can be caused by lorries and possible solutions, in an easily readable form. The traffic management manual gives comprehensive advice to professional practitioners and planners on the types of measures available to deal with such problems.

Free copies of both publications are being sent to all local highway and planning authorities in England.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Tax Allowances

128. Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing information available to him on the tax allowances and tax reliefs given to single people and one and two-earner married couples in (a) Germany, (b) Italy, (c) France, (d) United States of America and (e) Holland with those in the United Kingdom together with the income band at each income tax rate chargeable.

Mr. Lilley: Available information is given in the tables, which are supplemented by notes. All amounts have been converted to sterling using the latest available purchasing power parities.

Tax allowances

	Year of income	Single £	One-earner married couple £	Two-earner married couple £
Germany	1990	1,421	2,841	2,841
Italy	1989	Nil	1,930	1,930
France	1989	1,425	2,850	2,850

Netherlands	1990	1,162	2,324	2,324
United Kingdom	1989-90	2,785	4,375	7,160

Notes:

1. In Germany and France there are no personal allowances as such, but the tax tables incorporate a zero rate band. The figures given are the maximum amounts of income subject to tax on which no tax is due.
2. In Germany there is also an employment deduction of £496.
3. In Italy there are no personal allowances as such, but a married man may deduct £193 from tax due and therefore is not a net taxpayer unless income exceeds £1,930. In addition, employees receive an earned income credit of £215 on tax due. Thus, married employees are not net taxpayers unless their income exceeds £3,312, and single employees are not net taxpayers unless their income exceeds £2,150.
4. In France employees may also deduct 20 per cent. of earned income and 10 per cent. for employment-related expenses.
5. The Netherlands has a 4 per cent. employment income deduction (minimum £52, maximum £258).

	over 20,700	40·0

Notes:

1. In Germany tax rates rise gradually from 19 per cent. to a top rate of 53 per cent. The top rate is reached at a taxable income of £29,787 (single) and £59,574 (married couple, joint return).
2. The incomes given for France are halved in the case of a single person.

Taxation

Sir Hal Miller: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how much income tax receipts would be reduced in a full year, at 1989-90 income levels, with a 5p reduction in the basic rate of tax, assuming the basic rate limit was reduced from £20,700 taxable income to £12,000;

(2) how much income tax receipts would be reduced in a full year, at 1989-90 income levels, with a 5p reduction in the basic rate of tax, assuming the basic rate limit was reduced from £20,700 taxable income to £15,000.

Mr. Lilley: The direct revenue cost in a full year, at 1989-90 income levels, of a 5p reduction in the basic rate of tax and, at the same time, a reduction in the basic rate limit from £20,700 taxable income to £12,000 is estimated to be £3 billion. If the basic rate of tax was reduced by 5p and the basic rate limit reduced to £15,000, the cost is estimated to be £5·5 billion.

The estimates include the change in receipts of advance corporation tax and on consequent liability to mainstream corporation tax, but exclude the effects on capital gains tax and possible behavioural effects. They are based on a projection of the 1987-88 survey of personal incomes and are provisional.

Auditors

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the auditors to each company in which the Government maintain (a) a golden share and (b) an equity investment.

Mr. Ryder: The burden of excise duty and value added tax as a percentage of the price for the range of dutiable goods specified in the question is as follows:

	Total tax as percentage of price

European Bank for Reconstruction and Development

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will take steps to ensure that the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development seeks advice and information from think tanks and academics who support the creation of free market economies.

Mr. Ryder: In the current discussions to establish the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development, the Government are encouraging any measures which will assist the bank in promoting the creation of free market economies in central and eastern Europe.

Mortgage Interest Relief

Mr. Paice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the cost to the Government of mortgage interest relief in (a) 1987-88, (b) 1988-89 and (c) 1989-90, estimated; and what proportion of this accrues to higher-rate taxpayers.

Mr. Lilley: The information requested is given in the table. Estimates are based on projections of the 1987-88 survey of personal incomes. The figures for 1988-89 and 1989-90 are therefore provisional.

Year	Cost of mortgage interest relief	Percentage of relief at excess over basic rate
	£ million	Per cent.
1987-88	4,900	9
1988-89	5,400	6
1989-90	7,000	6

Mr. Paice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the income which would accrue to the Government from restricting mortgage interest relief to the basic rate of income tax.

Mr. Lilley: The additional yield to the Exchequer from restricting mortgage interest relief to the basic rate of income tax is estimated to be £430 million at 1989-90 levels of income.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the cost to the Government of increasing the maximum limit for mortgage interest relief to (a) £35,000, (b) £40,000 and (c) £45,000.

Mr. Lilley: Provisional estimates of the direct revenue costs of increasing the ceiling for mortgage interest relief are (a) £320 million, (b) £580 million and (c) £770 million. These estimates are at 1989-90 levels of income and current interest rate levels and exclude behavioural effects, which would be substantial for the higher ceilings.

Capital Gains Tax

Mr. Paice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total income to the Government from capital gains tax in the years (a) 1987-88, (b) 1988-89 and (c) 1989-90, estimated; and what is his estimate of the income forgone through the existence of rollover relief in each year.

Mr. Lilley: Receipts of capital gains tax in financial years since 1987-88 have been as follows:

	£ million
1987-88	1,379
1988-89	2,323
1989-90	[1]2,000

[1] forecast

These figures exclude receipts from capital gains of companies taxed within corporation tax. I regret that an estimate of the total cost of rollover relief is not available.

HMSO

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the expenditure to date on consultants engaged on the grading structure study in Her Majesty's Stationery Office.

Mr. Ryder: A total of £127,000 in 1988, and £95,000 in 1989.

National Savings

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to develop the role of the Department for National Savings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave on 19 January to the hon. Member for Brent, South (Mr. Boateng), Official Report, column 437.

SCOTLAND

Batteries and Accumulators

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what steps his Department has taken to promote research aimed at reducing the dangerous substance content and increasing the use of less polluting substitute substances in batteries and accumulators and into methods of recycling;

(2) what steps his Department has taken to reduce the volume of spent batteries and accumulators in household waste.

Mr. Lang: I refer the hon. Member to the replies given to him by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Industry and Consumer Affairs on Friday 19 January, volume 165, column 444.

Colliery Closures

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make any special provision for the development of rural areas affected by colliery closures.

Mr. Lang: Substantial support is made available through the Scottish Development Agency and British Coal Enterprise. This will be continued under the Scottish Enterprise proposals. The Government are pressing for the inclusion of all mining areas in Scotland in the European Commission's RECHAR initiative.

Offences Against Children

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many men have been prosecuted for (a) rape and (b) sexual offences against children including incest, in each case of the last five years in Scotland; how many have been convicted in each of these years; of these, how many have not been sent to prison; and how many have been sentenced to terms of imprisonment of not less than three years, between three and five years, between five and 10 years and over 10 years, respectively.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The available information is set out in the table. Information which separately identifies sexual offences against children is not held centrally.

Gynaecological Facilities

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent discussions he has held with Grampian and Highland health boards for the improvement of maternity, obstetric and gynaecological provision in Grampian west unit prior to the development of local facilities; and when he expects a final agreement to be reached.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Grampian health board has improved maternity, obstetric and gynaecology provision in Grampian west unit by increased consultant visits, more clinics and improved emergency arrangements. In addition agreement has been reached on the transfer of obstetric, gynaecology and paediatric services for patients west of the Spey to Highland health board.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to be able to announce a decision on the development of maternity, obstetric and gynaecological facilities in Moray subsequent to the option appraisal exercise carried out by Grampian health board and the recent recommendation made by the board; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: When I receive Grampian health board's formal submission of its recommended option I will give it due consideration.

School Governors

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the new system of appointment for governors of further education colleges in Scotland; what scrutiny there is of appointments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: Apart from the college principal, who is a member ex officio, members of college councils will be appointed by education authorities by 1 August 1990 after consulting such employer, trade union or other organisations as appear to them to represent interests relevant to the work of the college, and after considering any nominations by individual employers. I am sure the education authorities will scrutinise carefully candidates' suitability for appointment.

Core Curriculum

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the guidelines issued by the Scottish Education Department about the core curriculum for pupils in S3 and S4 in Scotland from 1992 are mandatory or optional; what choice will be available to pupils outside the core curriculum; whether the proposed core curriculum will apply to private schools in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The current guidelines on the secondary curriculum were prepared by the Scottish Consultative Council on the Curriculum and recommended to education authorities in Scottish Education Department circular No. 7/89. Schools are expected to adopt the guidelines with such variation of detail as may be appropriate to local circumstances. The core curriculum recommended for S3 and S4 occupies about 70 per cent. of available teaching time, thus leaving some 30 per cent. for optional courses. The guidelines have been made available to the independent schools, but it is for those schools to decide what use, if any, they will make of them.

Crofters

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will adjust the levels of grant and loans available under the crofters building grants and loan scheme in line with inflation.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The levels of grant and loans are currently being reviewed and revised rates will be introduced in 1990-91.

Mentally Ill Patients

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take steps to ensure a co-ordinated approach between health boards and social health departments in Scotland on the provision of proper community care for long-term hospital patients who are mentally ill along the lines of that adopted in other parts of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lang: As stated in the White Paper "Caring for People", we intend to secure close co-operation between local authorities and health boards in the provision of appropriate community care services through the development of community care plans based on planning agreements. The National Health Service and Community Care Bill includes a provision placing a duty on local authorities to prepare such plans while the same result will be secured in the case of health boards by administrative means. We intend to monitor carefully the progress made in the implementation of plans through the reports which each local authority and health board will be required to provide.

Training

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much has been spent by central Government on (a) the employment training scheme and (b) YTS in Scotland in each year since the scheme's inception at constant 1988-89 prices.

Mr. Rifkind [holding answer 18 January 1990]: The amounts spent by central Government on employment training and YTS in Scotland in each year since the inception of the schemes are set out in the tables at constant 1988-89 prices.

Student Allowances

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether students of 16 years and older at the commencement of the course at a Scottish central institution who qualify for extra allowances under the SED scheme will continue to receive their allowances, following introduction of the student loan scheme; and whether they will continue to be uprated annually.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 22 January 1990]: Supplementary allowances will continue to be available to all eligible students under the student allowances scheme after the introduction of student loans in session 1990-91.

The level of supplementary allowances for session 1991-92 and subsequent years will be considered at the appropriate time in the light of all the circumstances, including available resources.

Health Education

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the review of health education has been completed; and when it will be published.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 22 January 1990]: Touche Ross management consultants submitted their report on the review of health education in Scotland on 21 December 1989. Their conclusions are currently being considered and I expect to announce the Government's views shortly.

EMPLOYMENT

Youth Training Scheme

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the latest details from the YTS leavers survey showing (a) the range and average wages earned, (b) the hours worked and (c) the types of jobs done by those leavers for those (i) in full-time work with the same employer, (ii) in full-time work with a different employer and (iii) in part-time work, giving the information separately for male and female and Great Britain totals.

Mr. Nicholls: The 100 per cent. follow-up survey of YTS leavers does not gather information about wages earned or specific number of hours worked.

The tables show the numbers and proportion of leavers who found full-time and part-time work in each occupational group. The information is given separately for all leavers, male and female.

Labour Statistics

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the latest number of (a) referrals to job clubs, (b) the number of starts with job clubs, (c) the number of job club leavers and (d) the number of job club leavers getting jobs or becoming unemployed for Great Britain and each Training Agency region for each month since May 1989.

Mr. Eggar: From May 1989 to November 1989, 81,725 people started with a job club. During the same period, there were 79,239 leavers, of whom 42,729 left to start work, a further 11,954 going on to some other positive outcome such as training, education or self-employment. Regional and monthly breakdowns are given in the table.

Because of the very large number of potential referrals points, the employment service does not keep statistics of referrals.

All job club members are unemployed and separate records are not kept of the number remaining out of work on ceasing to attend.

Mr. Nicholls: Data on stoppages of work and working days lost in unofficial disputes, where it is possible to make this distinction, are given in table 1. The statistics requested for years prior to 1987 are not available. Statistics for the docks and shipbuilding industries are not available except at disproportionate cost. Statistics on disputes solely in the Post Office are confidential. Where data are not available for a specific industry, the statistics for the broad industry classification into which they fall are given.

Restart

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many and what percentage of unemployed claimants called for Restart interviews have (a) stopped claiming benefit and (b) obtained regular full-time work, for the most recent convenient period.

Mr. Eggar: The aim of the Restart programme is to make contact with longer-term unemployed people and provide information and advice about opportunities to help them back to work. We do not collect information on how many people stop claiming benefit or obtain regular full-time employment as a result of being called for a Restart interview.

Burns Day

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will introduce legislation to make Burns day a United Kingdom public holiday annually on 25 January.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. and learned Friend has no such plans to do so.

Local Offices

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will establish an integrated jobcentre and unemployment benefit office in Thornaby, Cleveland.

Mr. Eggar: The employment service is working progressively to bring jobcentres and benefit offices together under one roof. This will provide a new and improved one-stop service.

I will ensure that the hon. Member is informed as soon as a decision about the future of the office at Thornaby has been taken.

Private Mines

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment in how many private mines registers are kept of the names and numbers of employees working underground; and if there have been (a) any warnings issued by Her Majesty's inspectors and (b) any prosecutions initiated in respect of the requirement to keep such registers.

Mr. Nicholls: All coal mines are required to keep registers of the numbers of persons going below ground and these are inspected as a matter of routine by the Health and Safety Executive's mines inspectors.

There have been no warnings issued or prosecutions initiated in respect of failure to comply with this requirement in the past five years.

Vocational Training

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether his Department will set up bursaries for young people aged between 16 and 19 years to pursue vocational training with companies located in western Europe; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: Opportunities for young people to spend part of their initial vocational training in other European countries already exists within YTS and European Community programmes for young people, including in particular the young workers exchange programme and Petra. I am keeping the need for further initiatives under review.

Mines Inspectorate

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what records are kept by the mines inspectorate.

Mr. Nicholls: The mines inspectorate keeps records under the following general subject headings:

Accidents
Whether fatal or major, date, time, description of injury and details of dangerous occurences.

Premise
Address, premise type, names of officials, reports of inspections at premises.

Registers
Complaints received, exemptions issued, equipment approvals issued.

Prosecutions
Date case heard, number of charges laid, result, fines imposed.

Notices
Number of Improvement and Prohibition notices issued and to whom.

Circulars
Internal instructions and information circulars issued; publications circulated.

Abandoned mine plans
Number of Ordnance survey sheets, relevant county, renovation status.

In addition, administrative records are kept as appropriate.

Action for Jobs

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much of the expenditure on Action For Jobs television advertising in 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88 was spent through the Central Office of Information.

Mr. Eggar: All the expenditure on Action for Jobs television advertising in 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88 was spent through the Central Office of Information.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Audiology

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the waiting list in audiology in Northern Ireland for (a) hearing tests and (b) fitting of hearing aids for the last three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Needham: Figures for audiology are not identified separately in waiting list data. In most cases a patient can expect to be assessed and, where appropriate, fitted with a hearing aid within three months of the first contact with his GP.

Beef

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received about the profitability of the beef industry in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Ulster Farmers Union has made representations to me about profit levels in the beef industry in Northern Ireland and I have had informative and useful discussions with UFU leaders on the matter.

Flooding

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on measures to reduce flooding.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department of Agriculture (NI) is empowered by the Drainage (Northern Ireland) Order 1973 to carry out drainage works on watercourses or works on sea defences where these have been designated by the Drainage Council for Northern Ireland and where, in the Department's opinion, works are expedient for the drainage of land. Decisions are informed by financial appraisal methods in use thoughout the United Kingdom.

The Department's powers under this order are permissive and are directed towards a better drainage of land. The order protects the Department inter alia from liability for any damage which may happen to other land or property through or by the accidental overflowing of a watercourse.

A high standard of flood protection is set in scheme proposals for urban areas, but the Department does not claim to prevent flooding in all circumstances.

Total annual expenditure on drainage works in each of the next three financial years is estimated at £19 million.

Bank Robbery, Athy

Mr. Stanbrook: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if, under the terms of the Anglo-Irish Agreement, he will call on the Government of the Irish Republic for an immediate report on the circumstances of the killing of a bank robber by armed police at Athy in the Irish Republic on Friday 12 January; if he will seek a judicial inquiry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: This is not a matter which we consider appropriate to raise under the terms of the Anglo-Irish Agreement.

Fair Employment Commission

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which of the following employers in Northern Ireland were requested, prior to the nominated date of 15 January, to register with the Fair Employment Commission for Northern Ireland in accordance with the Fair Employment (Northern Ireland) Act 1989: (a) Xtra-vision Ltd, (b) The Bank of Ireland, (c) Irish Lights, (d) The Irish League of Credit Unions, (e) Irish National Foresters, (f) The Irish National Teachers Organisation, (g) The Irish Tourist Board, (h) Irish Life Assurance Co. Ltd, (i) Irish Transport and General Workers Union, (j) Irish Bonding Co. Ltd, (k) Bass Ireland Ltd and (l) Aer Lingus.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 16 January 1990]: Under the Fair Employment (NI) Act 1989 employers, with the exception of certain specified public sector employers, whose concerns satisfy the conditions for registration are obliged to apply for registration to the Fair Employment Commission within one month from 6 January 1990 or, if subsequently, from the time they first satisfy the condition for registration.

To assist registration the commission has issued application forms in advance to employers believed to have more than 25 employees, but it is under no obligation to do so and the duty to apply for registration rests firmly with employers.

The commission will not make public details of individual employers whom it has invited to register. Once initial registrations are made, however, the commission will keep a register, open to public inspection, of trades, businesses and other activities in which people are employed.

Protected Routes

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many protected routes are maintained by the Department of Environment roads service in each district council area in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 19 January 1990]: The Department of the Environment roads service maintains a total of 43 protected routes in Northern Ireland. It should be noted that some of these routes are common to more than one district council area.

Cattle Diseases

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many incidences of (a) bovine tuberculosis and (b) brucellosis have been recorded in each year since 1980; how many herds were affected; and if he will give details for each Department of Agriculture sub-office.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 19 January 1990]: Cattle and herd breakdowns for each divisional veterinary office area in respect of tuberculosis and brucellosis from 1980 to 1989 are given in the following tables:

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total amount of compensation paid by the Department of Agriculture in respect of (a) bovine tuberculosis and (b) brucellosis in each year since 1980; and if he will give details for areas dealt with by each departmental sub-office.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 19 January 1990]: The available information, giving total expenditure, is shown in the table. This information cannot be broken down by divisional veterinary office area. Net expenditure is given in brackets, that is, compensation paid less moneys released for carcases.

Parliamentary Boundary Commission

Mr. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the qualifications of the two members of the Parliamentary Boundary Commission for Northern Ireland whom he has appointed; and what criteria he applied for these appointments.

Mr. Cope: Both members appointed to the Parliamentary Boundary Commission meet the criteria that they should have relevant intellectual qualities, appropriate experience and/or professional qualifications, a commitment to public service and the ability to make independent and non-partisan judgments. Following normal practice, the views of the main political parties in Northern Ireland were sought before the appointments were made.

ENERGY

Energy and Environment Research Unit

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he or any of his Ministers have any present plans to meet the director and staff of the energy and environment research unit at the Open university.

Mr. Wakeham: No.

Sizewell B

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many representations he has received calling for the Sizewell B project to be halted; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The Government attach the highest importance to the completion of Sizewell B by Nuclear Electric. The station will maintain the PWR technology as an option for the future.

Colliery Sites (Environmental and Safety Work)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how much money has been spent by British Coal in each of the last five years on environmental and safety work at former colliery sites; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: This is a matter for British Coal.

Greenhouse Effect (Report)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make it his policy to obtain the report by Dr. Michael Grubb, published by the Royal Institute for International Affairs on 4 December, entitled "The Greenhouse Effect: Negotiating Targets."

Mr. Peter Morrison: A copy of this report is already held in the Department of Energy library.

Private Mines

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the number of private mines which had (a) up to nine, (b) 10 to 15, (c) 16 to 20, (d) 21 to 25, (e) 26 to 30 and (f) over 30 persons working underground in 1989.

Mr. Baldry: My Department does not have this information. The British Coal corporation is the licensing authority and I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

CEGB Statistical Yearbook

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will publish in the Official Report 1988-89 equivalents to tables 12, 13, 14 and 16 of the Central Electricity Generating Board statistical yearbook for 1987-88.

Mr. Wakeham: No. This is a matter for the Central Electricity Generating Board.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether his Department was consulted about the omission from the 1988-89 Central Electricity Generating Board statistical yearbook, annexed to its annual report, of up-to-date information replacing that given in tables 12, 13, 14 and 16 of the 1987-88 yearbook.

Mr. Wakeham: My Department was not asked for its views on the omission.

Electricity Meters

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy who will pay for the examining and testing of electricity meters under schedule 7 to the Electricity Act 1989.

Mr. Wakeham: It is intended that the costs of examining, testing and certifying meters under schedule 7, paragraph 5(4)(b) to the Electricity Act 1989 will be paid by the person submitting the meters.

It is intended that the costs of examining and testing meters under schedule 7, paragraph 7(3) to the Electricity Act 1989, will normally be paid by the electricity supplier concerned. Where persons other than an electricity supplier have required a meter examiner to carry out the duties given under schedule 7, paragraph 7, they may be asked to make a contribution towards these fees.

Nuclear Power

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the basis of his Department's calculations that the cost of energy produced by nuclear power exceeds the cost of that generated by fossil fuels.

Mr. Baldry: The Department's assessments of likely nuclear and fossil-generating costs are based on information supplied by the CEGB.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Oilseed and Cereal Substitutes

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to resist EEC proposals to levy new taxes on oilseed imports and imports of cereal substitutes.

Mr. Curry: The Government continue to press the case against unilateral increased import protection for oilseeds and cereal substitutes.

Scrapie

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what information he has concerning the geographical distribution of scrapie in sheep;

(2) what information he has concerning the susceptibility of different breeds of sheep to scrapie;

(3) whether he has any evidence to demonstrate any recent increase or decrease in the incidence of scrapie.

Mr. Maclean: Scrapie is not a notifiable disease and I therefore have no reliable information about its incidence, distribution or breed susceptibility.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has concerning the vertical transmissibility of scrapie in sheep.

Mr. Maclean: Detection of the scrapie agent in placenta and epidemiological studies of the natural disease in sheep have demonstrated that scrapie is transmissible from dam to offspring via the placenta.

Coastal Land Erosion

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many local authorities in England have applied for central Government financial assistance to alleviate the threat of coastal land erosion between 1979 and 1989; and how much money has been granted per annum to such schemes.

Mr. Maclean: Since my Department became responsible for the administration of grant under the Coast Protection Act 1949 in 1985, a total of 55 local authorities have submitted proposals for approval and grant aid for schemes to protect against coastal erosion. We have no similar information for earlier years. Grant payments over the period from 1979 to 1989 have been as follows:

	£ million
1979-80	5·7
1980-81	7·1
1981-82	8·3
1982-83	11·5
1983-84	11·5
1984-85	9·1
1985-86	7·8
1986-87	14·0
1987-88	9·8
1988-89	12·8

Cattle (Import Restrictions)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all those countries currently imposing import restrictions on live cattle or cattle products originating from the United Kingdom, indicating in respect of each country the nature of the restrictions.

Mr. Maclean: It would be impracticable to publish in the Official Report the large number of health conditions imposed by importing countries on live cattle or cattle products originating from the United Kingdom. Import conditions reflect the requirements of Community rules, where they exist and, in other cases, the rules of the countries of destination.

For live cattle these may include confirmation, as appropriate, of country/area/holding/animal freedom from specific diseases and possibly pre-export isolation and/or testing. In the case of cattle products, import rules may require that the products in question originate from healthy animals and have been produced or processed in a way that safeguards public and/or animal health. Importing countries generally require that live cattle or cattle products be accompanied by an export health certificate signed by an official veterinarian to confirm that the necessary conditions have been met.

Rabies

Sir David Price: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the threat of rabies reaching the United Kingdom through infected bats; and what measures can be taken to prevent it.

Mr. Maclean: There is no evidence of natural transmission to terrestrial mammals of the rabies-related virus found in some species of insectivorous bat on the continent. Therefore, while it is possible that an infected bat could be blown across the Channel on strong winds, the threat is extremely small. Some 600 bat carcases, submitted by bat groups and other organisations since 1987, have been examined with negative results. Imported bats are subject to six months quarantine or, in the case of vampire bats, life. If necessary powers would be taken to deal with any bat colony which might prove infected.

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowance

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will make a statement on the future level of hill livestock compensatory allowance;

(2) if it is his intention to offset the shortfall in the FEOGA contribution towards the hill livestock compensatory allowance in 1991; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what representations he has received on the future levels of hill livestock compensatory allowances; and if he will make a statement;

(4) when he expects to make an announcement on the hill livestock compensatory allowances;

(5) when his Department last reviewed the level of hill livestock compensatory allowance.

Mr. Curry: A statement on the outcome of the annual review of the economic conditions in the United Kingdom's hill and upland areas, including details of the arrangements for hill livestock compensatory allowances, will be made as soon as possible.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the total expenditure in each year since 1986 on hill livestock compensatory allowances.

Mr. Curry: The total payments in the United Kingdom on hill livestock compensatory allowances in each year since 1986 were as follows:

	£ million
1986	111
1987	113
1988	117
1989	[1]118

[1] Provisional.

Slaughterhouse Regulations

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many prosecutions initiated by (a) his Department and (b) local authorities resulted in convictions for breaches of the slaughterhouse regulations in each of the last five years.

Mr. Maclean: Enforcement of slaughterhouse hygiene legislation is the responsibility of local authorities (district councils). No records of enforcement actions are collected centrally.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will introduce an immediate scheme of slaughterhouse inspections by the state veterinary service without prior notification to the abattoir proprietors.

Mr. Maclean: No. Local authorities (district councils) are responsible for the enforcement of hygiene and welfare standards in slaughterhouses. Officers of the state veterinary service make periodic visits to all plants to give advice. It is usual, and more effective, for arrangements for these visits to be made with the local authority and the management of the plant concerned. Exceptionally, unannounced visits are made in response to reports of problems at a plant.

Birds (Importation)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what changes he is making in the quarantine regulations and practice in relation to the importation of rain-forest birds and parrots.

Mr. Maclean: The examination by my officials of quarantine conditions for captive birds imported into this country, referred to in the reply given to the hon. Member for Linlithgow on 20 December 1989, Official Report, column 350, continues and I am therefore not yet able to say what changes may be made.

Farmers (Borrowing)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has on the total amount borrowed by farmers in the United Kingdom in each year since 1983.

Mr. Maclean: Information on the total amount borrowed by farmers in the United Kingdom is not available. However, figures for the total liabilities of United Kingdom agriculture which include borrowings by agricultural landlords as well as by farmers but exclude borrowing for private purposes are as follows:

	[1]£ million
1983	7,300
1984	7,650
1985	8,250
1986	8,350
1987	8,550
1988	9,250

[1] At 31 December.

Interest Rates

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to alleviate the effects of high interest rates on small and medium-sized farms.

Mr. Maclean: Policy on interest rates is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer. He has made plain the Government's belief that even those small businesses that are dependent on bank borrowing and are adversely affected in the short term by higher interest rates would be damaged far more by the resurgence of inflation that would otherwise occur.

Green Pound

Mr. Amos: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the current level of green pound exchange rates; and what action he intends to take to obtain a devaluation of the green pound.

Mr. Curry: The current level of our real monetary gaps, which represent the difference between green and market exchange rates, range from −9·567 per cent. for pigs to −17·990 per cent. for sheep. The Commission has proposed green pound devaluations as part of the 1990 price review, and these are currently under discussion in the Council of Ministers.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to devalue the green pound.

Mr. Curry: The Commission has made proposals for green pound devaluations as part of the 1990 price proposals and these are currently under discussion in the Council of Ministers.

Less-favoured Areas

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to announce the results of appeals submitted to the European Commission for the designation of less-favoured area status for land in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maclean: As soon as we have a decision from the European Commission.

Fishing Industry

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will detail the total assistance given to the United Kingdom fishing industry in each year since 1974.

Mr. Curry [holding answer 19 January]: The information requested is contained in the relevant chapter of the Government's expenditure plans for the years in question. Copies are available in the Library of the House. The plans show the direct expenditure on grant aid for the construction and modernisation of fishing vessels, harbour grants, decommissioning of fishing vessels, EC grant aid and expenditure on market support. There has also been substantial expenditure on research and other scientific work and on fishery protection. In 1989-90 the United Kingdom fisheries departments expect to spend £15·1 million on sea fisheries research and scientific investigation and £18·7 million on fisheries protection, including aerial surveillance.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has as to the number of prosecutions in each European Community country in the latest year for which figures are available for (a) fishing with incorrectly sized nets and (b) overfishing.

Mr. Curry [holding answer 19 January]: The information is not available in the form requested. However, the following tables show infringements of EC fisheries legislation which member states have reported to the Commission under regulation 3561/85 as having been brought before the relevant national courts:

Fishing with illegal gear

	1988
Belgium	6
Denmark	11
West Germany	4
France	174
Ireland	4
Netherlands	25
Portugal	3
United Kingdom	38
Spain	—

Illegal catch (resulting from direct fishery or by catch)

	1988
Belgium	—
Denmark	77
West Germany	—
France	12
Ireland	10
Netherlands	121
Portugal	—
United Kingdom	13
Spain	—

It is not possible to draw conclusions from these figures which relate to information reported to the Commission rather than any comparable basis of actual infringement.

Fish Stocks

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the national fixed percentage share of fish stocks for each European Community country in (a) 1983, (b) 1986, (c) 1989 and (d) 1990.

Mr. Curry [holding answer 19 January]: Member states' fixed percentage shares of relevant total allowable catches were agreed as part of the common fisheries policy settlement in 1983. These fixed percentages have not changed since then, apart from minor adjustments to accommodate the accession of Spain and Portugal and the recognition of Hague preference in 1989 and 1990. The percentage shares are reflected in the quotas allocated to each member state under each of the 102 TACS which the Community sets each year. The quota figures for 1988, Council regulation 3977/87 (Official Journal 31.12.57 No. L 375), reflect the percentage allocations without any adjustment for Hague preference.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if, in the light of the Tyrell committee's report, he will now introduce random testing for bovine spongiform encephalopathy in all cattle slaughtered for human consumption.

Mr. Maclean: No. The Tyrell committee considered such testing to be of low priority.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has any evidence of bovine spongiform encephalopathy being caused other than by ingestion of scrapie-infected foodstuff.

Mr. Maclean: There is no evidence to suggest that BSE infection under field conditions has been caused by any means other than by the ingestion of feedstuffs containing a scrapie-like agent. However, research is in hand on the experimental transmission of BSE by inoculation and orally and to determine whether maternal transmission occurs.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has asked the Tyrell committee to continue its role of review and co-ordination of work into bovine spongiform encephalopathy; and if he will make a statement on the future of the committee.

Mr. Maclean: The establishment of a small group to provide advice on BSE and the other transmissible spongiform encephalopathies is currently being considered. We hope to make an announcement shortly.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has reviewed the regulations governing and procedures involved in the rendering of animal waste since the outbreak of bovine spongiform encephalopathy; and whether he proposes to modify either.

Mr. Maclean: Feeding ruminant-derived protein to ruminant animals has been prohibited since 18 July 1988. The time and temperature combinations necessary to inactivate the BSE agent with certainty have not yet been identified. It would therefore be inappropriate at this stage to consider modifying the existing regulations controlling rendering practices.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Carmarthen (Mr. Williams) on 29 November 1989, Official Report, column 307, if he will give the number of cases of cows having been certified as contracting bovine spongiform encephalopathy in 1989 up to the end of December.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 22 January 1990]: In 1989, 6,853 cases of BSE were confirmed in Great Britain.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food who receives compensation if a bovine spongiform encephalopathy infected animal is found in (a) a livestock market or (b) a slaughterhouse; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 22 January 1990]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Caerphilly (Mr. Davies) on 18 January Official Report, column 409.

ENVIRONMENT

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing the Government Departments and agencies occupying accommodation at the Brooklands avenue site in Cambridge with effect from 1 January, indicating the number of civil servants engaged in each, the area of space occupied by each such Department or agency, the approximate cost per square foot of this accommodation, broken down by Department or agency, and the overheads attributable to each.

Mr. Richard Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the total post-revaluation rateable values by standard region and by class of property.

Mr. Chope: The total non-domestic rateable values shown on the lists deposited with local authorities on 20 December by region and broad property type are shown in the table:

Rates

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) by what percentage the rate imposed by Bassetlaw district council increased in each year from 1980 to date;

(2) by what percentage the rate imposed by Newark and Sherwood district council increased in each year from 1980 to date;

(3) by what percentage the rate imposed by Nottinghamshire county council increased in each year from 1980 to date.

Mr. Chope: The percentage changes over the previous years are as follows:

	Bassetlaw DC Local Rate	Newark and Sherwood DC Local Rate	Nottingham-shire CC Precept
	per cent.	per cent.	per cent.
1980-81	+88·5	+46·3	+12·7
1981-82	+176·8	+67·7	+29·0
1982-83	−25·5	+16·9	+27·5

1988-89	+9·0	+22·5	+7·2
1989-90	+7·4	+7·9	+3·6

Local rate is the rate charged by the district council including the average parish rate; precept is the rate levied by the county council.

Land and Sea Environment

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the reports on land and sea environment commissioned by his Department over the past five years; and whether they were published.

Mr. Trippier: My Department includes a list of DOE-published pollution papers and reports in the digests of environmental protection and water statistics. This list is complemented by the list of published research reports given in the DOE biennal R and D reports. Both publications include reports on land and marine pollution and copies of both are held in the Library of the House.

"Sustaining our Common Future"

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many copies of the document "Sustaining our Common Future", produced by his Department have been printed; and what attempts have been made to give the report a wide circulation.

Mr. Trippier: A total of 10,000 copies have been printed of "Sustaining our Common Future", my Department's report on the substantial progress made by the United Kingdom in following up the recommendations of the report of the World Commission on Environment and Development. The report has been very well received and copies have been sent to, among others, hon. Members, other Government Departments, non-governmental organisations, local authorities and business organisations, as well as overseas Governments and participants in a number of international conferences.

Rate Support Grant

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the rate support grant as a percentage of local authority expenditure in (a) 1979-80 and (b) 1988-89.

Mr. Chope: Rate support grant as a percentage of local authority relevant expenditure in England was 49·3 per cent. in 1979-80 and 31·2 per cent. in 1988-89.

Thames Path

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made in the establishment of a Thames path; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment approved proposals for the establishment of a Thames path on 29 September 1989 and responsibility for its implementation now rests with the Countryside Commission and the relevant local authorities.

Carbon Dioxide

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much carbon dioxide is in the atmosphere now; at what rate carbon dioxide becomes absorbed by plants and plankton; at what rate carbon dioxide is being discharged into the atmosphere; what is his estimate of the amount of carbon dioxide permitted in the atmosphere before an increase in global temperature occurs; when the atmosphere will be saturated by carbon dioxide; and what will be the overall effect.

Mr. Trippier: The concentration of carbon dioxide in the atmosphere is currently about 350 parts per million by volume. Land and ocean-based plants are estimated to absorb some 800,000 million tonnes of carbon dioxide annually, which is approximately balanced by the natural annual discharges. Man-made emissions to atmosphere are estimated to be between 18,000 and 25,000 million tonnes of carbon dioxide annually. Any increase in atmospheric concentration of carbon dioxide would be expected to lead to some global warming. The scale of the effect is currently under review by the UNEP/WMO intergovernmental panel on climate change. The measured rise of about 0·5 deg. C in average global temperature in the past 130 years is consistent with model predictions of the increase to be expected as concentrations of carbon dioxide and other greenhouse gases have risen from pre-industrial values. No projections of future man-made emissions lead to saturation of the atmosphere by carbon dioxide.

Green Telephone Line

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any proposals to establish a green telephone line in Britain.

Mr. Trippier: No.

Greenhouse Effect

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what gases, other than carbon dioxide, are thought to contribute to the greenhouse effect; what is their percentage currently in the atmosphere; and which sources, man-made and natural, are the main causes for emissions of these gases.

Mr. Trippier: Greenhouse gases, excluding carbon dioxide, their current (1988) average atmospheric concentration and the main sources believed to be responsible for their emissions are set out in the booklet "Global Climate Change"; copies of which may be found in the House Library.

Outdoor Leisure Maps

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects the Ordnance Survey to publish a revised outdoor leisure map of the Conwy valley based on the second series maps; whether the map will be printed back to back with the Snowdon sheet; and what plans there are for new outdoor leisure maps.

Mr. Trippier: Ordnance Survey plans to publish a new edition of the outdoor leisure map of Conwy valley to second series specification during 1992. The map will be printed back to back with the Snowdon outdoor leisure sheet.

Ordnance Survey is continually reviewing its range of maps and services to ensure that the needs of the market are met within the resources available and that the required return on investment is achieved. The outdoor leisure map series is no exception to this and any change in outdoor leisure map coverage will be dictated by these marketing principles.

Climate Change

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the membership of the inter-governmental panel on climate change.

Mr. Trippier: The IPCC has no formal membership. Its meetings are open to member states of the United Nations, and are also attended by representatives of non-governmental, national and international environmental and energy organisations.

Set-aside Land

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he proposes to increase the sums available for the countryside premium on set-aside land, in terms of (a) the amount available for the scheme as a whole and (b) the premium payable per hectare.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I have been delighted by the response to the countryside premium in its first year; the Countryside Commission has drawn up agreements with farmers covering over 3,500 hectares of set-aside land, which will be managed to provide benefits for both landscape and wildlife and new areas of countryside for the public to enjoy. We need, however, to gain more experience of the operation of the scheme before taking decisions on any major changes to it.

Greenhouse Effect (Conference)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what papers were presented by his Department to the Royal National Institute for International Affairs conference on the greenhouse effect at Chatham house on 4 and 5 December.

Mr. Trippier: My right hon. Friend gave a paper to the Chatham house conference on 5 December on the subject of energy and the environment.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in tabular form the number of sites of special scientific interest which have been (a) irreversibly damaged and (b) damaged but reversible by (i) agriculture and forestry, (ii) activities for which planning consent was obtained and (iii) other courses, together with their proportion of total designated sites for each year since 1981.

Mr. Trippier: Full information on the numbers of SSSIs damaged since 1 April 1984, and the numbers of SSSIs (re-)notified under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981, is set out in the NCC's annual reports, copies of which are in the Library.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what powers the Nature Conservancy

Council has to negotiate financial management agreements with owners and occupiers of sites of special scientific interest for the carrying out of operations or activities for the purposes of maintaining, enhancing or restoring the nature conservation interest of such sites; and how many such agreements were made in each of the last five years.

Mr. Trippier: Full information on the number of management agreements reached by the NCC under section 15 of the Countryside Act 1968 is set out in the NCC's annual reports, copies of which are in the Library.

Toxic Chemicals

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will institute an immediate inquiry into how three vanloads of toxic chemicals, including cyanide compounds and phosphoric acid, came to be dumped in the Bowesfield lane area of Stockton-on-Tees on 18 January; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: An inquiry is not required. This is a matter for Cleveland county council as the waste disposal authority for the area. I understand that it has taken prompt and appropriate action to take control of all the material involved and will be considering the need for further action under its powers in the Control of Pollution Act 1974.

Ethanol

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give for the most recent year for which figures are available the volume of natural gas used in the production of ethanol.

Mr. Trippier: The information requested is not centrally collected.

Transferable Discount Schemes

Mrs. Rosie Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those local housing authorities which are operating approved transferable discount schemes under section 129 of the Housing Act 1988.

Mr. Chope: The following 43 local authorities are currently operating approved cash incentive schemes:

London Borough Councils

Brent
Bromley
Croydon
Ealing
Hammersmith and Fulham
Haringey
Harrow
Havering
Wandsworth
Westminster

District Councils

Adur
Arun
Aylesbury Vale
Carrick
Colchester
Gillingham
Gravesham
Harlow
Hart
Kennet
Luton
Mendip
New Forest
North Cornwall
Poole
Rochester
Rochford
Rushmoor
Shepway
Slough
South Bucks
South Kesteven
Spelthorne
St. Albans
Swale
Tandridge
Taunton Deane
Teignbridge
Test Valley
Tunbridge Wells
Watford
Wealden
Wrekin

Mrs. Rosie Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans his Department has to require all local housing authorities to operate approved schemes under section 129 of the Housing Act 1988.

Mr. Chope: None. Cash incentive schemes, under which existing local authority tenants are assisted to move into homes of their own and so release vacancies for reletting, can make a valuable contribution to housing the homeless, but it is for each authority to consider whether to seek approval for a scheme for its area.

Refuse Tips

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what research he has commissioned and proposes to commission on the best practice for management and after-use of large controlled household refuse tips.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 19 January 1990]: Research into landfill practices was initiated in the early 1970s. The first major publication of results of the work was the so-called "Brown Book", the co-operative programme of research into the behaviour of wastes in landfill sites, published in 1978.

Many of the results of the research are embodied in recent waste management papers, specifically No. 26 on "Landfilling Wastes" (1986), No. 4 on "Licensing of Waste Facilities" (1988) and No. 27 on "The Control of Landfill Gas" (1989). These papers provide technical guidance to the waste management industry.

Currently my Department is funding a programme of research, costing over £1 million annually, into landfill practices. Topics covered include microbiology of landfill gas and leachate generation; mechanisms of gas and leachate migration and attenuation; leachate management; modelling, risk assessment and landfill monitoring and landfill reinstatement.

My Department has arranged a conference on 1 March to present recent research results.

Lancashire County Council

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is the total revenue expenditure for Lancashire county council in 1989-90; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is his Department's estimated population for Lancashire and the amount spent by Lancashire county council per head of population, in 1989-90; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what is the total rate support grant paid or to be paid, plus any other individual grants, to Lancashire county council in 1989-90.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 18 January 1990]: The information is as follows:

	1989-90 £ million
Rate Support Grant	321·0
Specific and Supplementary Grants	79·3
Net Revenue Expenditure[1]	783·3
Total population (June 1988)[2]	1·382
Net Revenue Expenditure per head	567·0

[1] Rate Fund Revenue Account net current spending on services, plus net loan charges, contributions to/from other funds and accounts and net non relevant expenditure (such as net spending on Housing Benefits).

[2] Office of Population Censuses and Surveys latest estimate of total population. The aggregate of the estimated relevant populations for the districts of Lancashire used in the exemplifications placed in the Library of the House on 11 January 1990 is 1·048 million.

Rent Rises (South Hams)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out in the Official Report the basis of his Department's calculation that rent rises in council house property would be 95p per week as far as the housing stock in the South Hams is concerned.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 22 January 1990]: We have, for guideline purposes, assumed an increase in national rent income of 10 per cent. (£444 million). We intend to attribute this increase to councils in proportion to the value of their housing stocks, subject to adjustments to reflect existing rents and to keep guideline increases within a range from 95p to £4·50 a week. On the basis of past sales, we estimate that the value of South Hams' housing stock accounts for 0·088 per cent. of the total value of the national council housing stock. A guideline rent, calculated as a proportion of the national total without further adjustments, would be £21·37. As this is less than South Hams' current average rent of £25·75, we have assumed a guideline increase of 95p, the national minimum, which is less than would be required to keep pace with inflation. Subsidy will be paid to the authority on the assumption that its actual rent increase follows the guideline, but the council is free to determine its own rents.

Rate Support Grant (Sunderland)

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give, at 1979 prices, the amount of rate support grant given to Sunderland for each year since 1979 inclusive.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 22 January 1990]: The information is as follows:

Rate Support Grant—Sunderland

	Cash £ million	Real (1979-80 prices) £ million
1979-80[1]	65·6	65·6
1980-81	77·1	65·2
1981-82[2]	63·8	49·1
1982-83	64·7	46·5
1983-84	65·3	44·8
1984-85	65·6	42·9
1985-86	67·1	41·6
1986-87[3]	71·4	42·8
1987-88	78·1	44·5
1988-89	87·4	46·4
1989-90	86·7	43·0

Note:

The information given is not available on a comparable basis for all years ie.

[1] In 1979-80 and 1980-81 no RSG payments were made to Metropolitan County Councils and Sunderland's RSG was correspondingly higher in those years.

[2] In 1981-82—1985-86 inclusive RSG payments were made to Metropolitan Counties (and other upper tier authorities) and Sunderland's RSG was correspondingly lower.

[3] In April 1986 the Metropolitan County Councils (and the GLC) were abolished and arrangements for paying grant changed accordingly.

PSA

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many staff of the Property Services Agency are currently working in Hastings; and how many Property Services Agency staff it is anticipated will work in Hastings in each of the next three years;

(2) what efforts he has made to find alternative Government work for those Property Services Agency staff at Hastings whom the Property Services Agency will no longer require; and what the results of those efforts have been so far;

(3) whether he will make it his policy that sufficient Government work will be transferred to Hastings for Property Services Agency staff made surplus by the current reorganisation and preparation for privatisation.

Mr. Christopher Chope [holding answer 22 January 1990]: At 1 January 1990 PSA services employed 1,265 non-industrial staff at Hastings. It is not possible to forecast future staff numbers since these will depend partly on how much work the agency is able to win in competition after it is untied on 1 April 1990 and partly on decisions about where some of the agency's activities will be located.

Other Government Departments have been asked whether they have work which could be transferred to Hastings, to provide employment for the staff PSA will be releasing there. One Department has already expressed interest and we are hoping for more.

Pollution (Irish Sea)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has about the quantities and types of waste dumped into the Irish sea from sources in Great Britain; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 22 January 1990]: Licensing the disposal of waste at sea is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and his colleagues in Scotland and Northern Ireland. No licences have been granted for the disposal of liquid and solid industrial waste in the Irish sea and information on the disposal of sewage sludge and dredged spoil is given in the Ministry's, "Report on the disposal of waste at sea—1986 and 1987", a copy of which is in the Library (a similar report giving figures for 1988 is expected to be published shortly). Information on waste inputs generally in the Irish sea is given in the status report prepared by the International Council for the Exploration of the Seas, a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

HEALTH

Eyesight Checks

11. Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has yet received the results of his monitoring of the effects of charging for eyesight checks.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has yet received the results of his monitoring of the effects of charging for eyesight checks.

65. Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has yet received the results of his monitoring of the effects of charging for eyesight checks.

103. Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has yet received the results of his monitoring of the effects of charging for eyesight checks.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The results of a survey of the number of sight tests in the first quarter of 1990 compared with earlier periods should be available by the early summer. A summary will be placed in the Library.

Cold-Related Deaths

12. Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about cold-related deaths.

48. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about cold-related deaths.

68. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about cold-related deaths.

96. Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about cold-related deaths.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The five-year trends from 1955 to 1985 have seen the excess winter mortality—that is, the number of deaths that occur in the winter quarter in excess of the numbers that occur in the summer—decrease, from about 47 per cent. from 1951 to 1955, to 26 per cent. between 1981 and 1985 in Scotland, and from 68·2 to 29·3 per cent. in England and Wales.

Ambulance Dispute

13. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent meetings he has had with the chief executive of the National Health Service to discuss the ambulance dispute.

4. Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the ambulance workers' dispute.

46. Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the National Union of Public Employees' dispute in the ambulance service.

71. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will now meet representatives of ambulance staffs.

88. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent representations he has received about the ambulance men's dispute.

97. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has met representatives of ambulance workers since their current dispute commenced.

115. Mr. Robert Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will state the current policy in the ambulance service dispute; and what action he now proposes taking.

116. Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will now meet representatives of ambulance staff.

121. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he last met the National Health Service chief executive to discuss the ambulance service dispute.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I meet the chief executive of the National Health Service regularly to discuss the ambulance dispute. I have no intention of meeting representatives of ambulance staffs myself.

National Health Service Trusts

16. Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the latest figure for the number of hospitals, health districts and specialist units which have expressed an interest in becoming a self-governing National Health Service trust.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: A total of 190 units have expressed interest in National Health Service trust status, including a number with more than one hospital. Twelve expressions of interest cover all the facilities within the relevant districts, and 19 are single specialty units. Eighty of these units are considering the preparation of applications for the first wave, which we would expect to be established in April 1991. However, applications will not be invited until Parliament has approved the necessary legislation.

38. Mrs. Rosie Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what provision his Department has made for ambulance services within district health authorities to become self-governing trusts; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Government regard all hospitals and a number of other services, including ambulance services, as potentially eligible to apply for National Health Service trust status when Parliament has approved the necessary legislation. A number of ambulance services currently provided by health authorities have already expressed an interest in becoming National Health Service trusts.

21. Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the core services which self-governing hospitals must provide.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Core or "designated services" are simply those which can be provided only in a particular locality by a particular hospital which has become an NHS trust and to which district health authorities and GPs have no reasonable accessible alternative. This will vary in the light of local circumstances and the services available in each district. There is no basis upon which a national list could be compiled at this stage of all those local situations which will give rise to some services in some places being described as "designated services" when the first NHS trusts are established.

Health Authorities (Maintenance)

17. Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total figure for the estimated maintenance backlog for health authorities.

19. Mr. Cunliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total figure for the estimated maintenance backlog for health authorities.

Mr. Freeman: The first returns of information about the stock of National Health Service property, under the Korner requirements, are now being collected, but complete information will not be available until the figures for 1989-90 are received. Estimates have been received from 133 health authorities in respect of the year 1988-89. This indicates that in those authorities the total cost of bringing the estate to an overall condition which exhibits only minor deterioration amounts to about £1·2 billion.

Helicopter Ambulance Service

18. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which health regions have now established an emergency helicopter ambulance service.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not available centrally, but I am aware that dedicated helicopter ambulances are now operating in the London area out to the M25 and also South East Thames and South Western (Cornwall) RHAs. In addition, there are joint police/ambulance service helicopter projects in operation in Sussex, Wiltshire and the Thames valley.

Acute Services (Bromley)

22. Mr. Stanbrook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the proposal of Bromley health authority to centralise all the acute services of the district in one purpose-built hospital.

Mr. Freeman: Following the offer by the London borough of Bromley of a greenfield site in the geographical centre of the district, Bromley health authority is developing plans to centralise most of its acute inpatient services. The authority believes that in this way the best service will be offered to local people and the best use made of staff resources. Because of their scale, these proposals will need to be submitted to the RHA and, in due course, to Ministers for a final decision.

National Health Service and Community Care Bill

23. Mr. James Lamond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much has been spent by his Department, health authorities and family practitioner committees to prepare for the implementation of the National Health Service and Community Care Bill.

35. Mr. Leadbitter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much has been spent by his Department, health authorities and family practitioner committees to prepare for the implementation of the National Health Service and Community Care Bill.

74. Mr. Buckley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much has been spent by his Department, health authorities and family practitioner committees to prepare for the implementation of the National Health Service and Community Care Bill.

106. Mr. Bidwell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much has been spent by his Department, health authorities and family practitioner committees to prepare for the implementation of the National Health Service and Community Care Bill.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: In this financial year we expect to spend a total of £85 million on preparation for implementation of the Government's proposals to improve the National Health Service. This sum includes expenditure on such items as the creation of new consultant posts in expensive specialties and on staff training in better financial management.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he last met representatives of the black and Asian community to discuss the National Health Service and Community Care Bill; and which groups he met.

Mr. Freeman: I met representatives of the Overseas Doctors Association on 11 July 1989, when we discussed a variety of subjects related to the black and Asian community, including the Government's proposals to improve the Health Service.

On 31 January I shall be meeting representatives from the King's Fund for Health Services Development to discuss their work with ethnic minority groups. I shall also be visiting the National Community Health Resource on 7 February, again to discuss its activities in this field. I expect that during these meetings our proposals for the NHS and community care will be considered.

There are also discussions taking place at the moment about the possibility of a conference with the Overseas Doctors Association specifically to consider the effects of the White Paper proposals for ethnic minority groups.

69. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many local authority places will be removed from health authorities in each district in Greater London, after the enactment of the National Health Service and Community Care Bill in its present form.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information is as follows:

49. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received from professional bodies and trades unions concerning the National Health Service and Community Care Bill.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have had a large number of representations from a wide variety of sources.

36. Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if it is his intention that health circular 89(5) on the discharge of patients from hospitals will apply when in-patient services are contracted under the provisions of the National Health Service and Community Care Bill.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Yes. It is intended that this circular will continue to be implemented by district health authorities and by NHS trusts. In securing good quality services for their residents when placing contracts, district health authorities will need to consider monitoring the performance of those providing the service.

Infertility Treatments

24. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will bring forward proposals to improve the range and availability of infertility treatments.

34. Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will bring forward proposals to improve the range and availability of infertility treatments.

79. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will bring forward proposals to improve the range and availability of infertility treatment.

87. Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will bring forward proposals to improve the range and availability of infertility treatment.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: These matters are for individual health authorities to determine in the light of local needs and priorities. I understand that the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists has just put proposals for funding a medical audit unit to the Department and that this will include a programme of work aimed at auditing the delivery of infertility services with a view to encouraging improvements.

Ambulance Service

25. Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans to privatise the ambulance service.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have no plans to privatise this service.

General Practitioners, Kent

26. Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total number of support staff employed by general practitioners in Kent at present; and what the number was in 1979.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The total number of staff qualifying for direct reimbursement under the ancillary staff scheme in Kent increased by 78 per cent. from 1,109 (660 whole-time equivalents) in 1979 to 1,975 (1,116 whole-time equivalents) in 1988. A few general practitioners employ support staff outside the scope of the present scheme; information about these staff is not collected centrally.

Hospital Catering

27. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance and resources he gives to health authorities for the maintenance of cooking and beverage preparing areas in hospitals.

Mr. Freeman: It is for health authorities to devote appropriate resources to the maintenance of cooking and beverage preparation areas in hospitals from the funds allocated to them. Health authorities have a duty to comply with the provisions of the Health and Safety at Work etc Act 1974, and it is Government policy that they should comply with all other relevant statutes and regulations. The Department issues building guidance on the standards that it expects in new and upgraded food preparation areas.

AIDS

28. Mr. Lord: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total level of Government spending on caring for AIDS patients in the years 1988-89 and 1989-90; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Spending on care for AIDS patients is not separately identified. The specific provisions made available to health authorities in England as a contribution towards the costs of work to prevent the spread of HIV infection and the provision of diagnostic, treatment care and support services for people infected with the virus, including those with AIDS, were £58·74 million in 1988-89 and £121·90 million in 1989-90. In addition, an AIDS support grant allocation to local authorities of £7 million was introduced in 1989-90.

Dental Checks

Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his latest estimate of the effects of charging for dental checks on dental attendances.

29. Mr. Wall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his latest estimate of the effects of charging for dental checks on dental attendances.

Mr. Freeman: The annual data on dental examinations in England and Wales from 1984-85 to 1988-89 show a gently rising trend and we expect this to continue. As might be expected, however, attendances increased in the months prior to the introduction of the examination charge in January 1989 and fell immediately afterwards. It is too early to form a definitive view about any longer-term effects.

NHS (Consumer Involvement)

30. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will bring forward proposals to improve consumer involvement in the running of the National Health Service.

40. Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will bring forward proposals to improve consumer involvement in the running of the National Health Service.

92. Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will bring forward proposals to improve consumer involvement in the running of the National Health Service.

93. Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will bring forward proposals to improve consumer involvement in the running of the National Health Service.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Government's proposals to improve the Health Service are based on a full recognition of the importance of the consumer of health care—the patient. Our proposals put patients first and give hospitals and their staff incentives to take account of the individual patient's needs. District health authorities will work closely with local interest groups and consider the views of users of services. Complaint procedures will be made easier. The interests of the local community will continue to be represented by community health councils, which will act as a channel for consumer views to health authorities and the family service authorities. The delegation of decision-making powers to hospital and GP level will ensure that local staff will have responsibility for responding to local needs. At least two non-executive members of each NHS hospital trust will be drawn from the local community. This all adds up to a package of measures designed to ensure that NHS consumers benefit from improved, better directed, more patient-responsive services.

Social Work Training

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the future of social work training.

31. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the future of social work training.

95. Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the future of social work training.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Members to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Rutherglen (Mr. McAvoy) on 16 January at column 195.

Community Care

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received about the role of voluntary organisations in providing care in the community; and if he will make a statement.

32. Mr. John P. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what further representations he has received regarding the Government's proposals on community care.

39. Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which organisations concerned with community care he has met since the publication of the National Health Service and Community Care Bill.

60. Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received from voluntary organisations on the community care proposals set out in the White Paper "Caring for People".

83. Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what further representations he has received regarding the Government's proposals on community care.

89. Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what further representations he has received regarding the Government's proposals on community care.

91. Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what further representations he has received regarding the Government's proposals on community care.

104. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which organisations concerned with community care he has met since the publication of the National Health Service and Community Care Bill.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer my hon. Friend and the hon. Members to my replies on 12 December 1989 at columns 845-47. We have received further representations on the Government's proposals for community care. These representations have been from local authority associations, from individual directors of social services, from voluntary organisations, from carers' organisations and from independent providers of services. Most continue to express a general welcome for our proposals; detailed issues are being discussed with these and other organisations as part of our preparations for implementation of the main proposals in the White Paper, "Caring for People" in April 1991.

107. Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to ensure the involvement of qualified nurses in the move to care in the community for mental patients.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: As our recent published White Paper on community care, "Caring for People", reaffirms, nurses represent an important skilled resource. It will be essential that health and social services authorities and voluntary bodies make best use of both their time and skills. We propose to build on nurses' existing contributions to the health and social care needs of mentally ill and handicapped patients discharged from hospital and living in the community.

62. Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the Government's policy on the role of the private residential nursing home in the field of community care.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Our White Paper "Caring for People" makes it clear that we are firmly committed to a policy of community care which provides dignity and choice to frail and vulnerable people. While for most people this will be achieved by continuing to live in their own home, others would benefit from care in a more supportive environment. We believe that, along with other providers, independent sector nursing homes will continue to play an important part in meeting people's care needs.

Resource Management

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress is being made on the implementation of resource management.

33. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what further progress will be made with the resource management initiative in the coming financial year.

Mr. Freeman: The resource management initiative was launched in November 1986.

In March 1989 I announced the names of 50 hospitals starting resource management in 1989-90. I announced in December 1989 that 20 of those hospitals would invest in IT. The remaining 30 will invest substantially in IT in 1990-91. On 18 January I announced the names of 50 more hospitals which will implement the main resource management in 1990-91.

Computerised training packages on diagnostic related groups (DRGs) and DRG group software have been issued to all acute hospitals and a cost allocation model to the 50 acute hospitals which started resource management this year. This model will be issued to all acute hospitals shortly.

Breast Screening

37. Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress is being made in implementing a national breast screening service; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The table lists those breast screening centres in England which had become operational by the end of 1989.

Under the programme, all women aged between 50 and 64 years will be invited to be screened by mammography every three years; older women will be screened on request. The purpose of screening is to detect changes in breast tissue which might be cancerous at an early stage when treatment can be simple and most likely to be effective.

Plans for extending the breast screening programme to cover all district health authorities in England are well advanced; a full nationwide service comprising about 80 centres (including mobile units) is expected to become operational during 1990.

The breast screening programmes in the other parts of the United Kingdom are the responsibilities of my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and for Northern Ireland and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Screening centres operational as at December 1989

Family Planning

41. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the family planning service.

55. Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the family planning services.

76. Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the family planning services.

113. Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the family planning services.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Government regard family planning as an important preventive service that contributes to maternal and child health and to the stability of family life. The emphasis of family planning services is on enabling people to plan and space their families as they would wish, with the consequent beneficial effects on health and the quality of life.

The day-to-day management of family planning services is a matter for individual health authorities since they can best judge local circumstances and priorities. Planning guidelines for 1989-91, issued in July 1988, asked authorities to ensure that full use is made of family planning services as a resource in combating AIDS and to strike a balance between services provided by specialist clinics and those provided by GPs.

Disabled Persons

42. Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the implementation of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986.

57. Mr. John Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the implementation of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Members to the reply that I gave the hon. Members for Knowsley, North (Mr. Howarth) and for Liverpool, Garston (Mr. Loyden) earlier today.

Medical Audit

43. Mr. David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress is being made on the proposals for medical audit.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Encouraging progress is being made. Officials are working with members of the medical profession to develop and implement systems of medical audit. Across the country the Department has contributed £926,000 in direct funding to 43 projects which began in 1989. Regions and districts have also been funding projects of their own. Considerable further expansion is expected soon both in the hospital and community health service and in general practice. To enable this, my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State announced the provision of £31 million in 1990-91.

72. Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a further statement on the recently announced £31 million for medical audit.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: A total of £24 million is being divided among the regional health authorities in their proportion to their consultant numbers, subject to their submitting satisfactory medical audit implementation plans to the NHS management executive. A total of £5 million will be used in general practice. The remaining £2 million will be retained centrally for training and for projects which have national application.

General Practice (Computers)

45. Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many general practitioners are likely to be affected by the recently announced scheme to provide reimbursement for computers in general practice.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Potentially all medical practitioners could benefit to some extent, depending upon the circumstances of their practices. Details will be published shortly in the statement of fees and allowances.

Drugs

47. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on his proposals for the future supply of drugs to National Health Service patients.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The proposed introduction of indicative prescribing budgets will not affect the supply of necessary drugs to NHS patients. GPs will remain free to prescribe all medicines which are clinically necessary for their patients. Where there is a choice of equally effective drugs, GPs will be expected to take the relative costs into account. Indicative prescribing budgets will encourage more effective and economic prescribing and help to eliminate unnecessary expenditure in drugs, thus releasing money for other aspects of patient care in the NHS.

West Midlands RHA

50. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients were treated in the West Midlands regional health authority area in 1988; and what the comparable figure was in 1979.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is given in the table.

Patients treated, NHS hospitals, West Midlands Regional Health Authority, 1979 and 1988-89

	1979	1988-89	Percentage increase
In-patient cases treated	547,773	689,457	25·9
Day cases	51,769	99,349	91·9
New out-patients	731,764	813,067	11·1
Total out-patient attendance	3,315,153	3,757,255	13·3

Source: Returns SH3 (1978 data), SH3a, KP70, KH09 and KH18 (1988-89 data).

114. Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the allocation of funds to the West Midlands regional health authority for 1990-91.

Mr. Freeman: Regional health authorities' initial cash limits for 1990-91 will be announced shortly. But, as my hon. Friend may be aware, we have already announced that the West Midlands regional health authority will receive a cash increase of 6·76 per cent. on its general revenue allocation for next year.

NHS Indemnity Scheme

51. Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the National Health Service indemnity scheme for doctors in National Health Service hospitals is now in place.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Yes. With effect from 1 January 1990, health authorities are taking direct financial responsibility in claims of negligence against their medical staff. In December the Department of Health issued a circular to health authorities and a leaflet for all doctors and dentists in the hospital and community health services. A copy of the circular, HC(89)34, and of the leaflet, "Medical Negligence" are available in the Library.

Tuberculosis

52. Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of tuberculosis were reported in the last year for which figures are available; and what were the comparable figures for the previous five and 10 years.

Mr. Freeman: The information is shown in the table:

Notifications of tuberculosis in England and Wales for the years 1988, 1983 and 1978

Year	Notifications
1988	5,164
1983	6,803
1978	9,688

NHS Reforms

53. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether there are any experiments being undertaken to assess how the proposed National Health Service reforms would work.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Health Service is undertaking a wide range of projects designed to inform the implementation of the Government's proposals to improve services.

111. Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress is being made on plans for the implementation of the proposed reforms of the National Health Service.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We are making good progress in putting into action the changes outlined in the White Paper "Working for Patients". We are confident that the NHS will be ready to implement the basic elements of the new and better systems of matching growth and resources with expansion of patient services by April 1991, once Parliament approves the necessary legislation. By 1990-91 the total expenditure on the implementation of the Government's proposals to improve the Health Service will exceed £300 million.

We have issued detailed guidance on many subjects, including the education and training of non-medical staff. Guidance on the principles of the new contracting system was issued in September, and further guidance on additional aspects of the contracting system will be issued shortly.

We have recently published a GP fundholder programme, which gives more details about the operation of a GP practice fund.

A new working paper, the 11th in the series, has been published, called, "Framework for Information Systems: Overview". This working paper covers two documents issued for consultation, looking at the way ahead for information and information technology and concentrating on action in preparation for April 1991.

We have launched a project to support district health authorities in detailed work in developing the key role which DHAs will have under the new system of identifying and obtaining the best pattern of services which will most effectively meet all the health needs of the population they serve.

We have received over 180 expressions of interest from potential NHS hospital trusts. Seventy-nine of them are proceeding towards being the first wave of applicants for trust status within the NHS in April 1991. Subject to progress in Parliament, we expect many more to be ready for later waves of applicants in future years.

We have made £2 million available for implementation of medical audit this financial year, and a further £26 million has been allocated to hospital and community health services for the development of medical audit in 1990-91. A £4·5 million scheme has been launched to develop information technology skills. Demonstration projects, aimed at improving the quality of care and services to patients, have been announced for five outpatient departments. The principles of general management are being introduced into the family practitioner committee system.

Good progress is also being made in relation to medical education and research. As my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State explained in a speech on 10 July 1989, since sent to all hospital doctors, we intend to take powers to ensure, for instance, the continuation of high standards of undergraduate, postgraduate and continuing education and research in all NHS hospitals.

We will also ensure that postgraduate training posts are provided in NHS hospital trusts in accordance with the national objectives set out in "Achieving a Balance". Medical education and research will be further enhanced by the proposed increase in the service increment for training (SIFT) to meet 100 per cent. of the median excess costs of teaching hospitals. This will be distributed by regions in consultation with universities.

The National Health Service and Community Care Bill is now before the House.

Health Authorities (Maintenance Backlog)

Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total figure for the estimated maintenance backlog for health authorities.

54. Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total figure for the estimated maintenance backlog for health authorities.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Members to the reply that I gave the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms. Harman) on 10 January at columns 666-69.

Patient Services

56. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the use of contracts for patient services within the National Health Service.

Mr. Freeman: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave my hon. Friends the Members for Taunton (Mr. Nicholson) and for Hexham (Mr. Amos) on 12 December 1989 at columns 843-44.

Health Promotion

58. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent initiatives have been taken by his Department to assist with health promotion and disease prevention.

Mr. Freeman: We recognise the essential role of health promotion and disease prevention in sustaining and improving people's health. Recent major initiatives include:

(a) changes to the system of paying family doctors, which will be introduced from 1 April to encourage them to provide a wide range of health promotion and preventive activities. Examples include incentive payments for achieving specified levels of vaccination and immunisation and screening for cancer of the cervix; new payments for approved health promotion clinics; and a requirement on general practitioners to give advice on matters such as diet, exercise, alcohol, smoking and drugs;

(b) the holding of an expert symposium, jointly organised with the Health Education Authority (HEA), to assess the current and future spread of HIV and AIDS in the United Kingdom and to inform future development of the AIDS public education campaign. The proceedings of this symposium will be published shortly;

(c) the launch in December of the teenage smoking campaign, costing £2 million a year over the next five years and intended to dissuade young people from starting to smoke. National advertising is currently aimed at 11-15-year-olds;

(d) also in December, the making of a regulation under the Consumer Protection Act 1987 banning the manufacture and supply of oral snuff. The ban takes effect from 13 March 1990;

(e) further "Look After Your Heart" campaign national television and press advertising as part of LAYH's endeavours to encourage the adoption of healthier lifestyles;

(f) the preparation, with the HEA, of a further phase of a major information and education campaign on vaccination and immunisation for later this year.

112. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will increase the level of investment in health promotion and health education programmes.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. and learned Member to the reply that I gave the hon. Member for Brecon and Radnor (Mr. Livsey) on 12 December at column 600.

Expenditure

Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many district health authorities project a deficit for the end of the current financial year.

59. Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many district health authorities project a deficit for the end of the current financial year.

61. Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many district health authorities project a deficit for the end of the current financial year.

90. Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many district health authorities project a deficit for the end of the current financial year.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Health authority cash limit spending is monitored by my Department on a regional basis and we do not expect any region to exceed its cash limit for the year. Information about the financial position of district health authorities is not collected centrally. The NHS is spending more money this year than last in real terms and is treating more patients.

Junior Hospital Doctors

63. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to reduce the number of hours worked by junior hospital doctors.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I shall be meeting the profession for talks shortly to discuss what further action might now be appropriate to reduce the number of junior doctors on onerous rota commitments and how best to take this issue forward. Reports have now been received from all regional health authorities on the results of our June 1988 initiative. They show encouraging progress, but more needs to be done to achieve further reductions.

National Health Service Funding

64. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on funding for the National Health Service for 1990-91.

Mr. Freeman: In 1990-91 gross expenditure on the National Health Service in England is planned to increase to over £23·3 billion. In addition, if health authorities do no more than they have achieved in recent years, they will have a further £150 million from their cost improvement programmes. Taken together, this means that the resources available to the NHS next year will increase by the equivalent of nearly 11 per cent. in cash or about 5·5 per cent. in real terms.

British Medical Association

66. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he last met representatives of the British Medical Association; and what matters were discussed.

80. Mr. Lambie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he last met the British Medical Association and what subjects were discussed.

100. Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he last met the British Medical Association; and what subjects were discussed.

119. Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he last met the British Medical Association; and what subjects were discussed.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Members to the reply that my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State gave the hon. Member for Glasgow, Central (Mr. Watson) earlier today.

Eye Hospital (Hampshire)

67. Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will give his approval for a new eye hospital for the Southampton and South West Hampshire health district, the details of which have been submitted to his Department.

Mr. Freeman: The Department is responsible for giving approval in principle, within delegated limits, to any scheme which starts a cycle of project development with a total works cost of over £10 million. The total cost of the proposed relocation plan for the Southampton eye hospital is, I understand, around £4 million and therefore not subject to departmental approval.

Wandsworth Health Authority

70. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the overspending by the Wandsworth health authority in the current financial year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Wandsworth district health authority reports an overspend at the end of November of £2·197 million. This is projected to rise by the end of the financial year to a figure between £2·5 and £3·1 million. South West Thames region has been discussing with the district a package of economy measures to reduce the overspend in 1989-90 and to produce a balanced budget for 1990-91. The district is still considering what action to take.

Inpatients

73. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what figure he has for the average number of inpatients treated each week by the National Health Service: and what was the figure in 1979.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is given in the table:

Patients treated, per week, NHS hospitals, England, 1979 and 1988-89

	1979	1988-89
Inpatient cases treated	103,848	126,654

Source: Returns SH3 (1978 data), SH3a (1988-89 data).

Mental Health

75. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made on the capital fund for mental health projects.

117. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give further details of the capital loan fund for mental health projects.

Mr. Freeman: The intention is that the capital loans fund will operate from 1 April 1990. The total sum committed over the three years from that date will be £50 million. An executive letter is being issued to health authorities, which provides details of the new arrangements and asks for bids by the end of March for the year 1990-91.

General Practitioners (Earnings)

77. Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will state the average earnings of a general practitioner in the current year and the year 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The intended average gross income for general medical practitioners was £17,327 in 1979-80 and £45,761 in 1989-90, an increase of 31 per cent. in real terms. The average GP also received an income of £5,955 in 1979-80 in direct reimbursement of certain expenses: the 1989-90 figure is estimated to be £21,475, an increase of 79 per cent. in real terms.

Homeless People

78. Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what provision he has made for the health care needs of homeless people in 1990-91 and the subsequent year.

Mr. Freeman: It will be for individual health authorities and family practitioner committees to assess and meet the health care needs of all those, including any homeless, within their areas of responsibility. The Department, however, is funding several voluntary organisations helping the homeless and has funded two projects in London designed to promote new models of primary care. Following an encouraging evaluation, it is hoped that similar schemes will be developed elsewhere, In addition, the Department is examining what further measures could be taken to help those homeless who are mentally ill.

North West RHA

81. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients were treated by the North West regional health authority in 1978-79 and 1988-89 as inpatients, outpatients and day patients; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is as follows:

	1979	1989	Per cent.
In-patient cases (including day cases)	563,787	809,868	+43
Day cases	70,608	136,020	+93
Out patients (new cases)	699,717	779,084	+11

Park Hospital, Liverpool

82. Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will intervene with Liverpool regional health authority to prevent the closure or rundown of Park hospital in the Broadgreen constituency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave the hon. Member for Liverpool, Riverside (Mr. Parry) earlier today.

Regional Health Authorities (Resources)

84. Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give further details of the new system of distributing resources to regional health authorities.

Mr. Freeman: The new system was set out in paragraphs 4.8 to 4.10 of "Working for Patients" and in paragraphs 1.1 to 1.6 of Working Paper 2: "Funding and Contracts for Hospital Services", copies of which are available in the Library. For further details, I refer my hon. Friend to the replies that I gave the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, Central (Mr. Cousins) on 10 January at column 663 and today.

Social Workers

85. Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has received any recent representations from the Association of County Councils about a shortage of qualified social workers.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have no record of recent representations from the Association of County Councils on this issue. We are aware of the problems faced by some local authorities in attracting and retaining suitably qualified staff and of the steps that they, as employers, are taking to improve the position. The response by local authorities to the Department of Health's two training support programmes targeted at staff working with elderly people and those working in the field of child care, indicates that many social services departments will be enabled to increase significantly the number of their staff seconded to social work qualifying courses. The Department will keep under review possible measures to increase intakes to qualifying courses in social work.

Children Act

86. Mr. Cabom: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the progress being made with the implementation of the Children Act 1989.

108. Mr. Rees: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the progress being made with the implementation of the Children Act 1989.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Caerphilly (Mr. Davies) earlier today.

Regional Allocations

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, Central on 10 January, Official Report, column 663, he will publish a table showing in the case of each National Health Service region in 1990-91 (a) the basic allocation for population, (b) the effect of adjusting for morbidity, (c) the effect of adjustments for the relative costs of services to seven age bandings and (d) the damping effect of phasing in the new allocation system over three years.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 15 January 1990]: The information requested is given as follows in the form of allocation shares of the resources available nationally. Table 1 shows how these shares are changed as the various weighting factors within the new allocation formula are applied and table 2 the effect on 1990-91 of phasing the new formula over three years:

Tranx Advice Centre

94. Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has had any further discussions about the means of avoiding the closure of the Tranx tranquilliser advice centre.

Mr. Roger Freeman: No. Officials wrote to Tranx (UK) Ltd in December explaining that, because the statutory authorities are not prepared to fund local elements of the service that Tranx (UK) Ltd provides and given the constraints on central funds, the Department is unable to offer the organisation any further grant aid.

Doctors' Pay

98. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to be in a position to publish his reaction to the pay review body's recommendation on doctors' pay.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The doctors' and dentists' review body reports directly to my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister, who will announce the Government's decision in due course.

Hospital Building

99. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans for improving value for money in the hospital building programme.

Mr. Freeman: A number of initiatives aimed at improving the value for money of the hospital building programme are already in hand. These include a review of the procedures leading up to the approval of new building schemes, a review of the Department's procedural framework for processing building schemes in the NHS, and a review of project management. Each of these reviews will be reporting this year. The Department will continue to develop its building guidance, which has led to significant improvement in the value for money of new hospital building schemes.

The NHS reforms are expected to provide further incentives to improve the performance of the programme, and the future involvement of the Audit Commission in the NHS will bring the management of the estate, including the building programme, into sharper focus.

Sarum 89 Group

101. Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will consider further representations from the "Sarum 89" group of doctors in Salisbury, following study of their alternative White Paper on National Health Service reform.

Mr. Freeman: I have now held several useful meetings with the Sarum 89 group and I am grateful for their time and energy. We are always willing to consider fresh representations from this group on the detailed implementation of the Government's proposals to improve the Health Service.

Cervical Cancer

102. Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions he has had with the Northern regional health authority with regard to the incidence of cervical cancer; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The incidence of and mortality from cervical cancer varies considerably geographically and within various groups within the population. The main strategy for dealing with the disease is through a programme of early detection based on population screening programmes. I understand from the Northern regional health authority that it is well within target in covering its population through a comprehensive screening programme.

109. Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what change there has been in the number of deaths from cervical cancer between 1978 and 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The information is shown in the table:

Deaths from cancer of the cervix in England and Wales for the years 1978 to 1988

Year	Deaths
1978	2,153
1979	2,087
1980	2,068
1981	2,017
1982	1,932
1983	1,959
1984	1,899
1985	1,957
1986	2,004
1987	1,903

North East Thames RHA

105. Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give details of the hospital capital programme in the North East Thames region for 1990-91.

Mr. Freeman: The capital programme for North East Thames regional health authority for 1990-91 includes the following major schemes:

Schemes for which there is a Contractual Commitment
Whittington—Phase 1
Mile End—Geriatric Unit
Chase Farm Enabling Works
Whipps Cross Development
St. Bartholomews—New Theatres

Schemes not yet with a Contractual Commitment
Princess Alexandra Development
Chase Farm Main Development
Goodmayes DGH
Broomfield—Phase VII
Colchester—Phase IV
Bloomsbury—Hospital Development

Broomfield, Colchester and Bloomsbury are subject to the approval of Ministers. Further details of the capital programme can be obtained from North East Thames regional health authority.

Infant Deaths

110. Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give for the years 1979 and 1988 the rate of infant deaths within the first week of birth and the number of stillbirths.

Mr. Freeman: The information is shown in the table:

Early neonatal mortality rate and the number of stillbirths in England and Wales for the years 1979 and 1988

	1979	1988
Early neonatal mortality rate per 1000 livebirths	6·75	3·89
Stillbirths	5,125	3,382

Cornwall First Air Ambulance

118. Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a contribution to the cost of the Cornwall First Air Ambulance.

Mr. Freeman: It is for local health authorities to determine the level of and extent of services that they provide, taking into account the available resources and the competing demands upon them. However, the Department is funding an evaluation of this local initiative.

General Practitioners

120. Mr. Irvine: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many general practitioners there are in the National Health Service now; and how many there were in 1979.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: At 1 October 1988 (the latest year for which figures are available) there were 25,322 unrestricted general medical practitioners in England compared with 21,357 at 1 October 1979—an increase of 18·6 per cent.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for how many days general practitioners on duty over a weekend will be expected to work continuously under the new contract for general practitioners.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There are no specific requirements in the GPs' new contract for weekend duties or for working continuously. The responsibility placed upon GPs by regulations to provide all necessary and appropriate personal medical services for their patients on a 24 hours a day basis remains unchanged. Existing arrangements for delegating this responsibility also remain unchanged. The new requirement introduced by the National Health Service (General Medical and Pharmaceutical Services) Amendment (No. 2) Regulations 1989 is that GPs who are full time will be required to be available for surgery consultation and home visits for a minimum of 26 hours a week over five days at times convenient to their patients.

Hospital Services (Rural Areas)

122. Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will make a statement on his Department's policy on the provision of hospital services in rural areas.

Mr. Freeman: Small hospitals can play a valuable role in providing a range of services if that is what is needed locally. Under the proposals of the National Health Service and Community Care Bill, district health authorities will have responsibility for ensuring provision of a comprehensive range of services for their resident population. They will be able to take full account of the services offered by small hospitals in deciding where to place contracts.

Human Immunodeficiency Virus

123. Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the latest evidence as to the efficiency of the heterosexual transmission of the human immunodeficiency virus; and whether he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to my earlier reply to him on 11 December 1990 at column 502. A number of scientific journals have contained articles on this topic; these include the British Medical Journal (18 February 1989, pp 401-2, 411-15) and "AIDS 1988 2" (supplement 1) pp S49-56, copies of which are available in the Library.

Generic Medicines

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has received any recent representations on the quality control of foreign generic medications, including those from European Community countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have received no representations to date.

National Health Service Trust, Barnsley

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has received any representations regarding the setting up of a National Health Service trust in Barnsley.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No.

Donor Cards

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people were estimated to carry (a) kidney donor cards and (b) other organ donor cards, in each of the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: This information is not available in the form requested.

We now issue a single multi-organ donor card, which makes provision for the donation of individually specified, or all, organs.

Different sample surveys produce varying estimates of donor card ownership, but it appears likely that between 20 and 30 per cent. of the general public now possess a donor card. Possession of donor cards has risen substantially over the past decade. A survey carried out in November 1978 found that only 10 per cent. of those questioned possessed a signed card.

Soviet Union

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what communications he has received from his counterpart in the Soviet Union.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I was delighted to meet and host a dinner for Academician Chazov, the Minister for Health of the USSR, during his visit to the United Kingdom as a guest of Her Majesty's Government at the end of October last year, and for Mr. Gromyko, Deputy Minister of Health in the USSR, when he was here last week to discuss health trade matters. I have also received correspondence from Academician Chazov.

Regional Health Authorities

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many black and Asian people are currently serving on regional health authorities; and if he will name them.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information that the hon. Member requests is not available centrally. We do not monitor the ethnic composition of regional health authorities.

NHS Staff

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many posts in the National Health Service are either nominated by him or need his consultation before they are filled.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State does not nominate, nor is he consulted upon, the appointment of staff to posts in the National Health Service. Employment matters are entirely the responsibility of individual health authorities. So far as the appointment of chairmen and members of health authorities are concerned, details of those for which my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State is responsible were given in my reply to the hon. Member for Leicester, East on 12 December 1989 at columns 623-24.

Sterilisation Treatment

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list by district health authority in the Trent regional health authority the waiting times for women patients requesting National Health Service sterilisation treatment;

(2) if he will list by regional health authority the waiting times from women patients requesting National Health Service sterilisation treatment;

(3) if he will list by regional health authority, and by district health authority, the waiting times for colposcopy.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information on waiting time for individual procedures is not collected centrally.

Schizophrenia

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people suffering from schizophrenia have been released from mental institutions (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) in the North West region, during each of the last five years.

Mr. Freeman: The number of discharges of patients treated for a main diagnosis of schizophrenia from National Health Service mental illness hospitals and units for the last five available years, 1982-86, for England and the North Western regional health authority are shown in the table. The figures relate to discharges and cannot be related to individual patients; a patient may be admitted more than once in a year.

	England	North Western RHA
1982	24,594	2,348
1983	25,336	2,331
1984	25,934	2,683
1985	26,225	2,875
1986	26,077	2,621

The figures for Wales and Northern Ireland are a matter for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and for Northern Ireland respectively. The figures for Scotland are a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Community Pharmacy Contractors

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Health why it was decided to retain a cost plus system of remuneration and year-end review for medical practitioners and to terminate arrangements for community pharmacy contractors in England and Wales.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The arrangements for determining the remuneration of the professions providing family practitioner services are designed to reflect the different circumstances of each profession. The "cost plus" system of determining pharmacists' remuneration was brought to an end last year because it provided insufficient incentives to efficiency in the dispensing of medicines. We expect the measures contained in the White Papers "Promoting Better Health" and "Working for Patients" to improve value for money and raise standards of care in general practice.

Under-fives Provision

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what additional moneys he has allocated to voluntary organisations for the small grants scheme for under-fives in this financial year.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I am pleased to announce that the Department has just increased the amount allocated to voluntary organisations for the small grants scheme for under-fives and their families by £101,000. The additional allocations are as shown in the table:

Organisation	Additional allocation £
Pre-School Play Groups Association	50,000
National Council for Voluntary Child Care Organisation (Child Care)	10,000
National Childminding Association	10,000
National Toy Libraries Association (Play Matters)	11,000
National Playbus Association	10,000
Home Start Consultancy	10,000

This brings the total allocation to £425,000 in 1989-90.

Welfare Milk Scheme

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what representations he has received about the effects of changes to the welfare milk scheme; how many people in Bradford are now receiving weekly milk tokens; what groups of people are entitled to milk tokens; what estimates he has made of the number of people in Bradford who will no longer receive doorstep delivery of welfare milk; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what representations he has received about the impact upon those engaged in milk distribution from the discounting of welfare milk tokens; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: A period of eight months' consultation and discussion with interested parties preceded the announcement of the price to be paid by the Government for liquid welfare milk. There are no changes in the welfare milk scheme as far as recipients are concerned. Since the announcement my noble Friend Baroness Hooper met representatives of the dairy trade on 10 January to discuss implementation. Specific points about the revised pricing structure were further discussed between officials and the trade on 16 January. Early-day motions have been tabled, seeking reconsideration of our decision, and the regulation bringing the change into effect has been prayed against. In addition, a number of hon. Members have written expressing the concerns of their constituents.

Information about the number of welfare milk beneficiaries by area is not available, but we do not anticipate any changes since the scheme itself remains unchanged. Milk tokens will continue to be issued in respect of pregnant women and children under five in families receiving income support and to handicapped children aged five to 16 who, because of their handicap, are registered at a school. The revised pricing structure does not affect beneficiaries entitlement to welfare milk nor the way in which they choose to obtain it.

Emergency Services

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many departmental employees who are classified as emergency services receive shift allowances and incremental payments.

Mr. Freeman: None, in the Department of Health.

DEFENCE

Z-Berths

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any further reserve Z-berths have been introduced to date, since his answer to the hon. Member for Don Valley of 5 May 1989, Official Report, column 276.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No. I assume that the hon. Member is referring to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Bow and Poplar (Ms. Gordon) on 5 May 1989 at column 276. Swansea and Tilbury are still under discussion with local authorities as possible venues for visits by nuclear-powered submarines.

Northern Ireland

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will consider paying financial compensation to civilian employees of the Ministry of Defence working in Northern Ireland on the grounds of the special hazards and difficulties of their employment in the Province.

Mr. Neubert: A general principle of Civil Service pay is that compensation is not paid because of exposure to risk. The general conditions of service for staff serving in Northern Ireland are, however, kept under review.

Philippines (Personnel Carriers)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many Simba armoured personnel carriers have been supplied to the Philippines by GKN; what assurances have been received as to their proposed use; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will make a statement summarising the main features of the deal involving the sale of armoured personnel carriers to the Philippines, including details of offsetting arrangements.

Mr. Neubert: It has been the consistent policy of successive Administrations not to provide details of defence exports to specific countries.

Namibia

Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the British military contingent of the United Nations transition assistance group (UNTAG) in Namibia will return to the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The majority of the British military contingent will be returning from Namibia towards the end of January. It is planned that the remainder will return by early April in accordance with UNTAG's overall withdrawal plan. The contributions of the British armed forces and the civilian election advisers have been widely recognised as key elements in the successful involvement of the United Nations in helping Namibia achieve independence, and the House will wish to pay tribute to those concerned for their dedication and professionalism.

THE ARTS

Copyright Act 1911

Mr. Waller: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he has any plans to seek to extend the provisions of the Copyright Act 1911 to cover material published in the form of electronic or audio-visual media.

Mr. Luce: I have no plans to amend the Copyright Act 1911.

Royal Ballet

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he has received any request from the Royal Ballet for funds to assist it to tour the United States this summer.

Mr. Luce: I have received no such request. Overseas touring is the province of the British Council, which is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs.

Arts Council and Crafts Council

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Minister for the Arts (1) if he will explain the corporate roles of the Arts Council and the Crafts Council and list the similarities and differences between those roles; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will list the various craftspeople, educationists, retailers, guilds and societies active in the craft business which were consulted by the author of the Wilding report during the preparation of that report;

(3) if he will make a statement on the comparative performance, in the fields of business and fund-raising, of the Arts Council and of the Crafts Council;

(4) if he will make a statement on the Government's proposals for merging the Crafts Council with the Design Council.

Mr. Luce: In reaching a decision on the future of the Crafts Council, I am considering carefully the many representations I have received on this subject. I shall announce my conclusions as soon as possible, and I shall write to the hon. Member in more detail when I have done so. Before deciding whether to accept Mr. Wilding's recommendation to merge the Crafts Council with the Arts Council, I shall want to be sure that any new structure of support enables the crafts to continue to flourish. This Government are concerned to see the continued expansion of the crafts in this country.

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will list on a year-by-year basis the number of craftspersons grant-aided by the Crafts Advisory Committee and its successor, the Crafts Council, to help set up new businesses between 1971 and 1989, inclusive.

Mr. Luce: The information is as follows:

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service how many organisations and bodies have been established and taken on staff and premises since 1979 before they were put on a statutory basis by the passage of the authorising legislation through Parliament; and how much has been spent on this basis.

Mr. Luce: This information is not held centrally.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

The Attorney-General: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Preston (Mrs. Wise) on 17 January 1990 at column 260.

Hong Kong

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals the Government have laid down to retrain and re-employ ivory carvers in Hong Kong; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: The Hong Kong Government are currently holding discussions with representatives of the ivory carvers with a view to placing them on suitable retraining courses run by the Vocational Training Council or helping them to find alternative employment. The Hong Kong labour department has opened a special register to help ivory workers seeking new jobs and a number of them have already been placed.

Tibet

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Chinese Government to end martial law in Tibet; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: We have frequently made clear to the Chinese our concern about human rights in Tibet. We hope that the Chinese Government will follow up the lifting of martial law in Peking by taking further steps to strengthen the protection of human rights throughout China, including the lifting of martial law in Lhasa.

Mr. Andrew Balfour

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects Mr. Andrew Balfour to resume his official duties, and in what capacity.

Mr. Sainsbury: Mr. Balfour has been informed that his future is under consideration.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Corporation Tax

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish the amount of corporation tax paid by manufacturing industry in each financial year since 1978-79 and the proportion of the total corporation tax precept comprised by manufacturing in each of those years.

Mr. Lilley: Information on a comparable basis is available only from 1986-87 and is as follows:

Taking into account gross accrued interest of £2·2 billion, the Department for National Savings' contribution to the public sector debt repayment in 1989 was £1·5 billion.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Eastern Europe

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to ensure that United Kingdom aid for eastern European countries is invested in activities which are environmentally beneficial or neutral.

Mrs. Chalker: Bilateral British aid is so far confined to Poland. Projects supported there to date comprise mainly training, technical co-operation and consultancy studies which are environmentally neutral. However, the procedures which we use to assess proposals for funding include an explicit consideration of the effects on the environment. We are also discussing with the Polish authorities a programme of assistance in the energy sector, which will look at environmental concerns.

Know-How Funds

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report a list of projects approved to date under the know-how funds for Poland and Hungary, giving details of the type of project, the funding in cash and kind and the name of the United Kingdom organising body.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Romsey and Waterside (Mr. Colvin) on 18 December. Most activities are being undertaken by firms or institutions engaged directly by the joint FCO/ODA Unit, or by the British Council on the unit's behalf. Additions to the list are given in the table:

Poland

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will provide details of expenditure approved to date from the £15 million agriculture project fund for Poland.

Mrs. Chalker: No expenditure has yet been approved. We are still at the stage of working out the details of the project.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Engineering Courses

Dr. Bray: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what surveys have been carried out or commissioned by his Department since 1987 to find out why fewer sixth formers were applying for engineering courses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The Department and the engineering industry commissioned a survey in 1989 into the factors which influence young people in deciding whether or not to study engineering. It covers both students at school or in further education on A-level mathematics and physics courses, and new entrants to degree courses other than engineering. I expect the results of this survey, which is being carried out by the National Foundation for Educational Research, to be available in March-April this year.

Research Councils

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what resources he expects to make available to the five research councils to enable the re-equipment of laboratories and the replacement of aging apparatus; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: On 15 November at columns 272-76, my right hon. Friend announced that an additional £61 million would be made available for the science budget in 1990-91, together with planning additions for the next two years of £58 million and £59 million. He announced the allocations to the five research councils on 10 January at columns 623-24. It is for the research councils to determine how to spend the additional funds made available to them.

However, in its advice to the Secretary of State on the allocations, the Advisory Board for the Research Councils advised that a high proportion of these funds should be directed to preserving the quality of United Kingdom science. The ABRC also suggested that the research councils should deploy some of these additional funds to increase equipment provision through research grants, and that funding of new research programmes and inter-disciplinary research centres would also include some provision for equipment.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what are his long-term plans with respect to the formation of a national research council; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what are his plans for reform of the Advisory Board for the Research Councils; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what are his proposals for establishing a working group to examine the scope for merging the AFRC and the NERC; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The proposal for a single national research council was made in the report of a review group established by the Advisory Board for the Research Councils to look at the organisation of council responsibilities for biological sciences. The culmination of this process was the advice offered by the chairman of the board in his letter of 15 November to my right hon. Friend which recommended that the ABRC should be reconstituted as a smaller body specifically charged with promoting greater harmonisation of research council activities. The board also offered advice about improving co-ordination between the AFRC and NERC research programmes, particularly in terrestrial life sciences.

My right hon. Friend wrote to the chairman of the ABRC on 19 January announcing the Government's decision to reconstitute the ABRC from 1 April as recommended by the board; and noting that he and his colleagues were considering the board's subsequent advice concerning the AFRC and NERC. For the full text of the letter I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend's reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Portsmouth, South (Mr. Martin) on 19 January.

Irradiated Rodent Carcases

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when the practice of disposal of irradiated rodent carcases used in research inside human cadavers was stopped by the Medical Research Council; and where these cadavers were buried.

Mr. Jackson: The Medical Research Council is not aware of the practice of the disposal of irradiated rodent carcases used in research inside human cadavers.

Director of Education, Wandsworth

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he last met the director of education of the London borough of Wandsworth; and what subjects were discussed.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend and I met Mr. Naismith and other interested parties on 9 January to discuss plans for city technology colleges in Wandsworth. I met Mr. Naismith and Councillor Edward Lister on 11 January to discuss a number of ILEA-owned sites in Wandsworth which will be subject to the property transfer orders being made by my right hon. Friend under section 168 of the Education Reform Act.

Higher Education (Students)

Mr. John P. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to increase the number of students in higher education; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: Actively fostered by the Government's education policies and consistent with the general aim of securing further substantial increases in participation above present record levels, we expect to see significant growth in student numbers over the 1990s. Our latest projection indicates full-time equivalent student numbers rising from about 760,000 in 1988 to about 890,000 by the turn of the century.

Interim Advisory Committee

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from the interim advisory committee.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend asked the interim advisory committee to submit its report by the end of January. He will be arranging for its early publication once he has received it.

Teachers

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to recognise teachers of excellence by means of higher salaries.

Mrs. Rumbold: Local education authorities can award incentive allowances to teachers demonstrating outstanding ability in the classroom. The Government hope that they will make full use of this discretion.

Student Loans

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent representations he has received about his proposals for a student loan scheme.

Mr. Jackson: Since the publication of the White Paper on top-up loans for students we have received about 5,050 letters, including 64 petitions. Of those, about 700 have been received since publication of the Education (Student Loans) Bill.

Disabled Students' Allowance

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will list any additional information his Department plans to take into account when calculating the maximum level of the disabled students' allowance;

(2) if he will list the information his Department took into account when calculating the maximum level of the disabled students' allowance.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend continues to take into account all the relevant information available to him, when determining within available resources the rate and conditions of the disabled students' allowance. This year, in addition to information about cost increases generally, he has received representations from interested parties and detailed evidence from disablement organisations about students' circumstances and needs, which he is considering carefully.

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make it his policy that the upper limit of the disabled students' allowance will not be frozen in the event of the introduction of his proposals for student loans.

Mr. Jackson: The way in which the disabled students' and other supplementary allowances will be handled in the years after 1990-91 when the main mandatory grant rates are to be frozen will be considered in the light of all the circumstances, including the availability of resources, prevailing at the time.

Special Educational Needs

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the most recent figure for the number of pupils and students with statements of special educational needs in England.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The provisional total number of pupils with statements of special educational needs in England was 138,173 on 21 January 1989, with one authority's return outstanding.

ENERGY

Nuclear Safeguards

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what proportion of the costs allocated under (a) in annex B of his Department's memorandum to the Energy Committee on fast reactors published in HC 613, page 6, to reprocessing operations, fissure materials, and technical support for the Dounreay plants, in 1989-90, was spent on nuclear safeguards activities;

(2) what proportion of the costs allocated under (b) in annex B of his Department's memorandum to the Energy Committee on fast reactors, published in HC 613, page 6, to reprocessing services in support of European collaboration, materials, design and component proving and for engineering in the research and development programme in 1989-90 was spent on nuclear safeguards activities.

Mr. Baldry: The AEA recovers the cost of its nuclear safeguards work as an overhead from its various nuclear activities. In 1989-90, this cost represents some 0·2 per cent. of costs allocated under item (a) Dounreay plants, and some 0·1 per cent. of expenditure allocated under item (b) research and development in annex B of the Department's memorandum to the Energy Committee on fast reactors.

Plutonium

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East (Mr. Barnes), 8 January, Official Report, column 474, when the discussions to which he makes reference began; how many meetings have been held to date, and where; which states have participated; and when he expects an agreement on safeguarding wastes containing civil material will be concluded.

Mr. Baldry: Discussions with the IAEA on the safeguards to be applied to waste containing civil nuclear material began in 1988. Three consultants' meetings have been held in Vienna. These were held on 12 to 16 September 1988, 12 to 16 June 1989 and 9 to 13 October 1989. Representatives from the United Kingdom, United States of America, Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, France, Federal Republic of Germany, Japan, Sweden, Canada, and Euratom attended the meetings. The IAEA is currently considering the consultants' recommendations.

WALES

Landslips

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, between 1979 and 1989, how many local authorities in south and west Wales have applied for Welsh Office financial assistance for villages threatened by landslides and landslips which have not been directly caused by mining; how much money has been granted per annum by his office on such schemes, and if he will list them.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Department has no powers to give financial assistance for villages threatened by landslides and landslips, but it can advise local authorities on financing necessary works.

Coastal Erosion

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many local authorities in Wales have applied for central Government assistance since 1979 to tackle coastal land erosion problems; how much money per annum has been allocated by central Government in this period; and which schemes have been supported.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Fourteen maritime district councils in Wales have applied since 1979 for central Government assistance for schemes, approved by the Department under section 5 of the Coast Protection Act 1949, to tackle coastal erosion problems.

The schemes supported under the Act and the actual amount of grant paid during each financial year are listed in the tables:

Financial Year	Grant Paid
1979-80	984,331
1980-81	980,659
1981-82	1,553,313
1982-83	2,048,111
1983-84	749,718

1987-88	1,436,051
1988-89	727,376
Total	11,117,890

The provision for the financial year 1989-90 is £2·9 million.

Note: Some of the grant paid in earlier years will relate to schemes approved before 1979 and not included in the list of schemes in the table.

The Arts

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which matters of art in Wales fall under his responsibilities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Primary responsibility for arts matters in Wales rests with the Welsh Arts Council. However my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has responsibility for aspects of the visual arts and general museums matters, together with sponsorship responsibility for the National Museum of Wales.

Japanese Investment

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what efforts are being made to strengthen Wales's chances of obtaining Japanese investment.

Mr. Peter Walker: Wales continues to be extremely successful in obtaining inward investment from Japan and has secured 19 projects promising over 2,000 jobs in the last two years. A number of measures have been introduced to further improve this excellent performance, including the setting up of a board of experienced business people to advise Welsh Development International; provision of additional staff for Welsh Development International, including two new deputy directors; and strengthening of their Tokyo office. I have myself undertaken two inward investment missions to Japan, the last in September 1989, and I regularly meet executives from Japanese companies. I was also pleased to officially open the new Centre for Japanese Studies, in Cardiff, in November 1989. There are good prospects for further investment from Japan.

Gross National Product

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will take steps to maintain gross national product figures for Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: GDP for Wales and other areas of the United Kingdom is estimated annually. To calculate GNP would necessitate the estimation of net property income from outside Wales which would involve income from external (to Wales) investment and income generated in Wales by non-residents. Little information is available on these elements.

Hill Livestock Allowances

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total value to farmers within less-favoured areas in Wales of the hill livestock compensatory allowance.

Mr. Peter Walker: Farmers in the less-favoured areas in Wales received £30·9 million in hill livestock compensatory allowances in 1988-89.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received on the future levels of hill livestock compensatory allowance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I have received representations about HLCA rates from both the National Farmers Union and the Farmers Union of Wales. This matter has also been raised with me by several hon. Members in correspondence and questions in the House.

General Practitioners

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total number of general practitioner practices in Wales; and what proportion of those practices have a computer.

Mr. Grist: The total number of general practitioner practices in Wales is 548; approximately 25 per cent. of those practices have a computer system.

Milk

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether any liquid milk is being imported into Wales from Ireland for either liquid consumption or manufacturing purposes.

Mr. Peter Walker: No liquid milk is currently being imported into Wales from Ireland.

Doctors and Pharmacists

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the steps by which consideration is given to an application to dispense by (a) doctors or (b) pharmacists in respect of rural areas in Wales, including all the available appeal stages; what changes he plans to make to that procedure for the future; and who will be responsible for each stage in the new procedure.

Mr. Grist: The controls on dispensing in rural areas are governed by the National Health Service (General Medical and Pharmaceutical Services) Regulations 1974 (as amended). There are two sets of controls under these regulations for doctors and pharmacists. They are as follows:

Doctors—A doctor may make application to the responsible family practitioner committee (FPC). The FPC refers the matter to the rural dispensing committee (RDC) for determination. The regulations provide for an appeal to the Secretary of State against the decision of the RDC.

Pharmacists—Pharmacists may make an application to the responsible FPC. The FPC refers the matter to the RDC for determination. There is provision for appeal to the Secretary of State. Additionally, following a successful outcome the pharmacist would have to secure admission to the FPC's pharmaceutical list, decisions on which are taken by the pharmacy practices sub-committee (PPSC) of the FPC. Appeals against decisions of a PPSC are considered by an appeal panel appointed by the FPC from a list of people drawn up by the Secretary of State.

So far as arrangements for the future are concerned I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to him on 23 January 1990.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his policy with regard to the creation of a consolidated body to deal with appeals on professional matters in respect of doctors and pharmacists; and whether it is his intention for Welsh appeals to be dealt with through such an England and Wales body.

Mr. Grist: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to him on 23 January 1990.

Community Health Councils

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many community health councils in Wales are (a) in favour and (b) against his proposed restructuring of community health councils in Wales.

Mr. Grist: The consultation period on the proposals for restructuring community health councils in Wales runs until the end of February 1990. Virtually all the councils are yet to respond.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will publish the responses of each community health council in Wales to his proposals for changing the number and structure of community health councils in Wales.

Mr. Grist: Any council is free to publish its response.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which community health councils in Wales have indicated (a) approval and (b) disapproval for the National Health Service and Community Care Bill's provisions and the way they will affect Wales.

Mr. Grist: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to the hon. and learned Member for Montgomery (Mr. Carlile) on Friday 8 December.

Trunk Roads

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to upgrade any trunk roads in Wales during the next five years to dual carriageway standard; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Our plans for upgrading trunk roads in Wales to dual carriageway standard in the period to March 1994 are set out in "Roads in Wales—Progress and Plans for the 1990s".

Central European Time

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his Department's policy towards the imposition of central European time in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: A Government Green Paper that considered the options open to the United Kingdom with regard to summer time arrangements, including harmonisation with central European time, was published in June 1989. I understand that my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department will be announcing the results in the near future.

Road, Rail and Air Links

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he is taking to improve Wales's road, rail and air links with Europe prior to 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Improvements to the road network, including east-west links to Europe, are set out in "Roads in Wales—Progress and Plans for the 1990s". Improvements to rail and air links are commercial matters for the operators concerned.

Community Charge

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales further to his statement of 18 December 1989, if he will now provide further information on the operation of his scheme for community charge transitional relief in Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: I am today placing in the Library revised calculations showing the effects of the scheme in Wales in 1990-91. Further calculations will be required for future years.

The calculations show that personal chargepayers in 320 Welsh communities will receive relief in 1990-91. I expect 750,000 chargepayers, more than one in three of all personal chargepayers, to benefit from the scheme. Chargepayers in most valleys communities, and in many rural communities, can expect to see reductions in their charges.

I will be laying regulations implementing the scheme shortly.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Recycling

122. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he intends to take to encourage the use of products manufactured from recycled materials.

Mr. Forth: I have established, under the aegis of my Department's business and the environment unit, an advisory group of more than 40 recycling experts to provide recommendations to Government on how to improve the United Kingdom's recycling performance. Smaller working groups have recently been convened to examine specific materials, and the means of increasing demand for recycled products is one of the critical issues which each group is addressing.

EC Framework Programme

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the EEC framework research programme and Her Majesty's Government's participation.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The 1987-1991 EC framework programme for research and development has funding of 5·4 billion ecus (£3·6 billion). At the Research Council of Ministers on 15 December 1989 where I represented Her Majesty's Government the Council reached unanimous agreement on a new framework programme for 1990-1994 with funding of 5·7 billion ecus (£4·2 billion) (I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 17 January, Official Report, column 318.). There is, therefore, a two-year overlap between the two programmes. The United Kingdom currently contributes 19 per cent. to Community research and development expenditure.

United Kingdom scientists, research establishments, universities and companies participate in all the specific programmes under the framework programme. Individual projects require participation by organisations from more than one member state and the United Kingdom is typically involved in 50 to 80 per cent. of projects and receives 20 to 25 per cent. of the funding available.

Ferranti

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what study his Department has made of the Coopers and Lybrand report on the Ferranti fraud; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: As I said in reply to the hon.Member's questions about Ferranti in December 1989, the Serious Fraud Office is investigating allegations of fraud concerning the company. It is for the Serious Fraud Office to assess the relevance to its investigation of the Coopers and Lybrand report.

Steel Imports

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list in the Official Report the total tonnage of steel imported into the United Kingdom by British Steel plc during the last year, and any assessment made of the likely tonnage to be imported into the United Kingdom during the current year by British Steel plc.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information requested is not available.

Steel Demand (Ravenscraig)

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of whether existing steel demand within a 250 mile radius of the Ravenscraig steelworks is sufficient fully to load the plant throughout the year.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: None.

Alcohol

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry in light of the merger of Bass and Irish Distillers, what plans he has to ensure that the trade in alcoholic beverages does not become a monopoly and to provide safeguards for the interests of consumers.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 22 January 1990]: In the event of such a merger situation qualifying for investigation under the merger control provisions of the Fair Trading Act it would be examined in the normal way by the Director General of Fair Trading who would advise my right hon. Friend on the competition issues raised and on the question of reference to the MMC. Following the MMC report on the supply of beer, a number of steps have been taken to promote greater competition in the on-licensed trade throughout the United Kingdom. If the hon. Member has any particular concerns about competition in the market for alcoholic beverages he should bring them to the attention of the director general.

Civil Aviation Authority

Mr. Haselhurst: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a further statement about the extent of the efficiency scrutiny of the Civil Aviation Authority which he announced on 12 December.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 23 January 1990]: The Monopolies and Mergers Commission has been asked to investigate the efficiency and costs of, and service provided by, the Civil Aviation Authority in supplying navigation and air traffic control services. The full extent of the investigation is contained in the reference made on 12 December 1989, a copy of which is in the Library.

1992 and Jobs

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if the EEC Commission consulted Her Majesty's Government on its plans to consult political leaders from areas of the United Kingdom at a conference in Brussels on 25 January for the purpose of studying the implications of the report of 1992 and jobs in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 22 January 1990]: Her Majesty's Government were not consulted by the Commission about the meeting on 25 January. We understand that this will not be a conference, but a meeting between Commissioner Millan and several representatives of RETI, an organisation representing traditional industrial areas within the Community. It is not yet known who the representatives will be, or from which member states. We understand that the meeting is at RETI's request, but that it is not specifically to discuss the Commission-Louvain university report. It is not customary for the Commission to consult member states about meetings of this kind.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the EEC Commission decided to initiate an inquiry through the Catholic university of Louvain, Belgium, to study the impact of the 1992 measures on jobs in the United Kingdom and elsewhere; if Her Majesty's Government were consulted; and if he will take steps to inquire about the cost to the Commission of this exercise.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 22 January 1990]: We understand that the Commission decided to initiate this study, commissioned by it from the Catholic university of Louvain, towards the end of 1988. Her Majesty's Government were not consulted. The Commission may undertake its own studies of this kind without consulting member states, and does so regularly. However, proposals for legislative decisions flowing from such studies are of course a matter for member states in the Council of Ministers. No information is available on the cost of this exercise at present.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has been provided with a copy of the inquiry into 1992 and jobs by the EEC Commission; what were the conclusions of the report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 22 January 1990]: The Commission has not formally made available copies of this report, which is not yet ready for publication. The report was obtained by the press without the Commission's consent. The report still has the status of a Commission internal document. The Commission has however made a full copy of the report available to Her Majesty's Government informally. The report is not specifically about the impact of the single market on jobs, but analyses a wide range of socio-economic issues related to the single market in six individual regions—Strathclyde, South Yorkshire, Pays Basque, Wallonia, Nord Pas de Calais and Nord Rhein Westphalen. Its conclusions are complex, and we are still studying them. We shall deposit a copy of the report in the Library of the House as soon as possible.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which areas of Europe were identified in the EEC report on 1992 and jobs as being likely to suffer most.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 22 January 1990]: The full Commission-Louvain university report on the impact of the single market on certain regions was received in the Department only this week. We are still studying its conclusions.

Introduction of self-certificate form for optional use by employees and employers.

Pensioners

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the increase in real terms since 1979 in the income of pensioners who receive all their income from state benefits.

Mr. Scott: Between 1979 and 1986 the average total net income of pensioner tax units who obtained all their income from state benefits rose by 25 per cent. in real terms.

Benefit Regulations

79. Mr. Harry Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will seek to repeal regulation 51 of the Housing Benefit (Community Charge Rebates) (Scotland) Regulations 1988 and regulation 52 of the Community Charge Benefits (General) Regulations 1989.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 20 December 1989]: A de minimis rule of this kind—50p a week for community charge benefit, as for the current system of rate rebates and other housing benefits—is a sensible feature of all the income-related benefit schemes, and we have no plans to repeal it.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Community Workshops

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about his policy for preventing young people from coming into contact with paramilitaries in Belfast whilst unemployed; if he has any plans to delay changes to the funding arrangements for community workshops; and what progress has been made by the Department of Economic Development in preparing for these changes.

Mr. Needham: The Government's social and economic policies are designed to address the problems of the unemployed and include specific education and training schemes, improved access to available employment through job clubs and job markets, the creation of employment through inward investment, setting up and expansion of small businesses, and schemes such as ACE, and encouragement to bona fide local community organisations to become directly involved in improving social and economic conditions in local areas.

The Belfast action teams, operating over a large area of the city, work in partnership with community groups. To encourage groups to make use of the services and facilities provided by the statutory bodies some pump-priming funding is available.

There are no plans to delay the implementation of the new funding arrangements. However, discussions have taken place and will continue with representatives of community workshops to consider whether modifications need to be made to the new funding arrangements to meet their concerns.

Flooding

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will take steps to encourage householders to insure house contents against flooding; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: This is a matter for individual householders to determine in the knowledge that there is no general responsibility on Government to compensate for losses arising from bad weather.

The Housing Executive's policy with regard to household and contents insurance is to encourage its tenants to arrange adequate cover themselves and it emphasises its importance by means of enclosing leaflets with general correspondence.

Medical Research

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to strengthen existing links and priorities in medical research in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement about additional resources for the Province in this field.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 22 January 1990]: The integration of the hospital, community health and primary care services, together with the personal services, in a unified management structure in Northern Ireland gives the Province a considerable advantage in identifying research opportunities in both the clinical and operation fields which reflect its particular needs.

The research programme of the DHSS in Northern Ireland is undertaken principally through three separate organisations whose activities are co-ordinated through common research priorities and an overlap in membership. Central direction and funding of clinical and operation research is secured primarily through the department research group (DRG). This considers research proposals in the context of the Department's priorities, which are selected having regard to national priorities. Secondly, the Department also provides direct funding for a core programme of research undertaken by the recently established health and health care research unit (HHCRU) located in the faculty of medicine of the Queen's university of Belfast. The membership of the unit's programme of work is drawn from the health and social service boards as well as the university medical faculty and the Department. The third element of the Department's research programme is the support of local research undertaken on its behalf by the clinical research awards advisory committee (CRAAC). This committee is made up of senior clinicians with research backgrounds together with departmental, university and board representatives. The committee considers applications for grants for research projects in the clinical field against priorities determined locally.

The Government intend to strengthen existing links with the services through regular discussions with boards on research priorities. These priorities will then provide the content for the commissioning of research by the DRG, HHCRU and CRAAC. This initiative will strengthen existing arrangements for the identification and funding of research projects in both the clinical and operational fields. Currently available resources are considered adequate for the Province in this field.

Cultural Traditions Programme

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what funds he has made available under the cultural traditions programme to (a) the Ultach Trust and (b) the Ulster Society.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 23 January 1990]: A sum of £7,500 has been paid to the Ultach Trust to assist the trust in developing its future plans. The Ulster Society has been awarded £3,224 to support the publication of "The Ulster Covenant" by Gordon Lucy.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many students were enrolled at (a) St. Mary's teacher training college and (b) St. Joseph's teacher training college for the academic years 1987-88 and 1988-89, broken down as far as convenient into full-time, part-time and full-time equivalents;

Museums

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table in the Official Report to show what sums have been paid by the Government to each museum in Northern Ireland in each of the last three years for which figures are available; of these sums, in each case how much was used to encourage tourism; and what are the projections for the current and the next two financial years.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 23 January 1990]: The information requested is as follows:

	1986-87 £	1987-88 £	1988-89 £
Ulster Museum	2,523,000	2,802,000	2,865,000

Ulster American Folk Park	524,000	534,000	545,000

While the museums are among the attractions most popularly visited in Northern Ireland, resources are not allocated to encourage tourism as such.

Cattle Prices

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has as to what was the average gross margin for the year 1984 to 1989 in respect of (a) fat steers, (b) fat heifers and (c) beef bulls; and what is his estimate of the average net profit for each said animal in each year.

Kells Police Station

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) whether the police inquiry team led by Deputy Chief Constable John Stevens has interviewed to date all police officers who served at Kells police station, Co. Antrim, during the period 31 October 1986 to 31 October 1988;

(2) whether the police inquiry team led by Deputy Chief Constable John Stevens has interviewed to date a member of the Royal Ulster Constabulary who previously served at Kells police station, Co. Antrim, and who was charged in October 1988 with the illegal possession of arms, ammunition, and detonators;

(3) whether the police inquiry team led by Deputy Chief Constable John Stevens has interviewed to date two police officers previously stationed at Kells police station, who resigned from the force between 1 January 1988 and 1 March 1989;

(4) whether the police inquiry team led by Deputy Chief Constable John Stevens has interviewed to date three police officers previously stationed at Kells police station, who were transferred to other duties during the period 1 June 1988 and 1 March 1989.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 15 January 1990]: These are matters for the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary. As court proceedings involving these matters have not been concluded, it would not be appropriate to comment further.

HEALTH

Breast and Cervical Cancer

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the rates of cancer of the breast and cervix in the north-east of England for those aged (a) 20 to 25 years, (b) 25 to 30 years, (c) 30 to 35 years, (d) 35 to 40 years, (e) 40 to 45 years, (f) 45 to 50 years, and (g) 50 to 55 years; what were the average rates for the rest of the United Kingdom for the same age groups for each year from 1980; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman [pursuant to his reply, 13 December 1989, columns 677-79]: I regret that incorrect figures were given in the table for the United Kingdom as a whole. An amended table is as follows. The exact information requested could be provided only at a disproportionate cost.

Environmental Health Officers

123. Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consultations have taken place, and are taking place, on the status and qualifications of environmental health officers under European Economic Community directives for the inspection of food in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Freeman: The Government's policy continues to be one of ensuring as far as is possible and reasonable that EC food directives are negotiated and implemented by reference to the existing system of food inspection in the United Kingdom and the important role that the environmental health officers play in it.

Lead

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will outline current studies into the pervasiveness of lead in the environment and in diet; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 18 January 1990]: I have been asked to reply.

My Department has recently published food surveillance report No. 27 "Lead in Food: Progress Report" which gives details of studies on lead in the diet and the measures taken to reduce exposure. This records the significant drop in lead intake from this source which has occurred over the last decade.

Numerous studies on lead levels in soil, dusts, stream sediments, air and water have also been carried out in recent times together with blood lead level monitoring in children and adults. These environmental programmes have been kept under review by the Department of the Environment steering group on environmental lead monitoring and used to influence and check on the effectiveness of action taken to reduce exposure.

Monitoring of lead in the diet, air and water is continuing and research is being carried out into the contribution made by lead in dust and soil to the total exposure of children to this metal.

Ambulance Service

Sir Ian Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps have been taken to ensure that the police and armed forces have made available to them for immediate use ambulances which are public property.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: In the event of the 999 service being disrupted within any particular ambulance authority, it is open to the chief constable and local managers jointly to consider the use of NHS ambulances by police crews if, in their view, that would strengthen the contingency arrangements locally and improve the service to the public. Where the armed forces are deployed to assist in the provision of an emergency service, they use their own vehicles, which are adequately equipped and with which they are familiar.

Sir Ian Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to ensure that ambulances which are the property of local or other public authorities are not used in furtherance of the views of one party in the present dispute within the ambulance service.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It is for local managers after considering all the circumstances to determine what action, if any, should be taken to prevent the use of NHS ambulances for unauthorised purposes.

Community Health Councils

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the budget allocations for community health councils for the current year and on a constant value basis for 1984 and 1979.

Mr. Freeman: The expenses of community health councils are met by and are reported along with the total expenditure of the health authorities concerned. It is for health authorities to decide the level of funding they provide to community health councils and information on the allocations are not routinely collected centrally.

Following are expenditure figures for the years requested derived from the summarised accounts of health authorities in England:

Total expenditure on community health councils

	£000 (cash)	£000 (at 1988-89 prices)
1979-80	4,031	7,590
1984-85	6,341	7,800
1988-89	8,004	8,004

Notes:

1. The figures for 1979-80 and 1984-85 have been expressed at 1988-89 prices by the use of the gross domestic product deflator.
2. The figures for 1988-89 are provisional in that they are as yet subject to audit.

Aging

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many meetings have been held between Ministers and officials from different Government Departments to co-ordinate Government policy on aging and related issues in the last 12 months; and what were the topics discussed at each of these meetings.

Mr. Freeman: Frequent meetings are held between Ministers and officials in the relevant Departments to co-ordinate policies in this area.

Tiludronate

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement concerning the use of the drug, Tiludronate as an alternative to hormone replacement therapy.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The drug Tiludronate is not licensed in the United Kingdom.

Listeria

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he is currently taking to ensure adequate inspection of dairy products for evidence of listeria.

Mr. Freeman: The public health laboratory service is preparing a report following a study of listeria in dairy products. Once this report is available, the Department will consider what, if any, additional measures are required to maintain an adequate inspection level of dairy products.

Residential and Nursing Homes

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the number of (a) residential homes for the aged and (b) nursing homes which have been opened since the passage of the Registered Homes Act 1984, in the cities of Liverpool, Leeds, Manchester, Sheffield, Birmingham, Bristol, Newcastle upon Tyne and in the boroughs of Brighton, Eastbourne, Bournemouth, Torquay, Southport and Hastings.

Mr. Freeman: Information is not available centrally in the form requested. Residential care homes are registered with local social services authorities and nursing homes with district health authorities. The tables give details of the number of establishments catering for the elderly in the areas to which the hon. Member refers:

[3] Provisional.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessments take place of aged persons before they are placed in either a nursing home or residential care; whether he expects to make changes to these procedures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The assessment of elderly people for whom residential care is arranged by local authorities is a matter for the authority concerned. At present no assessment is necessary before a person enters a residential or nursing home in the independent sectors, with or without help from income support.

Our White Paper, "Caring for People" proposes that from April 1991 local authority social services departments should carry out an appropriate assessment of individuals' needs for social care, including residential and nursing home care, in collaboration with medical, nursing and other caring agencies as necessary and having regard to the wishes of the individual and his carers, before deciding the appropriate type of care. The National Health Service and Community Care Bill at present before the House would lay a duty on local authorities to carry out such assessments. The preparation of guidance to local authorities on assessment and case management is also in hand.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has about the length of time taken for the registration of residential care homes (a) nationally and (b) in the city of Liverpool, from the time an application is submitted under the Registered Homes Act 1984 until a certificate has been issued.

Mr. Freeman: This information is not held centrally.

Welfare Milk

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what savings from the reduction in the value of welfare milk tokens will accrue to his Department in the year 1990-91.

Mr. Freeman: It is estimated that the revised pricing structure for the supply of liquid welfare milk in England will save some £7·5 million in the financial year 1990-91. The entitlement of beneficiaries to welfare milk is not affected by this change.

Independent Inspection Units

Mr. Carttiss: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the consultation document on independent inspection units promised in the White Paper "Caring for People" will be published.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: A consultation paper amplifying the proposal made in the White Paper that local authorities should set up independent inspection units has been sent to organisations representing local authority, independent sector and user interests today. Their comments have been invited. Copies of the paper have been placed in the Library.

Inspection units will form an integral part of the arrangements for securing and safeguarding the quality of community care services. They will have a special responsibility for supporting and monitoring those who provide residential care, both in local authority homes and in the independent sector. Their establishment will be entirely separate from the line management of local authority homes.

These proposals have already been welcomed. They will put providers of services in the public and independent sectors on the same footing and, through the setting up of local advisory committees, they will involve providers and users in running the system. This should not only foster good will, but increase the effectiveness of the quality control process and public confidence in it.

Cot Deaths

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will provide details of the incidence of child cot deaths from 1960 to date, indicating the difference between winter and summer months; what information he has on the possibility that cot deaths can be caused by poisonous gases resulting from the growth of fungi in soiled cot mattresses containing PVC; and if he will make a statement on the results of his Department's research into this subject.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 18 December 1989]: Figures from 1971, the earliest date from which information is available, on numbers of mentions of sudden infant death syndrome on death certificates are provided in the table. Two qualifications need to be made in any assessment of an overall trend. First, the numbers of births in each year need to be taken into account. Secondly, over this period, respiratory disease has diminished as a reported cause of infant death and there has been a corresponding increase in the reporting of sudden infant death.

Details of a theory that gas emitted from the action of fungus on PVC mattresses may be a cause of sudden infant death have been submitted to the Department. A scientific assessment of the evidence is being undertaken by the Laboratory of the Government Chemist.

Regional Allocations

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will place in the Library (a) a paper explaining the seven age band relative costs systems referred to in his reply to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, Central on 10 January, Official Report, column 663, and (b) a paper showing why the particular method of adjusting regional allocations for mobility referred to in his reply was selected.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 17 January 1990]: I have today placed a short note in the Library giving the information requested.

Medicines

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to make an announcement about the proposed increase in fees relating to the Medicinal Products for Human Use Regulations 1989 (S.I., 1989, No. 418); and if he will give the number of current applications waiting to be processed or being processed by the Medicines Control Agency.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 22 January 1990]: Comments received during the consultation exercise are being taken into account before the final version of the fees regulations is laid before Parliament. Subject to the usual statutory processes it is intended that these amending regulations will come into effect as soon as possible. I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Bournemouth, East (Mr. Atkinson) on 20 December at columns 334-35.

The number of applications for new licences awaiting a decision as at 31 December 1989 was:

	Number
Product licences	1,867
Product licences (parallel imports)	991
Manufacturers licences	20
Wholesale dealers licences	34
Non-orthodox practitioner licences	4

Cerebral Palsy

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of children born in England, in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available, who have been diagnosed as having cerebral palsy.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 22 January 1990]: Cerebral palsy is not necessarily diagnosed at birth, so information on the number of children born in England each year and diagnosed with this condition is not available centrally.

Expenditure

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give for each year since 1974-75 current spending on the hospital and community health services for each National Health Service region and for the special health authorities (i) in cash terms, (ii) adjusted using the gross domestic product deflator, and (iii) adjusted using the National Health Service pay and prices index.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is given in a table, copies of which have been placed in the Library. The expenditure figures are based on those shown in the summarised accounts of regional and district health authorities and the special health authorities for the London postgraduate teaching hospitals (predecessor authorities for the years prior to 1982-83).

HOME DEPARTMENT

Shotguns

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Gwent as to the number of complaints he has received during the last six months to the effect that shotguns were taken into the possession of the police without giving a receipt to the owner.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand from the chief constable that no such complaints have been received in Gwent police headquarters.

Begging

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons were convicted of a begging or related offence in England and Wales during (a) 1987, (b) 1988 and (c) 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is given in the table. Data for 1989 will not be available until autumn 1990.

Persons convicted of begging and sleeping out under the Vagrancy Act 1824 (as amended)
England and Wales

	1987	1988
Begging	440	512
Sleeping out	14	13

Racing

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to reach a decision on whether to establish an inquiry into the financing of racing.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We are not as yet able to estimate when we shall have completed our consideration of this matter.

Random Breath Tests

Sir Ian Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance he issues on the criteria which should govern the instructions issued to police officers in uniform who stop vehicles at random for the purpose of investigating whether the drivers of the vehicles concerned have alcohol in their bodies in excess of the prescribed limits, where such vehicles have not been involved in moving traffic offences or accidents which give legal grounds for such action.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: It is for individual chief officers of police to issue instructions to officers under their command. The Government encourage chief officers of police to use their powers to the full in the enforcement of the law relating to drinking and driving. Those powers were set out in the reply my right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General gave to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Bolton, North-East (Mr. Thurnham) on 5 December 1989 at column 131.

Hillsborough Disaster

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he received Lord Justice Taylor's final report into the Hillsborough disaster; and when he is proposing to publish it.

Mr. Waddington: I received Lord Justice Taylor's final report on 19 January. I hope to publish it on Monday 29 January.

Prisoners

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further developments there have been in his plans to help prisoners maintain contact with their families and friends.

Mr. Mellor: My hon. Friend the Member for Grantham (Mr. Hogg) announced a number of measures aimed at improving inmates' family ties on 17 March 1989 at column 363. We are now establishing a pilot scheme to reduce routine censorship in local prisons, category B training prisons and remand centres to a 5 per cent. sample. The pilot scheme will run in Leeds, Maidstone, Norwich and Winchester prisons for three months from 1 February. The proposed reduction of routine censorship will remove the need for restrictions on the number of letters which inmates may send and receive and also enable staff to be redeployed to other duties.

We have also decided to establish a pilot scheme at Her Majesty's prison Manchester to enable remand inmates to use cardphones subject to certain safeguards. This follows the successful introduction of cardphones in open prisons and the present programme, which is well advanced, to instal them in all category C and equivalent establishments. The Manchester pilot scheme should begin in March and, if successful, will be extended to remand inmates held in other local prisons and remand centres. It has also been decided that expenditure on phonecards will no longer count against the limit on the amount of private cash which inmates may spend. I hope that the ability to telephone family and friends will be of particular help in reducing the anxiety and stress experienced by inmates on remand and reduce the incidence of self-harm.

Mr. Andrew Balfour

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on the arrest of Mr. Andrew Balfour by special branch officers on 17 August 1989 under the Prevention of Terrorism Act; why he was held for two days at Paddington Green police station before being released on bail and told there is no case to answer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: I understand from the Commissioner that Mr. Balfour was arrested under section 14 of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 on 17 August 1989 and released the next day. A person arrested under this provision may be detained for up to 48 hours on the authority of the police if they have reasonable grounds to suspect that he is guilty of an offence under the Act, is a person who is or has been concerned with acts of Northern Ireland or international terrorism, or is subject to an exclusion order.

Remand

Sir Charles Irving: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many men and women were being held in custody on remand in the United Kingdom (a) from year end 1987 to year end 1988 and (b) from year end 1988 to year end 1989.

Mr. Mellor: Information for 1987 to 1988 was published in table 1.2 of "Prison Statistics England and Wales 1988" (Cm. 825), a copy of which is in the Library. The readily available figures for 1989 are given in the table:

Prison Service Headquarters

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in which midlands city he is proposing to establish the new prison service headquarters which he has recently announced.

Mr. Mellor: Work has now begun to determine where in the midlands the new headquarters location should be. No decision has yet been taken.

Police Vehicles (Fatal Accidents)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list for (a) 1988 and (b) 1989, the number of persons who have died in accidents involving police vehicles.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Figures collected by Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary (which do not include the Metropolitan police) indicate that in 1988 there were 14 civilian fatalities involving a police vehicle while engaged in a pursuit or responding to an emergency. Figures for 1989 are not yet available.

Metropolitan Police Overtime

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the hourly rates for overtime in the Metropolitan police force.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The average overtime rates paid to officers, up to and including chief inspectors, in the Metropolitan police are:

	Chief Inspector £	Inspector £	Police Sergeant £	Police Constable £
Time and a third[1]	14·83	13·49	11·33	9·32
Time and a half[2]	16·68	15·18	12·75	10·49
Double time[3]	22·24	20·24	17·00	13·98

[1] This rate is paid to officers before or after completing a normal tour of duty.
[2] This rate is paid to officers who work on a rest day.
[3] This rate is paid to officers who work on a public holiday.

Squatting

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to amend the law on squatting to enable local authorities to take action in the absence of action by the owners of the properties concerned; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The Government have no plans to amend the law in this way. The police and local authorities have powers to deal with squatters who commit criminal offences; these may include criminal damage, theft, assault or using threatening, abusive or insulting words or behaviour, and powers under the Public Health Act 1936 and Control of Pollution Act 1974 to act against premises which are verminous or prejudicial to health, or give rise to a statutory nuisance or where the occupiers cause a noise nuisance. Additionally, the Criminal Law Act 1977 created certain offences aimed at squatters including failure to leave premises when required to do so by a displaced residential occupier. Otherwise, squatting is an act of trespass, which is a matter for the civil law, and it is for those whose interests are affected by the trespass to consider whether they wish to bring a civil action.

Mr. Malcolm Cairns

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the progress of the Director of Public Prosecutions' consideration of the report compiled by the deputy chief constable of Derbyshire in respect of Mr. Malcolm Cairns, the assistant chief constable of Leicestershire, and the author Joseph Wambaugh.

The Attorney-General: I have been asked to reply.

The report is being considered carefully and as expeditiously as possible.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Refreshment Facilities

Ms. Walley: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will make available in the Library details of bookings and sponsoring hon. Members for dining rooms booked between 16 January and the summer recess.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: It is the practice not to divulge information on functions organised in accordance with the banqueting regulations. If the hon. Member has a specific issue in mind she is advised to raise it either with the General Manager of the Refreshment Department or with the Catering Sub-Committee, of which she is a member.

EMPLOYMENT

Disabled People

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what measures his Department is taking to encourage and promote part-time working for those disabled people unable to work full time;

(2) whether his Department's internal review of employment assistance to disabled adults is examining the possibility of introducing a partial capacity benefit to facilitate part-time working by disabled people unable to work full time.

Mr. Eggar: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security announced on 10 January, the Government propose to introduce a disability employment credit to make it easier for people with disabilities to take up and remain in work. The new benefit, to be introduced in April 1992, will help people with disabilities whose earning capacity is low, including those who are only able to work part time.

Following publication of the report "Defusing the Demographic Timebomb" my Department is encouraging employers through a range of media to make more use of flexible working patterns, including part-time working, to obtain suitable employees. The value of part-time working in drawing on the talents of people with disabilities is also stressed in our code of good practice on the employment of disabled people and by the Disablement Advisory Service.

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether his Department expects to publish its internal review of employment assistance to disabled adults, commissioned in March 1988.

Mr. Eggar: The review is at an advanced stage. The consultative document which will follow the review will be published as soon as possible.

Mines (Accidents)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many major injuries were suffered by men working underground in mines operated by British Coal in 1978-79 and each succeeding year;

(2) how many major injuries were suffered by men working underground in private licensed mines in 1978-79 and each succeeding year;

(3) how many men were killed in private licensed mines in 1978-79 and each succeeding year;

(4) how many men were killed underground in mines operated by British Coal in 1978-79 and each succeeding year.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 15 January 1990]: The table lists underground fatal and major injuries at all coal mines for the period 1978 to 1987-88.

It is not possible before 1987-88 separately to identify those underground accidents at licensed mines without incurring disproportionate costs.

	Underground fatalities at all coal mines	Underground major injuries at all coal mines
1978	46	427
1979	41	375
1980	39	445

1983	25	697
1984-85[1]	18	321

1987-88[5]	[7]4	[6]651
	[8]3

[1] Covering the 15 month period January 1984-March 1985.

[2] The introduction of NADO Regulations 1980 on 1 January 1981 widened the coverage of the serious injury category.

[3] The introduction of RIDDOR Regulations 1985 on 1 April 1986 further widened the major injury categories. Major injury figures from 1981 and 1986-87 are therefore not directly comparable with earlier years.

[4] Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Mines have records of all fatal and major injury accidents for coal mines generally until 1984-85. From 1985-86 these records can be split to show accident figures at British Coal and licensed mines.

[5] Fatal and major accidents underground cannot be separated between British Coal and Licensed Mines before 1987-88.

[6] Cannot be separated between British Coal and Licensed Mines without incurring disproportionate costs.

[7] British Coal.

[8] Licensed mines.

Aids to Employment (Sheffield)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much money has been spent within the city of Sheffield on the provision of equipment and resources to disabled people under the aids to employment budget; when the 1989-90 budget was exhausted; how many people have had applications for assistance refused in the past 12 months; and how many are currently awaiting provision of further resources.

Mr. Eggar: Figures are not available for the city of Sheffield alone. The amount spent under the special aids to employment scheme for the Sheffield area (which includes the city, and Rotherham) from 1 April 1989 to date is £46,082·22. The 1989-90 budget is not exhausted and so there are no cases awaiting the provision of further resources. Three people from the Sheffield area had applications under the scheme refused in the past 12 months. Two are ineligible for assistance; in the third case, a solution was not technically possible.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make additional resources available under the aids to employment scheme to facilitate the independence of Mr. John Gallagher of Sheffield.

Mr. Eggar: It is understood that Mr. Gallagher has applied to his local authority for assistance under the blind homeworkers scheme, under which the authority could contribute 25 per cent., and the employment service up to 75 per cent. of the assistance. No application has, however, yet been received by the employment service. If it is, consideration can be given to assisting Mr. Gallagher either under the provisions of the blind homeworkers scheme, or the special aids to employment scheme. Additional resources under the latter are not necessary, as the budget for the scheme is not exhausted.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Kingswood, Official Report, 12 January, column 783, if he will provide similar information on the percentage fall in unemployment correct for the year to December 1989.

Mr. Nicholls: The table shows the 20 parliamentary constituencies which have experienced the largest percentage falls in unemployment over the year to December 1989. The figures are not seasonally adjusted.

Professional and Executive Recruitment

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, in the light of the privatisation of Professional and Executive Recruitment, if he will dispense with the requirement that before non-EEC candidates for highly specialised job vacancies can be retained, form OW5 has to be completed; and if he will make a statement as to his plans for creating a level playing field for professional and executive recruitment firms.

Mr. Eggar: Prospective employers of overseas nationals requiring work permits have not been required to notify the vacancy to Professional and Executive Recruitment since it was privatised. Employers applying for a work permit will continue to complete a form of application which, where appropriate, will require them to state what efforts have been made (including the use of agencies) to recruit resident labour.

Jobcentres

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he or his predecessor last visited a jobcentre or benefit office; and where that visit took place.

Mr. Howard: My predecessor, Sir Norman Fowler, visited Sutton Coldfield unemployment benefit office on 15 December 1989.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment on what criterion he will assess the success or failure of a TEC's annual plan.

Mr. Eggar: TECs will need to draw up their plan for the year ahead based on the needs of the community they will serve. They will need to set out and agree ambitious targets for key outputs such as qualifications and jobs gained by trainees. Progress towards these targets will be monitored on a regular basis.

Part-time Workers

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of female part-time workers in Great Britain in April 1989, and in each standard economic region; and what was the proportion of those nationally and in each region whose earnings fell below (a) £4·15 per hour, (b) £4·30 per hour, (c) £3·10 per hour and (d) £2·80 per hour.

Mr. Nicholls: There were an estimated 4,301,000 part-time female employees in employment in March 1989. The estimated percentages of part-time adult female employees earning below specified amounts in the new earnings survey sample in April 1989 are given in table 175, part F of the new earnings survey 1989 report. Figures of the percentage earning below £3·10, £4·15 and £4·30 per hour are not available; the nearest available figures are given in table 175 except for the percentages earning below £3 which are provided in the following table:

Percentage of part-time females earning less than £3 per hour

East Anglia	47

West Midlands	53

Scotland	50

Note: Adult rates of pay; pay not affected by absence.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of male part-time workers in Great Britain in April 1989; and what was the proportion of those workers whose earnings fell below (a) £4·15 per hour, (b) £4·30 per hour, (c) £3·10 per hour and (d) £2·80 per hour.

Mr. Nicholls: There were an estimated 901,000 part-time male employees in employment in March 1989. The estimated percentages of adult male part-time employees earning below specified amounts in the new earnings survey sample in April 1989 were:

Hourly earnings less than	Percentage
£2·80	38
£3·00	45
£3·20	53
£4·00	70
£4·50	75

Figures of the percentage earning below £3·10, £4·15 and £4·30 per hour are not available; the nearest available figures have been given.

Action Credit Pilot Scheme

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether it is his intention that individuals who participate in the action credit pilot scheme should have the equivalent employee status under the Employment Protection (Consolidation) Act 1978 and the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: Participants in the action credit pilot scheme have the same rights under the Employment Protection (Consolidation) Act 1978 and the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 as other employees.

Linwood Car Plant

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will conduct a survey to ascertain how many men and women who worked for the former car plant in Linwood have contracted a form of asbestos disease; and if he will give the numbers.

Mr. Nicholls: No such survey is proposed as this would be unlikely to provide any useful information at this stage on exposure to asbestos at the Linwood plant.

SCOTLAND

Offences Against Children

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people in Scotland have been prosecuted during the last five years for committing the offence of (a) rape and (b) sexual offences against children including incest, having already served a sentence of imprisonment for that offence; and what were the sentences administered.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information is not available in precisely the form requested. In the period 1984 to 1987, three men successfully prosecuted for rape were recorded as having previously served a prison sentence for this crime. The average custodial sentence for the earlier offence was just over four years and for the second just under nine years. Information which separately identifies sexual offences against children is not held centrally.

Sheriff Officers

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the number of sheriff officers duly approved as of 1 January; and what was the figure on 1 January 1989 and 1988.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The number of commissions issued by sheriffs principal authorising individuals to act as sheriff officers was 191 on 1 January 1990 and 186 on 1 January 1989. Figures are not available for 1988.

Hospital Readmissions

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many patients in Scotland were, for each year since 1980, readmitted for hospital treatment and suffering from the same or related illness for which they had been previously discharged.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is not held centrally.

Hospital Admissions

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many patients were admitted for hospital treatment in Scotland for more than (a) three days, (b) seven days (c) two weeks and (d) more than two weeks for each year since 1980.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is as follows:

Number of Inpatient Discharges from Acute General Specialties[1] in Scotland, by length of stay

	4-7 days	8-14 days	More than two weeks
1980	121,595	108,829	93,517

1988	150,477	108,867	88,653

Water (Lead Levels)

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to ensure that European requirements concerning lead levels in water are complied with.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish water authorities have already made substantial progress in reducing the levels of lead in their supplies.

The Water Supply (Water Quality) (Scotland) Regulations 1990, made on 23 January, impose standards relating to the quality of public and private water supplies for the purposes of drinking, washing or cooking. The standard on lead is tighter than that in EC Directive 80/778/EEC (the drinking water directive), and regulation 24 makes provision for securing the elimination, or reduction to a minimum, of the risk that water supplied by the authorities will be contaminated after supply by excessive concentrations of lead and certain other metals.

In addition, districts and islands councils have discretion to give housing repair grants for the replacement of lead plumbing. From 1982-88 inclusive, some 58,000 grants for work which included the replacement of lead plumbing had been made by these councils.

Council of Ministers

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the dates and subjects of meetings of the Council of Ministers that he or members of his ministerial team intend to attend over the coming year; and if he will specify which Minister will attend.

Mr. Rifkind: The United Kingdom delegations to meetings of the various European Councils of Ministers represent all the interests within the Government. Decisions on whether a Scottish Minister should be included in delegations are taken in the light of the business when it is known and of the other commitments of the Minister concerned.

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the dates and subjects of meetings of the Council of Ministers that he or members of his ministerial team have attended in the past 10 years; and if he will specify which Minister attended in each case.

Mr. Rifkind: This information is provided in the table:

Local Government Finance

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the latest estimate of the cost to Scottish local authorities of collection of non-domestic rates in 1989-90 and the cost of the collection of non-domestic rates in 1988-89.

Mr. Rifkind: Local authorities have estimated the cost of collecting non-domestic rates in 1989-90 at £1·6 million. No corresponding figure is available for 1988-89 as returns from authorities for years prior to 1989-90 did not show separately the cost of collecting domestic and non-domestic rates.

Employment Training

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the drop-out rate for employment training in each of the Scottish regions and for Scotland as a whole.

Mr. Lang: In Scotland, at November 1989, 65·4 per cent. of those completing an action plan with a training agent were referred to a training manager. Of the group referred, 93·5 per cent. actually started in employment training. These percentages are not collected on a regional basis.

Takare Plc

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will announce the price to Takare plc of land in Rutherglen which Greater Glasgow health board plans to sell to that company;

(2) if he will publish the full details of the contract, when agreed, between Takare plc and Greater Glasgow health board for the provision of services to the elderly in Rutherglen;

(3) if his Department has approved the contract between Takare plc and Greater Glasgow health board for provision of services to the elderly;

(4) what are the reasons for the delay in making a decision about the contract between Greater Glasgow health board and Takare plc for the provision of services to the elderly in Rutherglen;

(5) when he expects to make a decision on whether to approve the contract between Greater Glasgow health board and Takare plc for the provision of services to the elderly in Rutherglen;

(6) who his Department consulted on the sale of land in Rutherglen by Greater Glasgow health board to Takare plc;

(7) what recommendations his Department has made on the sale of land by Greater Glasgow health board to Takare plc.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No final decision has been taken on the proposed contract between Greater Glasgow health board and Takare plc, which is still subject to negotiation.

Public Land Sales

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what rules govern the number of potential buyers required to be involved by a public body selling land in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Land surplus to public sector needs will normally be offered for sale on the open market. Alternatively, if it is in the public interest to do so, the land may be sold off-market, in consultation with the district valuer as to value.

M80

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will announce the line of the proposed M80 motorway between Stepps and Haggs; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend announced in his statement of May 1989 that the central Scotland motorway schemes were to be a priority of the Scottish Office's roads programme. Construction work started on the M80 Stepps bypass, the adjacent scheme to M80 Stepps-Haggs, in November 1989. Aerial and ground surveys for the M80 Stepps-Haggs scheme have now been completed. Similarly, a key traffic survey has been completed. The final feasibility report can now be expected in spring of this year and it should be possible for a decision on a preferred route to be made shortly thereafter. The present expectation is that draft orders will be published later in the year with a public exhibition being held at that time to explain the proposals in detail.

Disabled Workers

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people on the disabled register for work in Scotland are (a) employed and (b) unemployed.

Mr. Lang: There is no such thing as a disabled register for work. Under the Disabled Persons (Employment) Acts 1944 and 1958, the Department of Employment maintains a disablement register on which disabled people may register. That register does not include a record of the employment status of those who are on it. In April 1989, the date of the last count, there were 33,909 people on the disablement register in Scotland.

Both employed and unemployed people may register for employment at jobcentres. In doing so they may also choose to indicate that they are disabled. In October 1989, the latest date on which a count was made, 7,024 people with declared disabilities were registered for employment at jobcentres and local authority careers offices in Scotland.

Illegal Dumping

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people in Scotland have been prosecuted for illegal dumping of rubbish on the roads and highways in each of the last five years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information on the number of persons prosecuted under the Refuse Disposal (Amenity) Act 1978 for illegal dumping of rubbish is set out in the table. No information is collected on the location of the offence.

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many prosecutions have been made against companies that have illegally disposed of chemical or industrial wastes in Scotland in each of the last five years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information in the table relates to company prosecutions for offences included in the Scottish Home and Health Department's classification as offences relating to the control of pollution.

These offences include the Control of Pollution Act 1974, the Rivers (Prevention of Pollution) Acts, and the Sewerage (Scotland) Act 1968.

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to do a survey to assess the extent of damage and costs that illegal dumping is causing to the environment in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: We have no plans to carry out a formal survey to establish the extent and costs of illegal dumping in Scotland. This is a matter that officials of the hazardous waste inspectorate discuss with local authorities in the course of their periodic visits.

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what plans he has to give extra powers to local authorities to fight illegal dumping of waste and rubbish; and if he will be allocating any new powers to the councils; (2) what plans he has to strengthen the laws against illegal dumping in Scotland's passing places, lay-bys and open spaces.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Control of Pollution (Amendment) Act 1989 contains powers to deter illegal waste dumping, which are to be enforced by district and islands councils. Part II of the Environmental Protection Bill also contains provisions to strengthen the relevant legislative controls.

Inverkip Power Station

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are his plans for the Inverkip power station.

Mr. Lang: Inverkip power station is presently owned by the South of Scotland electricity board and ownership will pass to Scottish Power as part of the transfer scheme arrangements for the Scottish industry under the Electricity Act 1989. Decisions on the future use of the station will be for the industry to take in the light of its assessment of the contribution which Inverkip is likely to make to its ability to maintain an efficient, co-ordinated and economical system of electricity supply, taking into account a range of factors including operating costs and the relative prices of fuels.

River Clyde

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the state of the River Clyde regarding pollution; and what assessment he has made of whether (a) it is safe to eat fish and shellfish caught in the river at the lowest reaches, (b) it is safe to swim in the river at the lower reaches and (c) the new sewage outfall at Battery park in Greenock will cause any additional sewage problems in the Firth of Clyde.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The assessment and control of pollution are the responsibility of the river purification authority, the Clyde river purification board. For many years the board, in co-operation with local authorities and industrialists, has actively promoted the improvement of the quality of discharges to the River Clyde throughout its length. The Clyde, like almost every other river in Scotland, has markedly improved in quality in recent years.

The safety of fish and shellfish on sale for human consumption is a matter for the local environmental health authority. I am not aware of any evidence of any problem which has arisen from swimming in the Clyde. The board carries out relevant monitoring of these waters.

The new sewage outfall at Battery park will replace a number of unsatisfactory outfalls with one which meets modern requirements and its completion will greatly improve present conditions.

Waste Disposal Sites

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has any plans to allow other waste disposal sites in the Renfrew, West and Inverclyde constituency.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Responsibility for the provision of waste disposal sites in Scotland rests initially with district and islands councils as waste disposal authorities. My right hon. and learned Friend would normally become involved only if an application for planning permission, or an appeal against refusal of planning permission, came before him for determination.

Community Charge

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he is taking to reform procedure for appeals against entries in the community charge (poll tax) register; and what steps he will take to extend the role of the Scottish Committee of the Council on Tribunals to oversee the conduct of appeals to registration officers.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to change the present appeal arrangements. However, discussions are being held with the Scottish Committee of the Council on Tribunals and with Scottish community charges registration officers to establish whether it would be practicable and helpful for the Scottish committee to have a watching brief on the conduct of appeals to registration officers.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has any plans to change the procedures for appeal against the decision of community charge registration officers in Scotland along the lines of that to be introduced in England and Wales.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to do so.

Sight Tests

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of recorded sight tests carried out in Scotland between (a) April 1988 to September 1988, inclusive, (b) October 1988 to March 1989, inclusive and (c) April 1989 to September 1989, inclusive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 23 January 1990]: The information is set out in the table:

Period	Number of NHS sight tests
1 April to 30 September 1988	531,613
1 October 1988 to 31 March 1989	636,997
1 April to 30 September 1989	281,570

Free NHS sight tests were limited to prescribed groups with effect from 1 April 1989. The number of NHS tests carried out between 1 April and 30 September 1989 is not, therefore, directly comparable with NHS figures for earlier periods. The results of a survey on the total number of NHS and private sight tests carried out in Scotland in the first quarter of 1990 compared with earlier periods should be available after Easter.

TRANSPORT

Public Service Vehicles

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make available for public scrutiny data providing actual and comparative percentage figures for each spot check roadside, spot check maintenance facilities and MOT station examination carried out by the inspectors on every public service vehicle company operating in south Wales.

Mr. Atkins: Close monitoring of all PSV operators is maintained in the interests of road safety. Statistics showing the general level of enforcement activity are published in the annual reports of the south Wales traffic commissioner. Where the condition of a particular operator's vehicle gives cause for concern, the frequency of checks on that operator's premises and fleet may be increased. Details of individual checks are treated as a commercially confidential matter.

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make available for public scrutiny the safety inspection records of all public service bus and coach operators in the south Wales area.

Mr. Atkins: The Department does not hold copies of records of PSV operators' own safety inspections.

Transport Supplementary Grant

Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what conclusions he has reached about the possibility of earmarking part of the expenditure accepted for transport supplementary grant for work that will help reduce the number of casualties on local authority roads.

Mr. Atkins: Following discussions with the local authority associations, I have decided that highway authorities in England should be invited to bid for transport supplementary grant for local safety schemes on all their roads—and not just those of more than local importance—from 1991-92 onwards. Authorities will be told what information they need to submit in support of their bids in the next transport policies and programme circular, which will be issued in a few months from now. The amount of each authority's accepted expenditure for local safety schemes will be separately identified at the time of each TSG settlement.

Lorry Trailer Maintenance

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the final report of the task force on lorry trailer maintenance is yet available.

Mr. Atkins: I am grateful to the trailer task force for its useful work on this and am arranging for copies of its final report to be placed in the Library. Well-designed and well-maintained trailer braking systems are important for road safety. Since the task force produced its interim report last July (Official Report, 6 July 1989, col. 259) manufacturers have been adjusting and improving their service brake designs. Advice has been drawn up for operators preparing vehicles for test and discussions are in hand with the industry on a code of lorry maintenance generally.

Following the further work of the task force, we are considering making plating conformity a condition of acceptance of vehicles for test rather than part of the test itself, and also dropping the present secondary brake performance test. We shall be discussing further with the industry the clear identification of responsibilities for maintenance of rented trailers and ways of ensuring that the move to European Commission whole vehicle type approval for trailers contributes to the safety and cost-effectiveness of trailer construction and use.

Railway Investment

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are, in 1989 moneys, the comparable figures for the public investment on the railway systems of (a) France, (b) West Germany, (c) Holland, (d) Norway, (e) Sweden and (f) the United Kingdom for the years 1989-90, 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Mr. Portillo: British Rail's latest forecast for total investment expenditure in 1989-90 is £689 million and its latest plan forecasts investment of £1,052 million, £1,258 million and £1,421 million in 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93 respectively.

The only information that I have about the other countries is for France and West Germany for 1989. The figures are:

	£ million
France	1,062
West Germany	1,662

The networks in France and Germany are, of course, bigger than that in Britain.

Fishing Boats

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list all incidents of collision between fishing boats or their gear and submarines in 1989 and 1988 in United Kingdom waters.

Mr. McLoughlin: The names of United Kingdom (and Isle of Man) fishing vessels reported to the Department as having been involved in incidents or suspected incidents with submarines in 1989 are listed in the table together with the date of the incident. There were no similar incidents reported to the Department in 1988.

Vessel	Date of incident
New Dawn	3 January 1989
Lau Ann	22 January 1989
Spes Bona (and Arturus and Strathayre)	27 February 1989
Seagull	31 March 1989
Northern Lights	31 March 1989
Laurel (Isle of Man)	17 April 1989
Huntress	28 June 1989
Scotia	13 November 1989
Sarah Marie	7 December 1989

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the number of United Kingdom fishing boats lost at sea in 1988 and 1989.

Mr. McLoughlin: For 1988 the figure is 22. For 1989 the number is not yet available.

Western Ferries Limited

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of safety arrangements on board vessels operated by Western Ferries Limited; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Marine Accident Investigation Branch is conducting an investigation into this incident to establish the cause of the fire. The investigation is not yet completed.

Cyclists

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many representations he has received from hon. and right hon. Members and members of the public concerning British Rail's policy towards cyclists and rail services; how many of these were from regular cyclists; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: In the past year I have received a total of 16 representations from members of the public, either directly or via right hon. or hon. Members, concerning British Rail's policy towards cyclists and rail services. I am unable to say how many were from regular cyclists. I understand that BR's policy is to welcome cyclists and to convey bicycles whenever possible, for an appropriate charge, provided that this will not unduly inconvenience other passengers, or displace other revenue-earning traffic, such as parcels.

Road Accidents

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what additional protection for car passengers he proposes to make over the next five years to abate accident injuries on British roads.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 22 January 1990]: The Department reviews continually how improved construction standards might achieve casualty reductions, both among vehicle occupants and among those who are hit by vehicles. Any such standards require agreement in the EC. Safer steering wheels and protection against side impact are two areas with considerable potential where we have pressed for early action. More generally, we have sought to focus the attention of the Commission on priorities on vehicle safety through the note, "United Kingdom Priorities for Reducing Road Deaths and Serious Injuries from Improvements to Vehicle Construction Standards", copies of which I am placing in the Library.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Government Finance

17. Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures he is taking to publicise the availability of community charge benefits.

116. Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he is taking to encourage the maximum possible take-up of community charge benefits.

Mr. Chris Patten: I refer my hon. Friends to the reply given to the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East (Mr. Nellist) earlier today.

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the rate support grant allocations per head of population for each borough and district council in Kent for 1989-90 in descending order of magnitude.

Mr. David Hunt [holding answer 15 January 1990]: The following is the information requested for the period from 1 April 1989 to 31 March 1990:

1989-90	Rate support grant per head £
Gillingham	66·16
Thanet	56·76
Medway	43·45
Canterbury	42·19
Dover	40·50
Dartford	38·20
Gravesham	36·79
Shepway	35·57
Swale	34·83
Tunbridge Wells	34·29
Ashford	31·64
Maidstone	30·96
Sevenoaks	28·76
Tonbridge and Malling	21·66

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will state his revised projected community charge per capita for (a) Thanet district council and (b) Canterbury city council based upon (i) 100 per cent. collection, (ii) 95 per cent. collection and (iii) 90 per cent. collection; and if he will state the rate of inflation and population figures upon which these calculations are based.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 15 January 1990]: The community charge figures requested are as follows:

	Thanet district council	Canterbury district council
(i). Assumed community charge based on 100 per cent. collection	229	222
(ii). Assumed community charge based on 95 per cent. collection	241	234
(iii). Assumed community charge based on 90 per cent. collection	254	247

These figures assume spending figures for the district councils and for Kent county council based on their respective 1989-90 rate income and grant, adjusted for changes in function and uprated by 4·64 per cent. to be consistent with total standard spending for all authorities of £32·8 billion. They are shown after safety net adustments. The calculations are based on the following population figures: Thanet 96,367; Canterbury 95,811.

The published community charge exemplifications make no allowances for losses on collection; but, equally, they do not allow for certain additional offsetting sources of income (such as standard community charges or interest on cash flow, including the advance payment of revenue support grant that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment recently announced).

121. Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice he has issued to responsible individuals who are in receipt of intrusive changes of circumstances forms issued by local community charge registration officers.

Mr. Chope: Every adult individual has a statutory duty to inform the community charges registration officer of any change of circumstances which affects his or her register entry. There is, however, no duty to volunteer such information about any other person. A responsible individual has a duty to provide information about people other than him or herself only in response to a specific request from the registration officer.

104. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of those liable to pay the community charge will be eligible to receive community charge benefits.

Mr. Chope: Nearly one quarter of all community charge payers will be helped by community charge benefit, which can reduce their liability by up to 80 per cent.

88. Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about the new system of local authority capital controls.

Mr. Chope: The consultation paper "Capital Expenditure and Finance" published in July 1988 resulted in about 400 representations from the local authority associations, individual local authorities, other organisations, hon. Members, councillors, and other companies and individuals. Since then, my right hon. Friend has received further representations about various aspects of the new capital finance system provided for in part IV of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989.

72. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to provide additional moneys to ease the introduction of the poll tax; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: We are already providing £23·1 billion of external finance for local authorities in England for 1990-91. In addition, there will be £2·2 billion of support for individuals through community charge benefit, income support, and the transitional relief scheme.

69. Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the likely average percentage increase in community charge rates for 1991-92 over 1990-91.

Mr. Chope: I have made no such estimate.

60. Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to finalise the details of the new system of local authority capital controls.

Mr. Chope: We expect to complete shortly the main regulations implementing the new system. The remaining items will follow within a few weeks.

56. Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will produce revised estimates of the likely level of community charge in England and Wales.

110. Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will produce a revised estimate of the likely level of community charge in Northumbria.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend has made no estimates of the likely level of community charges. Figures placed in the Library on 11 January showed what the community charge could be in English districts if spending were in line with Government assumptions. My right hon. Friend has no plans to revise these figures.

43. Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when his officials last met the local authority associations to discuss the new system of local authority capital controls.

Mr. Chope: On 1 December 1989.

35. Mr. Wall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the criteria to be used for poll tax capping.

Mr. Chope: It would not be right to speculate on any charge-capping scheme we might need to operate in future.

28. Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what latest representations he has received over the workings of the poll tax.

Mr. David Hunt: My right hon. Friend and I continue to receive representations about the administration of the community charge. The aspects most frequently raised recently have been the fairness of the new arrangements, questions about comunity charge benefit, and details of the standard charge.

20. Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has made of the cost of administration of the community charge; and what representations he has received on this subject from the Association of District Councils.

Mr. David Hunt: The cost of collecting the community charge, as indicated by an independent study, has been taken into account in the revenue support grant settlement. The Association of District Councils has made a number of representations on these costs.

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will state in relation to each district and borough council in Kent by what percentage its 1990-91 standard spending assessment represents an increase or decrease from the comparable adjusted figure for the 1989-90 grant-related expenditure assessment.

Mr. David Hunt [holding answer 22 January 1990]: The figures requested are shown in the table:

Development Projects

18. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he will take to expedite the consultative and legal processes necessary before the implementation of major development projects.

Mr. Michael Spicer: In July 1988 we introduced new rules of procedure to speed up planning inquiries into major projects. And we are considering responses to a consultation paper on improving the effectiveness of the planning system generally.

Defective Houses

19. Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any proposals to offer assistance to those people who purchased houses which since purchase have proved defective; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Eligible owners of designated defective properties are entitled to assistance from their local authority under the housing defects legislation.

92. Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he intends to provide additional resources for the repair and maintenance of defective houses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The housing investment programme (HIP) allocations for 1990-91, announced by my right hon. Friend on 21 December 1989, took account of the total needs of local authorities for housing expenditure, including the need for expenditure on housing defects. We do not propose to make any additional allocations.

Homelessness

21. Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any further proposals to tackle homelessness.

Mr. Chris Patten: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave earlier today to the right hon. Member for Salford, East (Mr. Orme).

120. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he is taking to alleviate homelessness in London and the south-east.

Mr. Chope: Following publication of our review of the homelessness legislation we have made £250 million of extra resources available over the next two years for schemes to tackle homelessness in London and the south-east. My Department has written to all housing associations and local authorities in London and the south-east inviting them to submit schemes to use this money. We want in the first instance to reduce the number of homeless families councils place in bed and breakfast accommodation. We have asked councils and associations to respond quickly.

113. Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what additional resources he will provide to the Housing Corporation in 1991 to alleviate homelessness.

Mr. Chope: On 20 December my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Folkestone and Hythe (Mr. Howard) announced significant increases in the Housing Corporation's approved development programme. At £1,220·5 million, gross provision in 1990-91 will be nearly 50 per cent. higher than this year's allocation and will rise even further to £1,563 million in 1991-92. These additional resources will be allocated by the Housing Corporation to those areas and individuals in greatest housing need, including, of course, the statutorily homeless.

Included within these figures are allocations of £36 million in 1990-91 and £37 million in 1991-92 which form part of the Government's special homelessness programme announced in November last year. These resources will be used to finance projects in the pressure areas of London and the south-east aimed at making available, quickly, accommodation for the statutorily homeless.

100. Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a statement on his response to the Association of London Authorities' proposals for alleviating acute homelessness.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend has written to the association, urging it to encourage member authorities to submit bids for a share of the additional £250 million we are making available specifically to reduce homelessness in London and the south-east.

Recycling

22. Mr. Carttiss: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to encourage recycling of waste in Government Departments and in the House.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The recycling of waste is a matter for each Department to arrange in the light of local circumstances and other requirements such as security. We are, through the interdepartmental committee on business and the environment, stressing to colleagues the need to review carefully their waste disposal arrangements in order to maximise the opportunities for recycling.

111. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what levels of waste recycling are achieved by waste disposal authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: There is at present no comprehensive record of the levels of waste recycling achieved by waste disposal authorities. However, my Department is about to launch a survey of local authorities which will investigate, among other things, the current extent of recycling activity by local authorities. In addition, under the provisions of the Environmental Protection Bill, which received its Second Reading on 15 January, waste collection authorities will be required to prepare recycling plans to enable their performance in recycling to be assessed and waste disposal authorities should have regard to the desirability of including in any contract for waste disposal terms or conditions designed to maximise the recycling of waste.

99. Mr. Bright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he intends to take to encourage local authorities to achieve targets of recycling 50 per cent. of household waste by the year 2000.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Local authorities will be encouraged through the provisions of the Environmental Protection Bill to improve their recycling performance. In particular, waste collection authorities will be given specific powers to facilitate recycling and will be required to prepare detailed recycling plans. Waste disposal authorities will be required to have regard to the desirability of including in any contract for the disposal of waste terms or conditions designed to maximise the recycling of waste, and waste regulation authorities will be required to give priority to recycling when considering disposal options. The provisions in the Bill will be followed up with detailed guidance to local authorities about means of encouraging recycling.

The Government are also supporting specific initiatives involving local authorities such as the recycling city project in Sheffield which is pioneering new methods of collecting and processing recyclables.

63. Mr. David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the success to date of the recycling city project in Sheffield.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My Department, together with the Department of Trade and Industry and the Industry Council for Packaging and the Environment (INCPEN), is funding a three-year research contract to monitor and evaluate the UK2000 recycling city project in Sheffield. A report on the first six months of that research is expected in March. While it is still early to make any conclusive assessment of the success of the project, it is already apparent that important progress has been made by the various industries involved in the provision of facilities to enable the public to recycle their waste and that the response to those facilities has been enthusiastic, with up to three quarters of the people served by the kerbside collection scheme taking an active part.

Rent Arrears

23. Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the 10 local authorities in England with the highest rent arrears.

Mr. Chope: Local authority figures for 1988-89 are not yet available. The top 10 authorities with the highest arrears as a percentage of their rent roll in 1987-88 were as follows:

Rank Authority	Amount
	£ million	percentage
1. Brent[1]	8·1	47
2. Lambeth	12·6	30
3. Southwark	19·0	29
4. Islington	9·8	27
5. Hackney	8·4	24
6. Haringey	4·1	19
7. Liverpool	11·2	18
8. Waltham Forest	3·1	16

Rank Authority	Amount
	£ million	percentage
9. Greenwich	4·8	15
10. Camden	4·7	15

[1]The figure reported by Brent (£16·7 million) included rate arrears, and so on. The figure in the table is a DOE estimate on a pro rata basis (the basis apparently used by Brent in previous years).

Climate Change

24. Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will report on the outcome of the Cairo world conference on preparing for climate change.

Mr. Trippier: I participated in the conference and found it stimulating, particularly for the attention it brought to the importance of climate change for developing countries.

Canals

25. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next intends to meet the chairman of the British Waterways Board to discuss future policy for canals.

Mr. Chris Patten: I have met the BWB chairman, Mr. David Ingman, twice since taking up my present office and I plan to visit the BWB later this year.

Business Rates

26. Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about the introduction of the national non-domestic rating system for businesses.

Mr. David Hunt: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has received a number of representations from individual businesses and business organisations on aspects of the new uniform business rate in England.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a further statement on the implications of the uniform business rate for small and large businesses in England and Wales.

Mr. Chope: I have nothing further to add to the answer given by my right hon. Friend to my hon. Friend the Member for Stroud (Mr. Knapman) on 20 December, Official Report, columns 330-31.

76. Mr. Waller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, for the Bradford metropolitan district, he will state the average percentage change in rates payable in respect of industrial premises following revaluation and the introduction of the uniform business rate.

Mr. Chope: At the national non-domestic poundage of 34·8p and taking account of the non-domestic revaluation, average rate bills for factories in the metropolitan district of Bradford would fall by 27·3 per cent. compared with 1989-90. However, both reductions and increases in bills will be subject to transitional arrangements. The purpose of these is to give businesses facing higher bills time to adjust and to ensure that the overall yield from business rate remains broadly the same in real terms in 1990-91 as in 1989-90.

74. Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received over the implementation of the new business rate.

Mr. Chope: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave him on 13 December, Official Report, column 710.

64. Mr. Buckley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultations were held with representatives of the business community and local authorities on the level of the uniform business rate prior to his recent announcement.

Mr. Chope: Wide consultations have been held with representatives of the business community and local authorities on all aspects of the new uniform business rate. The rate for 1990-91, which my right hon. Friend announced on 20 December, is pitched at the level necessary to meet the Government's commitment that businesses should pay broadly the same in real terms in the first year of the new system as in the last year of the old.

57. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the likely effects upon businesses of the introduction of the unified business rate.

Mr. Chope: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend to my hon. Friend the Member for Stroud on 20 December, Official Report, columns 330-31.

41. Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received concerning the new business rating adjustment.

68. Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received concerning the impact of the uniform business rate on small businesses in the midlands.

96. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many representations he has had from owners of small businesses in relation to his proposals for a national non-domestic rate.

114. Mr. John Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received on the introduction of the uniform business rate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: I refer the hon. Members and the hon. and learned Member to the reply given to the hon. Members for Torfaen (Mr. Murphy) and for Ashfield (Mr. Haynes) on 13 December, Official Report, column 710.

Housing Corporation

27. Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has received from the Housing Corporation for new projects since his announcement that the corporation's new-build programme is to be doubled.

Mr. Michael Spicer: In his statement of 20 December Official Report, column 327 announcing the doubling of the Housing Corporation's capital programme over the next three years my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Folkestone and Hythe (Mr. Howard) outlined the policy framework against which those funds were to be allocated in 1990-91. Within that framework it is for the Housing Corporation to decide which new projects are funded. I understand that the corporation hopes to have completed this process by the middle of March.

44. Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any new proposals concerning the financing of the Housing Corporation.

118. Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to increase the funding for the Housing Corporation.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Folkestone and Hythe (Mr. Howard) announced details of the Housing Corporation's approved development programme for 1990-91 on 20 December 1989, Official Report, column 327, and said that the corporation's capital programme was planned to double over the next three years, rising to £1,736 million in 1992-93. I have nothing to add to that statement. Decisions on the level of grant for the administrative costs of the corporation will be announced shortly.

Planning Applications

29. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what account local planning committees and his departmental inspectors are required to pay to local objections to individual planning applications; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: All relevant views expressed by local objectors should be taken into account in determining planning applications, together with all material considerations.

Nature Conservancy Council

30. Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further representations he has received regarding the Government's plans for the Nature Conservancy Council.

Mr. Trippier: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 13 December 1989 to the hon. Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce), Official Report, column 706. My Department continues to receive representations from interested parties covering a range of views.

Rural Development Commission

31. Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met the chairman of the Rural Development Commission; what was discussed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: I met the chairman of the Rural Development Commission on 5 December 1989 to discuss the work of the commission.

33. Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the numbers of job opportunities created by the assistance of the Rural Development Commission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The commission estimates that it assisted in the creation or retention of at least 5,000 job opportunities in the financial year 1988-89. Further benefits, as yet not quantifiable, will flow from the additional assistance to rural coalfield areas, including a substantial part of the hon. Member's constituency, announced on 9 January.

Tenants

32. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he intends to issue any guidelines to councils about the availability of independent advice for tenants who may be transferred from the local authority to a new landlord.

117. Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any new proposals for ensuring that a full and fair consultation is held with tenants in areas where the council is proposing transfer of housing to another landlord.

Mr. Chope: Local authorities have a statutory obligation, under schedule 3A to the Housing Act 1985, to consult tenants about a proposed disposal of their homes to a new landlord. It is for the local authority concerned to ensure that it provides tenants with sufficient and accurate details of its proposal to enable them to take an informed view about it.

Toxic Waste

34. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about the current regulations concerning the importation and transit of toxic waste; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The Department has received representations on a number of aspects of the current regulations on the transfrontier shipment of hazardous waste. The EC directives that are implemented through these regulations are being revised both in the light of operational experience by member states and also to give effect to the Basel convention adopted last year. The Government have made clear their views on the need for strengthening and extending the Community's rules on transfrontier shipment and we are seeking powers in the Environmental Protection Bill to restrict or prohibit the import of any wastes, where this is necessary to prevent risk of pollution or harm to human health.

75. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the amount in tonnes of toxic waste imported for incineration during 1988-89; and how much of this was of polychlorinated biphenyls or of materials contaminated with polychlorinated biphenyls.

Mr. Trippier: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution estimates that approximately 52,000 tonnes of hazardous waste was imported during 1988-89. It is not possible to identify separately the quantity destined for incineration. Figures for polychlorinated biphenyls (PCBs) are available only since the introduction of the transfrontier shipment of hazardous waste regulations in October 1988 and from then until 31 March 1989 some 5,800 tonnes of PCB-contaminated waste was imported for incineration.

55. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he now expects the toxic waste held in Wath-upon-Dearne to be removed from the United Kingdom.

Mr. Trippier: I have asked officials to pursue the matter further with the United States authorities.

New Homes Environmental Group

36. Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met representatives of the New Homes Environmental Group; and what was discussed.

Mr. Chope: I have not met representatives from the New Homes Environmental Group although my Department was an observer at their meetings.

Green Belt

37. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many applications for development in London's green belt have been permitted in each year following the abolition of the Greater London council (a) by the London boroughs and (b) by the county districts; and if he will make a statement.

40. Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give figures for the total amount of London's green belt land lost to development in each year following the abolition of the Greater London council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: I regret that this information is not available.

Water Privatisation

38. Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people purchased shares in the privatised water companies.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The information is not available in the form requested, but the number of original allocatees recorded on the interim register for each company was as follows:

	Numbers
Anglian	274,167
Northumbrian	255,476
North West	244,491
Severn Trent	317,673
Southern	261,704
South West	129,064
Thames	680,816
Welsh	143,099
Wessex	188,541
Yorkshire	210,091
Total	2,705,122

These registers include corporate holdings as well as individuals. The offer also allowed for holdings by individuals in any or all of the 10 companies and therefore holders may appear on more than one register.

77. Mr. Gow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many worker shareholders there are in the nine privatised water authorities in England.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: A total of 34,208 employees representing 85·55 per cent. of the eligible work force of the nine companies have successfully applied for shares in the companies under free and matching offers. In addition some of the small number of employees not eligible for the free and matching offers will have successfully applied for shares, but exact figures could not be provided without disproportionate cost.

49. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the total value of the planned investment programmes of the privatised water and sewage businesses in England and Wales over the next 10 years.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The total estimated value of the planned investment programmes of the newly privatised water and sewage businesses in England and Wales is £24·6 billion at November 1989 prices.

Bedfordshire County Council (Spending)

39. Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has received from Bedfordshire county council as to its proposed level of spending for the year 1990-91 following his announcement of the revenue support grant; what level of spending he estimates it should keep to; by how much this differs from the proposed level of spending and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend has received no information from Bedfordshire county council on its proposed level of spending for 1990-91. Its standard spending assessment for 1990-91 is £277,308,000. This is an appropriate amount consistent with the provision of a standard level of service. However, Bedfordshire's budget for 1990-91 will depend on its own decisions for which it will be accountable to its chargepayers.

Rutland Water (Animal Deaths)

42. Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will now set up a special inquiry to investigate and report upon all aspects relating to the deaths of dogs and sheep around Rutland Water in September 1988.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I do not think that it is necessary to set up a special inquiry. The NRA will be compiling a report on its investigations into the causes of the toxic algal growth in 1989 at a number of sites in England, including Rutland Water. This report will address the circumstances surrounding the deaths of animals at Rutland Water.

Inner Cities

45. Mr. Lord: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures were taken by his Department to encourage the regeneration of inner-city areas in 1989.

Mr. Moynihan: During 1989 my Department continued to develop and implement a comprehensive range of programmes and initiatives directed at inner-city regeneration. Substantial progress was made during the year.

A new urban development corporation was established for Bristol to bring the number of third generation UDCs to four. Private investment committed across all UDC areas passed £7·3 billion.

City grant, introduced in the previous year, began to make a significant impact on the redevelopment of run-down urban areas. By the end of 1989, over 100 capital investment projects had received approval for a total of £85 million grant; these will lead to private investment of £360 million and the creation of 13,500 jobs.

The urban programme continued to support a wide range of projects to strengthen local economies, improve the environment and tackle social problems in deprived urban areas; it is estimated that about £260 million was spent on a total of more than 10,000 projects.

Under the enterprise zone initiative, Sunderland borough council and the Tyne and Wear development corporation were invited to prepare planning schemes for an enterprise zone in Sunderland.

To encourage further the disposal of unused or underused land, new registers of such land, including inner-city sites, were made publicly available by public sector owners on 31 October under codes of practice issued by the Department.

The annual report on the Department's inner-city programmes for 1988-89 will be published shortly.

Housing (Planning)

46. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which organisations have submitted comments on paragraph 3 of annex A of the draft planning policy guidance note on the planning aspects of housing developments issued in October 1989 by his Department.

Mr. Moynihan: We have so far received over 400 responses to the draft guidance note; a substantial number of them comment on the issue of low-cost housing for local needs. The consultation period ended on 5 January, and my officials are currently engaged on an analysis of the responses. When this is complete, I shall write to the hon. Member.

Sports Council

47. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next intends to meet the chairman of the Sports Council; and what topics he proposes to discuss with him.

103. Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next intends to meet the chairman of the Sports Council; and what matters he proposes to discuss.

Mr. Moynihan: I will next meet the chairman of the Sports Council at the Commonwealth games in Auckland. I expect that we will discuss informally a range of current issues relating to sport and recreation—including, I hope, British successes at the games.

Low-cost Housing

48. Mr. Robert Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to increase the rate of provision of low-cost housing both to buy and for rent in rural areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Over the last two years the Government have announced a series of measures to promote provision of low-cost housing to rent and buy in rural areas. We have more than doubled public funding through the Housing Corporation for new investment by housing associations, so enabling the corporation to increase the targets for rented housing under its special rural programme to 1,500 a year by 1992-93 and identify a rural element within its low-cost home ownership programme. We have also made changes to the planning rules, to permit development of low-cost housing for local needs on sites not previously designated for housing, and introduced a repurchase scheme to ensure that shared ownership housing in rural areas remains available for local people. Taken together, and along with the steps we have taken to free the private rented market, these measures should make a major contribution to increasing the supply of low-cost housing to meet local needs in rural areas.

Clean Air

50. Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met representatives from the National Society for Clean Air.

Mr. Trippier: While my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has not met representatives of the National Society for Clean Air, my hon. Friend the Minister for Health met representatives when she addressed the society's 90th anniversary celebrations on 15 May last year, when she was the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment.

Environmental Protection

51. Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what international commitments on environmental protection Her Majesty's Government have entered into since 1987.

Mr. Trippier: Since 1987 the United Kingdom and the other member states have adopted European Community measures on the following:

Directives:

Motorcycle noise
Construction plant noise
Testing new chemicals
Dangerous preparations
Vehicle emissions
Diesel emissions
Pesticide residues
Dangerous substances in water
Large combustion plants
New municipal waste incinerators
Existing municipal waste incinerators
Air Quality—smoke and SO_2
Titanium dioxide

Regulations:

Monitoring of forest damage
Forestry action programme
Trade in endangered species (enforcing CITES)
Ivory imports
Set-aside
CFCs, halons and ozone layer

The United Kingdom has also signed the Sofia protocol to the 1979 convention on long-range transboundary air pollution and the Basel convention on transfrontier movements of hazardous wastes.

52. Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much was spent per head of population in 1988-89 on the control of pollution and improvement of the environment in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Trippier: Statistics are not available in a form that would allow an exact reply to this question. Broad estimates suggest that the UK spends for the purpose of pollution control and environmental improvement a proportion of its GDP comparable to that in other industrial countries.

59. Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals on environmental protection his Department is currently urging the European Community to adopt.

Mr. Trippier: The United Kingdom plays a leading and constructive role in shaping European Community policy for protecting the environment. We are currently urging agreement on a wide range of proposals, including the following:

- A regulation establishing a European Environment Agency to underpin environmental policy with comparable and authoritative information on a Europe-wide basis;
- A directive to protect the habitats of wild fauna and flora which will enable all member states to implement the Berne Convention and which will have added value over and above what can be achieved nationally;
- A directive to consolidate existing directives on exhaust emissions from passenger cars and which will include evaporative emissions;
- A directive to tighten controls over emissions from large diesel vehicle engines, which are responsible for about half the emissions of NOx from road transport and which are the principal source of smoke in cities;
- A resolution that advanced industrialised countries should aim to become self-sufficient in disposing of their wastes so that we may put an end to virtually all transfrontier shipments of wastes;
- A proposal establishing a community-wide scheme of labelling to provide consumers with impartial advice on the environmental characteristics of products and to reinforce incentives for manufacturers to produce goods which are environmentally more benign;
- A directive designed to improve public access to environmental information which will be consistent with the register-based approach used successfully in this country for a number of years;
- The production of an agreed list of substances which are particularly dangerous for the aquatic environment and which require priority action to minimise imputs from all sources;
- A directive establishing a mechanism for up-dating certain existing directives on water quality in the light of technical progress and practical experience.

In addition, we have already persuaded the Community to adopt our ideas for reducing and eliminating chlorofluorocarbons as its position in the current revision of the Montreal protocol. These proposals are the most stringent of any put forward in the negotiations.

Council House Sales

53. Mr. Irvine: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest estimate of the numbers of council tenants who have exercised the right to buy since 1980.

Mr. Chope: From October 1980 to September 1989 about 900,000 tenants purchased their homes from local authorities and new towns in England under the right-to-buy legislation.

Task Forces

54. Mr. Andrew Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures he is taking to co-ordinate the activities of city action teams and inner-city task forces.

Mr. Moynihan: Effective co-ordination of Government action in the larger cities is delivered through the city action teams while the inner-city task forces operate at a more local level based in the heart of inner-city districts. The CATs and task forces work closely together to bring about regeneration in their areas.

On 6 December my hon. Friend the Minister of State announced the formation of a new ministerial team to spearhead and co-ordinate action in inner-cities. Each city action team and inner-city task force now has a Minister to advise and assist it in its vital regeneration work.

Derelict Land Clearance

58. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the provision of additional money for derelict land clearance in the city of Bradford.

Mr. Moynihan: We are currently considering local authority bids for derelict land grant resources and the regional distribution of grant for 1990-91 will be announced shortly.

Carbon Dioxide

61. Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his current estimate of Britain's carbon dioxide emissions by the year 2005.

Mr. Trippier: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Department of Energy gave to the hon. Member for Knowsley, North (Mr. Howarth) on 13 December 1989 at columns 647-48.

Drink Cans

62. Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures he is taking to reduce the propensity for discarding metallic beverage containers as litter.

Mr. Trippier: The Environmental Protection Bill contains various measures intended to discourage people from discarding litter in general, including powers for local authorities to impose fixed penalty tickets on litterers and the raising of the maximum fine for littering from £400 to £1,000. The Bill also promotes the recycling of waste by requiring local authorities to prepare recycling plans and to consider recycling as a vital part of their waste management strategy. The industry is also developing new products such as the non-detachable pull-ring which will contribute to reducing the problem of litter.

Affordable Housing

65. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give urgent consideration to extending to London and other cities, the principle of encouraging the provision of affordable housing which already applies to rural areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The Government's policy is to encourage provision of affordable housing in both rural and urban areas. We have recently taken a series of measures to promote the provision of low-cost housing to rent and buy in rural areas; but special priority continues to be given to inner-city areas in distributing resources to both local authorities and housing associations.

86. Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will consider initiating a study into the feasibility of using the planning system in high land value areas to reserve land for affordable housing as a specific land use; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: The general question of what role the planning system can and should play in helping to secure the provision of affordable housing has been raised in a number of the responses to the draft planning policy guidance note on housing (PPG3) which we published for consultation last October. I will consider the hon. Member's suggestion in that context.

Houses (Demolition)

66. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what new measures he is considering to curb the uncontrolled demolition of unlisted dwelling houses by developers creating sites for redevelopment, outside of conservation areas.

Mr. Moynihan: My right hon. Friend is considering this and other planning aspects of housing development in the context of responses to the draft revised planning policy guidance note 3 (housing) which was issued for consultation on 4 October.

Sport and Recreation

67. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to implement the recommendations contained in his review group's report on the provision of sport and recreation in the inner cities.

Mr. Moynihan: The Government will be giving careful consideration to the recommendations contained in the report of the review of sport and active recreation provision in the inner cities and to appropriate follow-up action. I very much hope that the other organisations to which recommendations are addressed will take them forward positively.

Estate Action

70. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress is being made under the Estate Action programme in selling run-down council properties to private developers.

Mr. Chope: Good progress. In the four years that the Estate Action programme has been operating 123 schemes have been approved which include planned disposals by councils of some 12,500 dwellings[1] to the private sector.

A research report[2] recently published by the Department of the Environment confirmed that selling run-down council properties to developers for improvement and sale to individual owners was welcomed by both the new occupants and former tenants.

The report endorses the Government's work under the Estate Action programme in promoting such schemes to help local authorities improve the quality of life on run-down estates.

Notes

[1] Excludes dwellings sold under the Right to Buy scheme

[2] 'The Sale of Local Authority Housing to the Private Sector' HMSO £12·50.

90. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next intends to visit an Estate Action scheme.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend has not yet done so, but hopes to do so in the future. For my part I visited three Estate Action schemes in Salford last month and look forward to further visits to other schemes.

Children's Play Facilities

71. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any proposals to increase the amount of money available for grants for the provision of children's play and recreation facilities in rural areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: Primary responsibility for play provision rests with individual local authorities which fund facilities according to their judgments about the need for and level of priority attached to particular projects. The Department allocates money specifically for children's play through the Sports Council which in turn funds the national children's play and recreation unit. The unit is currently supporting a number of demonstration projects which will examine good practice in play provision for children in rural areas. This Department also grant aids the Rural Development Commission, which funds a range of social and community projects, a number of them concerned with children's play and recreation. It is for both the commission and the play unit to decide within their overall budgets the priority given to children's play projects in rural areas.

British Scrap Federation

73. Mr. Marland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met the president of the British Scrap Federation; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment and Countryside met the president of the British Scrap Federation on 16 November when he attended its half-yearly dinner. Various matters relating to recycling and the valuable reclamation work undertaken by members of the British Scrap Federation were discussed.

Enterprise Zones

78. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to end rates and uniform business rate holidays for retail properties in enterprise zones.

Mr. Moynihan: Under paragraph 27 of schedule 32 to the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980 and paragraph 19 of schedule 5 to the Local Government Finance Act 1988 the rate exemption will end as each area concerned ceases to be an enterprise zone. My right hon. Friend has no plans to change the position.

Environmental Health Officers

79. Mr. Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with local authority associations concerning environmental health officers.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: None, but the work of environmental health officers has been relevant to a number of matters, such as the revenue support grant, which my right hon. Friend, my colleagues and I have discussed with the local authority associations.

Local Authorities (Tendering)

80. Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to introduce orders under the Local Government Act 1988 to extend those council activities required to be put out to public tender.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: An order extending the competition requirements of the Local Government Act 1988 to the management of sport and leisure facilities was made on 28 December 1989. There are at present no plans for extending those requirements to other services.

Local Government Finance (Barnsley)

81. Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will arrange an early meeting with representatives of Barnsley metropolitan borough council to discuss its allocation of revenue support grant.

Mr. Chope: The then Minister of State, my right hon. Friend the Member for Suffolk, Coastal (Mr. Gummer) met a delegation from Barnsley metropolitan borough council to discuss revenue support grant (RSG) on 29 June 1989. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State received no further request from Barnsley for a meeting on RSG, and the House approved the Revenue Support Grant Report (England) 1990-91 and other reports on the settlement on 18 January 1990. But we are, of course, prepared to meet authorities if they so wish.

Planning

82. Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to introduce more effective and progressive public involvement in planning processing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: My right hon. Friend is satisfied that the existing arrangements safeguard the public interest effectively.

Rented Houses

83. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what requests he has received from the Rural Development Commission to develop more housing for rent in rural areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend's predecessor, and the then Minister for Housing, met Lord Vinson, chairman of the Rural Development Commission, in December 1988, and discussed the need for low-cost housing in rural areas; and the commission's officials have regular discussions with my Department and the Housing Corporation. The commission makes grants to the National Agricultural Centre Rural Trust for its work in helping to establish village-based housing associations. Public expenditure provision for subsidised rented housing in rural areas has increased substantially over the past two years, and the Housing Corporation has established a special rural programme for villages.

Drinking Water

84. Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what legal action is currently being pursued by the European Commission in respect of drinking water quality; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The European Commission and member states regard the detailed formal correspondence on infraction proceedings as confidential, hence detailed information on infraction proceedings is not freely available. However I understand that, with regard to the drinking water directive, the Commission is at various stages of legal action against virtually all member states, including the United Kingdom.

Environmental Research

85. Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment by how much his Department plans to increase expenditure on environmental research between the current year and 1992-93.

Mr. Trippier: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave on 13 December to my hon. Friends the Members for Cambridgeshire, South-East (Mr. Paice) and for Cornwall, North (Mr. Neale) Official Report column 717.

Director General of Water Services

87. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the powers available to the Director General of Water Services to protect consumers.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Director General of Water Services' powers to protect consumers are set out in the Water Act 1989 supplemented by the water and sewerage undertakers' instruments of appointment. Under section 7 of the Act he must exercise his powers so as to secure that the functions of water and sewerage undertakers are properly carried out and that appointed companies are able to finance the proper carrying out of those functions. Subject to these general duties, he is subject to specific duties to protect consumers, to promote economy and efficiency and to facilitate competition.

Under section 6 of the Act the director general must establish up to 10 customer service committees and must allot each appointed company to one of those committees. It is the director general's intention to establish 10 customer service committees as soon as possible. The committees must keep under review all matters affecting customers' interests, consult and make representations to the companies, investigate those customer complaints within their remit and report to the director general on their activities in each financial year on any matter affecting the interests of customers or as required by the director general.

The director general has a duty to consider any complaint that the customer service committee is unable to resolve and any allegation that a committee is in breach of its duty, to consider any complaint asserting a contravention of any condition of an undertaker's appointment or any other requirement enforceable under section 20 of the Act, which he decides not to refer to the Secretary of State, and to take such steps as he considers appropriate.

The director general is also responsible for administering the regulatory system established under the Act and set out in the companies' instruments of appointment, which provides significant safeguards for consumers in relation to charges for water and sewerage services and to standards of service, and protects consumers from abuse of monopoly power.

The main provisions of the conditions of appointment are:

Limits on increases in charges. These may be adjusted by the director general in certain circumstances and reviewed periodically in the light of the principles set out in section 7 of the Act;

A prohibition on undue discrimination between classes of customers or potential customers so that, for example, domestic and industrial consumers both pay their fair share;

A requirement to submit audited accounts which, among other things, enable the director to protect the customer from cross subsidy between the appointed business and other businesses or companies in the group;

Requirements as to the procedures to be followed before a domestic customer may be disconnected for non-payment of charges and for dealing with leakage with respect to metered domestic customers, and requirements to prepare, submit to the director for approval, and publish code of practice for relations with customers and the customer service committees, for disconnection procedures and for liability for changes in the event of leakage;

A requirement to report performance against specified customer service indicators, to set targets for three key indicators of service—pressure of mains water, interruptions to water supplies and foul water flooding—and to make available to the public information on performance against these indicators. The director may vary the matters on which companies are required to report. Where performance is unsatisfactory he may ask the Secretary of State to make regulations under sections 38 of 68 to the Act to lay down standards of performance enforceable under the Act;

Procedures to ensure that the best value is obtained from the sale of any surplus land and that the customer benefits from the proceeds;

A requirement that the assets needed for the carrying out of the statutory water and sewerage functions remain available to the company, and a requirement to prepare, keep up to date and submit to the director an underground asset management plan to enable him to satisfy himself that the maintenance of long term assets is not being neglected.

The director has wide-ranging information powers under the Act and the instruments of appointment to monitor the performance of companies. Should a company be in breach of its appointment conditions the director general may take enforcement action under section 20 of the Act.

The director general is not responsible for regulating the quality of water supplied to customers or the quality of sewage discharges. Those are matters for other regulatory bodies but the director general has powers to ensure that the charges paid by consumers properly reflect the expenditure required to provide a satisfactory performance standard.

Itinerants

89. Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received regarding nuisance caused by itinerants.

Mr. Chope: I receive various letters, from hon. Members and the public, about problems caused by illegally camped itinerant gipsies.

Pharmaceutical Wastes

91. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received regarding the continued dumping of pharmaceutical wastes in the North sea.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: In common with my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, who is responsible for licensing of the disposal of waste at sea, I have had a number of letters and representations from members of the public about the disposal of liquid industrial wastes. None of the wastes concerned is toxic and nor do they contain more than trace elements of contaminants such as metals. Use of the sea disposal option for this type of waste has been reduced by 50 per cent. since 1980 and is expected to end within a very few years as practicable land-based alternatives become available.

Nuclear Accidents

93. Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans there are for monitoring radioactivity after a nuclear accident.

Mr. Trippier: Arrangements for monitoring following an overseas nuclear accident, are set out in the booklet "The National Response Plan and Radioactive Incident Monitoring Network (RIMNET). Phase I". Copies of this booklet have been placed in the Library of the House. My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Energy and for Wales, and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland are responsible for making arrangements for dealing with accidents at civil nuclear sites in the United Kingdom.

Lead

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures Her Majesty's Government have taken since 1985 to lower the amount of lead in the atmosphere over Britain; and with what results.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The main thrust of the Government's policy has been, and is, to tackle lead in petrol which still accounts for the bulk of lead in air. We reduced the maximum permitted lead content of petrol from 0·40 to 0·15 per litre from 31 December 1985, and have taken a number of steps to encourage the widest possible supply and use of unleaded petrol. In particular the introduction of the differential between the rates of duty on leaded and unleaded petrol has meant that 95-octane unleaded can normally be found some 12p a gallon cheaper than leaded four star.

As a result, airborne lead concentrations have fallen by some 50 per cent. between 1985 and 1988, the latest year for which complete figures are available, and the use of unleaded petrol has risen from 2 per cent. to 28 per cent. of the market within the last year. Vehicle regulations will ensure that uptake continues to rise. Since October 1989 all new models of cars have had to be capable of running on 95-octane unleaded petrol. This requirement will apply to all new cars from October 1990, and from 31 December 1992 all new cars will be fitted with catalysts and will have to use unleaded petrol.

Water Standards

95. Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are his latest estimates of the capital investment required to meet European Community directives on water standards.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave earlier to the hon. Member for Angus, East (Mr. Welsh).

Environmental Improvements

97. Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what resources Her Majesty's Government are making available to international organisations and to other countries to assist and encourage environmental improvements.

Mr. Trippier: In the current year the Government expect to give financial assistance to a range of international organisations as follows:

The United Nations Environment Programme	3,000,000
The Inter-Governmental Panel on Climate Change	750,000
The Convention and Protocol for the Protection of the Ozone Layer	83,000
The Convention on Long-Range Transboundary Air Pollution	72,000
The OECD Chemicals Programme	52,000
The Convention on Wetlands of International Importance	14,000
The Convention on the Conservation of Migratory Species of Wild Animals	41,000
CITES	[1]85,000
The International Union for the Conservation of Nature and Natural Resources	50,000
The European Environmental Bureau	5,000

[1] Approximately.

This is in addition to the general financial contributions by Government to the European Community, the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development and the United Nations.

Government assistance to developing countries is provided through the aid programme which has as a central aim the promotion of sustainable development. Environmental issues are addressed in all projects and programmes under the aid programme, which is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Minister for Overseas Development. On eastern Europe, we are working through the Group of 24 and the 300 million ecu aid fund established by the European Community.

115. Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps his Department is taking to improve the environment in the towns and villages of southern England.

Mr. Trippier: A sound and up-to-date planning framework is essential if we are to protect and improve the urban and rural environment. We have recently urged county planning authorities to revise and update their structure plans where necessary, and we are encouraging district planning authorities to extend the coverage of local plans. While plans must make adequate provision for necessary development, the decisions they embody about the distribution of new development can and should reflect communities' concerns for the protection of the local environment.

We also issued new draft planning advice last autumn which removes the previous strong presumption in favour of releasing land for housing development; stresses the importance of good design in new housing schemes; and encourages planning authorities to develop policies for the protection of existing residential areas, where their character is threatened by excessive infilling and redevelopment. Such policies should be embodied in local plans.

Acid Rain

98. Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the effects of acid deposition on trees within the United Kingdom.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I would refer the hon. and learned Member to the recently published terrestrial effects review group report which has chapters on the effects of air pollutants, including acid deposition, on trees. This report summarises current understanding and draws widely on research programmes funded by the DOE, NERC and Forestry Commission. Copies of the report can be found in the Library of the House.

Pollution Control

101. Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about the integrated pollution control provisions of the Environmental Protection Bill.

Mr. Trippier: A total of 91 responses were received to the initial consultation paper on integrated pollution control which was published in July 1988. Further documents setting out our proposals for cost recovery charging and public access to information under integrated pollution control drew 53 and 74 responses respectively. The proposals for integrated pollution control, which will place the United Kingdom at the forefront of pollution control within Europe, have been welcomed across a broad spectrum of opinion.

European Environment Agency

102. Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps his Department is taking to support the selection of a site in the United Kingdom to host the proposed European Environment Agency.

Mr. Trippier: The Secretary of State for the Environment publicly stated his support for the proposed European Environment Agency to be located in Cambridge, and wrote to the European Commission in confirmation on 8 December 1989. Documentation advocating the merits of Cambridge has since been compiled which will shortly be forwarded to the European Council and the Commission.

Tidy Britain Group

105. Mr. Aspinwall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what additional resources are being provided by his Department to support the Tidy Britain Group during the current year.

Mr. Trippier: The Department is providing £3 million to support the work of the Tidy Britain Group in 1989-90. The grant was substantially increased over that provided in previous years specifically to finance the development of the group's pilot projects scheme and for preparations for 1990—Tidy Britain Year.

In view of the considerable amount of work generated by Tidy Britain Year and the success of the group's people and places programme, the grant for 1990-91 has been set at £1·812 million. This is an increase of £1·2 million over the original PES planning figure of £612,000.

Greenhouse Effect

106. Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further measures Her Majesty's Government are taking to promote international action to tackle the greenhouse effect.

Mr. Trippier: We actively support the work of the intergovernmental panel on climate change and our contribution to its scientific assessment will be enhanced by the establishment of the new climate change prediction centre. We are leading efforts to gain support for an international framework convention on climate change and hosting the second conference of the parties to the Montreal protocol at which we will press for the strengthening of the protocol to phase out the use and production of CFCs which are important greenhouse gases.

Waste Disposal

107. Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations have been made to him regarding provisions in the Environmental Protection Bill to separate local authority responsibilities for the management and regulation of the disposal of waste.

Mr. Trippier: I have received no representations regarding the provisions in the Environmental Protection Bill to separate local authority responsibilities for the management and regulation of the disposal of waste. But the responses to our consultative proposals to separate regulation from operation were generally favourable.

Planning Appeals

108. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of planning appeals in (a) Bracknell and (b) Windsor and Maidenhead, have been granted during the last 12 months for which figures are available, and the two previous 12-month periods.

Mr. Moynihan: The information requested is given in the table. In each case the figures are those for the 12-month period to 30 November.

Year	Appeals/ decided	Appeals/ allowed	Per cent. Appeals/ allowed
Bracknell
1986-87	45	18	40·0
1987-88	56	18	31·1
1988-89	58	18	31·0
Windsor and Maidenhead
1986-87	130	64	49·2
1987-88	131	68	51·9
1988-89	189	64	33·9

English Heritage

109. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment by how much the grant in aid to English Heritage will have increased since 1984-85 by 1991-92.

Mr. Trippier: Grant in aid to English Heritage in 1984-85 was £49·9 million. The provisional allocation for 1991-92 is £79·816 million. In the intervening years English Heritage has taken on additional responsibilities—notably the Greater London Council's historic buildings division and historic house museums—which makes direct comparisons between 1984-85 and 1991-92 misleading. Nevertheless, the figures reflect steady increases in grant in aid and confirm the Government's strong commmitment to assist the preservation and protection of the nation's important heritage assets.

119. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals English Heritage has made to spend the additional resources being made available to it over the next two years.

Mr. Trippier: We have allocated an additional £3 million to English Heritage in 1990-91 and an extra £3·02 million in 1991-92 taking the total grant in aid in each of those two years to £77·977 million and £79·816 million (provisional) respectively.

These substantial increases signal the Government's recognition of the importance of our heritage to the quality of life and the contribution it makes to a healthy tourism industry. They mean that English Heritage will be able to build on its successful record in several different ways. It plans to invest more in the maintenance and presentation of its key historic sites, already a source of significant enjoyment and education for an increasing number of adults and youngsters.

We are particularly pleased that some of the increase is being earmarked for preparatory work on the proposed new visitor centre at Stonehenge. Recent agreement with the Ministry of Defence on an access route to the centre has ended a long period of uncertainty and concern. English Heritage will now be directing its energies wholeheartedly towards the preparation of detailed proposals for visitor facilities worthy of this outstandingly important monument.

Other areas of English Heritage's responsibilities which will benefit from the extra resources include archaeology and the review of lists of historic buildings produced in the early 1970s.

Water Leakages

112. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the leakage levels from the English water distribution system.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The latest information on water losses, which includes water lost by leakage, was published in the prospectus "The Water Share Offers", a copy of which is available in the Library.

Limestone Pavements

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps have been taken under the Wildlife and Countryside Act to protect limestone pavements; and what further steps he intends to take.

Mr. Trippier: Under the provisions of section 34 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981, county planning authorities may make orders designating land containing limestone pavements and prohibiting the removal or disturbance of limestone on or in it. To date, 12 orders have been made. The system is working satisfactorily and we have no plans for additional protective measures.

Dolphinaria

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has now received replies from all the dolphinaria operators in the United Kingdom regarding their plans to implement the new standards; and what action he proposes to take.

Mr. Trippier: One dolphinaria operator has supplied full details of its plans for the implementation of new standards. The Department is awaiting replies from the remainder. A reminder has been sent and we shall continue to press for full responses from all operators. The steering group report on dolphinaria, published in August 1988, and endorsed by Ministers, made it clear that failure to reach the required standards by August 1993 would constitute grounds for revoking an operator's display exemption.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his Department's policy regarding dolphinaria exhibiting single specimens of cetacea; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The standards recommended by the departmental steering group set up to review Dr. Klinowska's report on dolphinaria, and endorsed by Ministers in August 1988, state that no single specimen of any species of cetacea may be kept. We would therefore expect any dolphinarium which held a single specimen to take appropriate steps to remedy the situation as soon as practicable.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action has been taken to implement the recommendation of the dolphinaria steering group report regarding the provision of guidance on educational criteria for displaying cetacea in captivity.

Mr. Trippier: Several items recommended by the dolphinaria steering group, including the provision of guidance on educational criteria for displaying cetacea, raise scientific and technical questions on which we intend to seek appropriate specialist advice.

Water Act Consents

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many (a) consents and (b) authorisations have been made subject to any conditions in accordance with section 152(4) or (5) of the Water Act 1989;

(2) how many (a) consents and (b) authorisations he has made for the disposal of land, or rights or interests in or over any land, in accordance with section 152(3) of the Water Act 1989;

(3) how many requests he has received for his (a) consent or (b) general authorisation for the disposal of land, or of any interest or right in or over any land, in accordance with section 152(2) of the Water Act 1989;

(4) if he will list the location of all land, or the nature and location of any right or interest in or over any land, which has been subject to a request for consent for disposal in accordance with section 152(2) of the Water Act 1989, specifying which have received his consent or general authorisation under section 152(4), and what if any conditions were attached under section 152(4) and (5);

(5) on how many occasions he has had an opportunity to enter into covenant with a company holding an appointment under chapter I of part II of the Water Act 1989 for the purposes set out in section 152(7) of that Act; how many covenants have been entered into; on how many occasions he has declined to enter such covenants; and what were the reasons in each case.

Mr. Trippier: The Secretary of State has received one application for specific consent to dispose of land, or rights or interests in or over any land, under section 152 of the Water Act 1989. Consent has been given. This permits the sale of two areas of land at Bamford in the Peak District national park by Severn Trent Water. The disposal is subject to condition K of Severn Trent's appointment. The Countryside Commission, after consultation with the Peak Park joint planning board, raised no objection to an unconditional sale. No covenant was therefore required.

The Secretary of State has not entered into any covenants under section 152(7) or declined any recommendation that he should do so.

The Secretary of State has issued two general authorisations under section 152 to each appointed water undertaker which allow disposal of land if certain conditions are satisfied. These concern application of the Crichel Down rules to compulsorily purchased land, and protection for land in national parks, the Broads, areas of outstanding natural beauty, and sites of special scientific interest. In all cases there is a requirement to satisfy condition K of their licences which relates to ring fencing, disposals of land, and changes of use of land. I am placing copies of the authorisations in the Library. No further general authorisations have been requested. Land disposals under the general authorisations do not require the Secretary of State's consent.

Oil Pollution

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he intends to take to prevent oil pollution; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The primary responsibility for preventing oil pollution at sea lies with the owners and operators of ships, offshore installations, pipelines, refineries and other industries whose operation have the potential for a damaging impact. In the light of improving technology for reducing waste discharges, regulatory standards for these activities are continually under review and, on an international basis, in fora such as the International Maritime Organisation (IMO) in the case of shipping and the Paris Commission for land-based discharges. In the case of preventing damage from oil pollution at sea, the United Kingdom has well tried and tested arrangements co-ordinated by the marine pollution control unit of the Department of Transport. The recent initiative within IMO to develop an oil spill convention will consider how such arrangements can be improved on a worldwide basis.

Public Land

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the rules for sale of public land to private companies.

Mr. Moynihan: Guidance on disposals by Government Departments of land which is surplus to their requirements is given in chapter 32 of "Government Accounting—A guide of Accounting and Financial Procedures for the Use of Government Departments", and in a Treasury letter to accounting officers (DAO 4/88).

Local authorities have a general power under section 123(1) of the Local Government Act 1972 to dispose of land. However, subsection (2) of that section requires them to obtain consent from the Secretary of State for the Environment for any proposed disposal at less than the best consideration reasonably obtainable. My Department has from time to time issued advice by circular to local authorities about particular issues relating to land disposals.

EC Water Service Guidelines

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what are the water service guidelines for all member countries laid out by the EEC Commission on new connections for sewerage service;

(2) what EEC guidelines are laid out for member countries' water services in reference to service response time to sewerage problems;

(3) what EEC guidelines are laid out for member countries' water services in reference to sewage flooding;

(4) what guidelines are set out by the EEC Commission for its member nations' water services with reference to customer contact by telephone calls, correspondence and appointments.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I am not aware of any such guidelines being issued by the Commission of the European Communities.

Water Services

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what codes of practice are required of member states by the EEC Commission in their treatment and disposal of sewage;

(2) what codes of practice are required of member states by the EEC Commission in their handling of complaints and commendations on their water services;

(3) what standards are required by the EEC Commission of its member nations in their sewage works' control of odours and effluent discharges;

(4) what standards, in terms of summary details and measurements used, are required of member states by the EEC Commission for the availability of raw water in the supply system;

(5) what standards, in terms of summary details and measurements used, are required of member states by the EEC Commission for the water pressure of their water supplies;

(6) what standards, in terms of summary details and measurements used, are required of member states by the EEC Commission for the restoration of clean water after the interruption of that service.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I am not aware of any such requirement on member states from the Commission of the European Communities.

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is the process by which the standards and prices for water services are agreed in each member country of the EEC;

(2) which governmental bodies decide what the water standard will be for each member country of the EEC;

(3) which governmental body within each EEC member country determines water service prices; how these prices are constructed; and if he will give details of pricing policy and price construction on a member country basis.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: These are matters for individual EC member states.

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of (a) properties and (b) population is connected to a clean water supply in each member state of the EEC.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The available information is to be found in table 13c of "Waterfacts '88" published by the Water Authorities Association, a copy of which is in the Library.

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what, in terms of bandings and representative national averages, are the unit prices of (a) water, (b) sewerage and (c) trade effluence for all member states of the EEC.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: We do not hold such information.

Common Land Forums

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to implement the recommendations of the Common Land Forum; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave on 27 November 1989 to my hon. Friend the Member for Harborough (Sir J. Farr) at column 89.

Radon Gas

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures he intends to take in response to findings of significant increases in the levels of emission of naturally occurring radon gas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: There have been no findings of significant increases in the levels of emission of naturally occurring radon gas. I announced on 19 January that the Government accept the National Radiological Protection Board's advice on the risks to health associated with exposure to radon, and endorse its recommendation that action should be taken in houses where the radon concentration exceeds 200 bq/cu m. I have arranged for a copy of the National Radiological Protection Board's advice to be placed in the Library.

Politically Restricted Posts

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on what date the contracts of those local government officers regarded as politically restricted under section 2 of the Local Government and Housing Act will incorporate those restrictions prescribed by him under section 1(5) of the Act.

Mr. David Hunt [holding answer 22 January 1990]: The local authority associations will be consulted about the necessary regulations as soon as possible.

Property Services Agency

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he intends to keep open the option of compulsorily transferring the Property Services Agency's executive, administrative and support staff to the Government-owned company.

Mr Chope [pursuant to his reply, 22 January 1990, c. 582-83]: If PSA is incorporated as a Government-owned company it is intended that the staff in it will be transferred under the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981. The PSA will use its best endeavours, in advance of that incorporation, to find other posts within Government for staff who do not wish to transfer.

Dogs

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce legislation to ensure that dogs are taken into care prior to any court hearing when an allegation of cruelty is made against a dog owner.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I have been asked to reply.

The court has power to make such an order after an offender has been convicted of cruelty to an animal; but we have no plans to provide for the prior removal of the animal.

New Zealand Flatworms

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the prevalence of flatworms from New Zealand in soil; what assessment he has made of the potential damage to soil the presence of this worm presents; and what action he proposes to take to protect soil fertility.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 22 January 1990]: I have been asked to reply.

Agricultural Departments are aware of the press reports. These worms need damp conditions and are unlikely to survive in well drained agricultural land. They appear to be established in Northern Ireland and there have been sporadic sightings in Scotland over a considerable length of time. The latest recorded sighting in England was in 1965. The Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland is studying ways of controlling them.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Agriculture Council

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Brussels Agriculture Council held on 22 and 23 January.

Mr. Gummer: I represented the United Kingdom at this meeting together with my hon. Friend the Member for Skipton and Ripon (Mr. Curry), Parliamentary Secretary in this Department.

The Council had a first exchange of views on the Commission's proposals for 1990 farm prices. I emphasised the need for a settlement to redress the unfair burden which the green pound gap lays on the British farmer and to complete the dismantling by 1992 at the latest; to continue and consolidate the process of CAP reform and to take full account of the stabilisers fixed for certain products; to respect budgetary guidelines; to be consistent with the Community's GATT commitments; and urged that greater scope for market forces should be introduced into the CAP, including providing for a reduction in the degree of external protection. Like several other Ministers, I questioned the need for the new non-price support measures proposed by the Commission. The Council will next consider the proposals in more detail at its meeting in February.

On bovine spongiform encephalopathy (BSE), the Council considered a Commission proposal, which would have the effect of banning most United Kingdom exports of live cattle over six months old to other member states. I opposed on the ground that the scientific evidence showed clearly that such restrictions were unnecessary. No decision was reached, but the rules allow the Commission to adopt the proposal as it stands, which it is now expected to do with effect from 1 March. Of some 266,000 live cattle exported from the United Kingdom in 1988, 249,000 (94 per cent.) would still have been able to be exported had the present proposal then been in force. The most important effect of such a ban is likely to be on exports of breeding animals. However, the Commissioner confirmed that authoritative veterinary advice made it clear that there were no grounds for suspecting that beef produced in the United Kingdom posed any risk to public health. He stated that all member states should now act in accordance with this fact and that any measures interfering with trade in beef would be contrary to Community law. The German authorities will now be reflecting on this statement and I hope that they will soon remove their unjustified measures, which are hampering trade.

I urged the Commissioner to bring forward proposals for Community measures to deal with salmonella infection in poultry, so that all eggs produced in the Community can reach the same high health status as those produced in the United Kingdom. He stated that he would produce wide-ranging proposals as soon as possible.

The Council agreed a tranche of emergency food aid for Romania and agreed in principle that further tranches both to Romania and to Poland should be made when the necessary legal formalities have been completed.

Agricultural Products (Trade)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish details of the occasions in each of the last five years when article 36 of the European Communities treaty has been used to ban the trade in agricultural products between member states, indicating in each case the product, the stated reason for the ban and the countries involved.

Mr. Curry: The information requested by the hon. Member is not available. Article 36 of the treaty of Rome provides an exception (applicable in specified circumstances) to the provisions of articles 30-34 of the treaty. It is not in the nature of a statutory power. Consequently, a member state would not expressly cite article 36 in a legislative or administrative measure regulating trade with other member states, even if it considered that the measure was justified under the exception provided by that article.

Dumping Licences

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many licences for the dumping of materials at sea were issued by his Department in (a) 1988 and (b) 1989; what materials they were issued for; what quantities were involved; what areas of sea were used; and what organisations or companies received them.

Mr. Curry: Licences are issued in respect of England and Wales. Figures for 1989 are provisional. The information is as follows:

	1988		1989
	Licences Issued	Licensed Tonnage	Licences Issued	Licensed Tonnage
Dredged Spoil	133	61,644,923	141	66,663,150
Liquid Industrial Waste	19	311,411	16	292,968
Solid Industrial Waste	10	5,856,200	10	5,928,917
Sewage Sludge	16	7,503,580	15	8,321,305

Disposal sites are approved by the Ministry for each licence. Licensees are normally harbour and port authorities, dredging operators, operators of sewage treatment works and industrial companies producing waste or their agents.

Details of each licence are available on a public register held by the Ministry.

Animal Feed (Contamination)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list for each county in England and Wales the number of farms (a) currently under restrictions and (b) from which restrictions have been lifted following the recent contamination of animal feed.

Mr. Curry: A total of 1668 farms in England and Wales are currently under restriction. To date, 536 farms have been released from all restrictions. The breakdown by county is as follows:

County	Number of farms currently restricted	Number of farms released from all restrictions
Avon	82	48
Cornwall	246	84
Derbyshire	1	0
Devon	600	169
Dorset	104	10

In addition, all dairy farms were released from milk restrictions by 13 December last year and approximately 117,000 individual animals have so far been released under livestock clearance arrangements.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate of the total loss of milk production to date, by volume and value, arising from restrictions placed on producers following the recent contamination of animal feed.

Mr. Curry: I am not aware of any loss of production, as all the milk from farms under restriction was collected by the Milk Marketing Board. It will not be possible for the board to assess the extent of any loss in sales income until the milk powder and butter have been sold.

Cattle and Cattle Products (Export)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list by value and volume the exports of (a) live cattle and (b) cattle products to each importing country during (a) 1988 and (b) 1989.

Mr. Curry: The information requested is as follows:

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowance

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the value of hill livestock compensatory allowance expressed at 1986 prices.

Mr. Curry: The values of the rates of hill livestock compensatory allowance are as follows:

	Rate per head
	1989 (£)	Equivalent value at 1986 prices (£)
Severely Disadvantaged Area
Cows	54·50	46·33
Hardy breed ewes	6·75	5·74
Other ewes	4·50	3·83

Algae Poisoning

Mr. Latham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether his Department's veterinary service has in its departmental library a copy of the article on algae poisoning contained in the 1976 edition of "Black's Veterinary Dictionary"; and whether the veterinary service is familiar with its scientific findings.

Mr. Maclean: My Department's veterinary service has in its library a copy of the article on algae poisoning contained in the 1976 edition of "Black's Veterinary Dictionary." It is familiar with its scientific findings and also has knowledge of more recent articles on the subject.

Whitefish Fishery

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether his Department has given any north-east English fishing ports directions as to the number of days that boats engaged in the whitefish fishery should be laid up to ensure distribution of quotas.

Mr. Curry: We are consulting the industry about how to meet our commitment, agreed at the December 1989 Fisheries Council, to reduce United Kingdom fishing for North sea haddock in 1990 by 30 per cent. Our proposals include a number of ideas, among which is the possibility of reducing days at sea. We shall decide what measures to introduce in the light of the industry's views.

Lead Contamination

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to lift the lead contamination restrictions from the Sherrell herd of pedigree-accredited British Friesians at Great Prideaux, Membland, Newton Ferrers, Plymouth, Devon.

Mr. Curry: The Ministry has a scientific programme in hand to assess the rate of decay of lead in the tissues of cattle which received contaminated feed. In the light of this and continuing study of the impact of the contaminated feed, we are looking at all possible ways of easing the restrictions as soon as it is safe to do so without risk to public health or consumer confidence in meat.

Common Fisheries Policy

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how much cod from the United Kingdom cod quota was conceded to Denmark in the negotiations for allocation under the common fisheries policy;

(2) how much cod was traded off to Denmark in order to obtain agreement on United Kingdom cod and haddock quotas within the common fisheries policy.

Mr. Curry: As part of the final overall settlement which enabled the December Council of Fisheries Ministers to reach agreement, the United Kingdom, Germany and France transferred respectively 500 tonnes, 260 tonnes and 240 tonnes of their 1990 North sea cod quotas to Denmark. The outcome of the Council was very satisfactory to the United Kingdom and we secured all our major objectives, including increasing the Commission's proposed TACs for North sea cod and haddock, maintaining relative stability in the allocation of quotas at Greenland, securing recognition of our Hague Preference in relation to North sea haddock and flexibility to fish part of our western mackerel quota in the North sea, as well as the deletion of fishery management proposals that we did not like, maintenance of the minimum mesh size of 100 mm in the cod box in the German Bight, and the introduction of a seasonal control on the take of western horse mackerel.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has formally responded to the report of the Tyrrell committee on research into bovine spongiform encephalopathy.

Mr. Curry: My right hon. Friend's response to the report of the Tyrrell committee on research into BSE comprised his written answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Chelmsford (Mr. Burns) on 9 January (Official Report, column 572).

Equines (Slaughter)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many equines, in weight tonnage, were slaughtered for meat in each of the past three years; how much of this total was accounted for by Southall horse market; how many animals are estimated to have been involved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Records of the number of horses slaughtered for meat or sold for slaughter for meat are not available.

Single Market

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether all green currency systems and MCAs will be abolished before the single market is enacted on 1 January 1993.

Mr. Curry: The Council of Ministers and the Commission are agreed that monetary gaps, and therefore MCAs, should be removed by the end of 1992.

Food (Sell-by dates)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will introduce legislation prohibiting the sale of food products which have passed their use-by dates.

Mr. Maclean: I am presently considering this very matter.

Poultry

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received concerning the sale of thawed, previously frozen poultry, advertised as fresh; and whether he will introduce legislation to prohibit the practice.

Mr. Maclean: I have received no representations on this matter. The Food Labelling Regulations 1984 already require the name used for poultry meat which has been previously frozen and thawed to include or be accompanied by the words, "previously frozen—do not refreeze". It it also an offence under the Food Act 1984 to apply a false or misleading description to food.

Eggs

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has raised at the Council of Ministers the issue of a common health standard for egg production; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: My right hon. Friend the Minister raised this issue at the meeting of the Agriculture Council on 22-23 January and pressed for Community measures to control salmonella in poultry flocks to be introduced as quickly as possible.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he proposes to take to prevent the sale of imported eggs in cartons labelled "British Packed".

Mr. Curry: It is a requirement of the EC egg marketing standards regulations that producers and packers who put terms of origin on their egg packs should keep special records. These records have to be made available to the egg marketing inspectorate for any necessary checking and reconciliation.

Aflatoxins

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what system of regular testing for aflatoxins is undertaken on imported foodstuffs; and if he will make a statement on the findings of such tests during 1989.

Mr. Maclean: Port health authorities, which are responsible for controls on imported food under the Imported Food Regulations 1984 are fully aware of the possibilities of aflatoxin contamination and carry out such testing as they consider appropriate to ensure that food is fit to eat. Details are not held centrally. However, in the case of fig consignments, problems in 1988 led my Department to introduce special testing arrangements. Of the 99 containers of figs tested in 1989, seven of fig paste and three of whole dried figs were refused entry because samples contained more than the action level of 10 micrograms of aflatoxins per kilogram of figs.

Hill Farm Support

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to be able to announce the levels of hill farm support for the current year.

Mr. Curry: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas) on 23 January 1990 (Official Report, column 641).

Fish Stocks

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimates he has as to what the decline in fish stocks would have been if the recent quota reductions had not been introduced.

Mr. Curry [holding answer 19 January 1990]: The estimates available to Fisheries Ministers, principally from the Advisory Committee on Fisheries Management of the International Council for the Exploration of the Seas, on the impact of various possible catch levels on the status of stocks show that, for example, had fishing continued at the 1989 level for North sea cod and haddock, there would have been serious and further depletion of the spawning stock biomasses by nearly 40 per cent. for haddock and 15 per cent. for cod. Such serious further depletion of the stocks would have been very damaging to future prospects for fishing. The quotas agreed represented the highest level recommended by ACFM for haddock and a slightly more cautious approach for cod.

Sulphadimidine

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give the results for the tests he has carried out on the presence of sulphadimidine in different types of livestock carcases for 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The Department has an action level based on advice from the Veterinary Products Committee and endorsed by the Department of Health's Committee on Toxicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment. This level incorporates a very significant safety margin. Its purpose is to ensure that if monitored residue levels rise above it, we can take appropriate action even though there may well be no danger to human health. My Department carries out a regular residue sampling programme and in 1989 tests were carried out on 1,142 pig carcases in Great Britain. A total of 94 per cent. of these were below the action level and in the 6 per cent. which were not we carried out follow-up visits to all the farmers concerned to ensure that corrective measures were taken.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what analysis he carried out on livestock carcases for the presence of sulphadimidine; where the samples are taken; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Kidneys are taken from pigs at randomly selected slaughterhouses and tested for sulphadimidine as part of the residue sampling programme under EC directive 86/469. A thin layer chromatographic procedure is used to screen the samples at the central veterinary laboratory, Weybridge and the level of residues present is determined by high-performance liquid chromatography.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what safe level for the presence of sulphadimidine in tissues of meat products is prescribed by his Department; whether the level was recommended by an advisory committee; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Our approach is not to rely simply on a "safe level". Instead, we set a maximum residue level, which is very much more stringent. Exceeding this level would not normally represent any danger to human health, but it provides an immediate trigger for follow-up official action. The action level for sulphadimidine is 0·1mg/kg. This level was originally set by the Veterinary Products Committee and has twice been endorsed by the Department of Health's Committee on Toxicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment (COT). COT advised that this level offered a considerable safety margin for consumers of products from treated animals.

TRANSPORT

Dock Workers

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many former registered dock workers have been made redundant on a port-by-port basis since the abolition of the dock labour scheme; how much the Government have contributed to the redundancy payments; how many of these redundancies are because firms went into liquidation and how many through shedding of labour; how many stevedoring firms have gone into liquidation and where; what is his estimate of the cost of further redundancies on both these bases still to come; and if he will make a statement on the liquidations.

Mr. McLoughlin: Total Government expenditure to date on compensation under the Dock Work Act 1989 is £84·5 million, of which £27·7 million relates to employees of firms which became insolvent. I am not able to forecast the numbers of redundancies or any insolvencies during the remaining period of the compensation scheme, but over 90 per cent. of the claims so far received were in the first three months since the scheme started in July. The table shows redundancies in each port.

Road Maintenance

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what (a) body and (b) persons are responsible for listing, collating or co-ordinating the proposals and programmes of major road maintenance on main traffic routes in Greater London; what public notification is given of such works; and if he will consider publishing maps at monthly intervals, showing known works and temporary traffic diversions.

Mr. Atkins: The programming and publicity arrangements for road maintenance works are the responsibility of the highway authority concerned. In the case of trunk roads, the Department announces its annual programme of major schemes shortly before the start of each financial year and publishes maps indicating the location and likely timing of schemes. The Department provides details of planned major lane closures likely to involve delays to road users in fortnightly bulletins, which are circulated to the media and others.

Light Dues

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much money has been paid in light dues to the general lighthouse fund in each of the past four years, specifying the amounts paid by the different types of vessels.

Mr. McLoughlin: Light dues income to the general lighthouse fund was £42·34 million in 1985-86, £48·75 million in 1986-87, £56·14 million in 1987-88 and £50·2 million (provisional) in 1988-89. An analysis of dues collected by different types of vessel is only available for 1985-86 and 1988-89.

The analyses by vessel type are cash received figures uncorrected for repayments and other accounting adjustments, and therefore differ in total from the total income figures shown above taken from the GLF accounts.

Near Miss

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the near miss involving an RAF Tornado and flight BA 5950 on Friday 19 January.

Mr. McLoughlin: The incident took place at 13.30 hours, approximately five miles west of Barnard Castle, Yorkshire.

The BA5950 was en route from Heathrow to Newcastle at 12,500 ft and was receiving a radar advisory service from Pennine radar at Manchester. No avoiding action was taken and the Tornado aircraft passed 800 ft below the British Airways aircraft.

The circumstances surrounding the incident will be fully investigated by the independent joint air miss working group.

Viking Trader

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the outcome of his inspectors' visit to the Viking Trader at Fleetwood in the week beginning 15 January.

Mr. McLoughlin: A Department of Transport marine surveyor attended the Viking Trader on 19 January to investigate concerns that had been expressed about one of the securing pins holding the bow visor. Temporary securing arrangements were made to the surveyor's satisfaction, and the vessel allowed to sail. It is understood that the visor has now been welded permanently closed.

A1

Sir Neil Macfarlane: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport why the A1 southbound carriageway was closed on the afternoon of 22 January south of the A605 interchange; what advance warning was given to the radio networks and motorists; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The southbound carriageway was closed to deal with a chemical spillage from an overturned heavy goods vehicle. The closure lasted for three hours, during which a diversionary route was set up by the police. Local radio stations were informed.

Methanol

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his assessment of whether there will be a market for methanol as a fuel for cars in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 23 January 1990]: There is no natural market for methanol in the United Kingdom because of its high production costs and the lack of any manufacturing or distribution infrastructure. When substituted for petrol or diesel, methanol's attractive clean burning properties may be offset by problems such as:

the toxic effects of methanol itself; relatively high tailpipe emissions of formaldehyde;
its low energy density;
its corrosive properties; and its cold starting difficulties, unless conventional petrol is used as an additive.

These problems will need to be overcome before a significant market for methanol-fuelled vehicles is likely to develop.

Clean Fuel

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he proposes to introduce clean fuel technology in the United Kingdom similar to the legislation proposed by President Bush in the United States of America.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 23 January 1990]: The main thrust of President Bush's proposals is to secure further reductions in the emission of carbon monoxide, hydrocarbons and the oxides of nitrogen in those areas of the United States of America that are failing to meet air quality standards.

Regulation on vehicle emissions in the United Kingdom requires agreement in the European Community, and we have played an active role in developing new standards.

From 1992, three-way catalysts will have to be fitted to virtually all new cars.

ENVIRONMENT

Rent and Rate Arrears (Lambeth)

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has about the present level of (a) rent arrears and (b) rate arrears owed to Lambeth borough council.

Mr. Chope: The arrears of rent reported by Lambeth borough council on its housing subsidy claim return at the end of March 1989 were £17·5 million.

Local authorities report rate arrears to the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy and these are published in "Rate Collection Statistics". The latest reported figure for Lambeth shows rate arrears of £33·3 million at the end of March 1986.

Authorities have a statutory duty to make their accounts within six months and to publish them within nine months of the end of the financial year; Lambeth borough council has not yet published accounts for the years 1986-87 to 1988-89. For the latest position on arrears I would therefore refer the hon. Member to the chief executive.

Humberside

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to receive the report from the Local Government Boundary Commission for England and Wales regarding the possibility of abolishing the county of Humberside.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The commission was directed to carry out the further review of Humberside by the end of January 1990 if possible. Its programme of work is, however, for it to determine with the resources at its disposal, and I understand that the review is not expected to be completed before late spring. I regret that I cannot at present give a firmer forecast.

Dogs

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received concerning the registration of dogs during 1989.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I refer the hon. and learned Member to the answer I gave him on Wednesday 13 December 1989 at column 721.

London Authorities (Accounts)

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which London authorities in each of the last complete financial years have been unable to file unqualified audited accounts with his Department.

Mr. Chope: Local authorities are not required to file their statement of accounts with the Department.

Glis glis

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on how many occasions his Department has issued licences to trap glis glis during each of the last five years; under what circumstances and to whom such licences were issued; how many animals were taken; and what conditions he imposed on the handling and disposal of the trapped animals.

Mr. Trippier: Licences to trap glis glis have been issued on two occasions to the seven local authorities within whose boundaries the species occurs. The first licence ran from June 1987 to February 1988 and the current one from March 1989 to February 1991. These licences were issued for the purpose of preserving public health or public safety or preventing serious damage to property. A total of 102 animals were taken under the first licence; figures for the numbers taken in the first year of the second licence will be available shortly. The current licence is subject to specific conditions which were introduced following consultation with the Nature Conservancy Council. One of these obliges the licensee to send a written report to the Secretary of State detailing numbers of animals taken and killed, numbers taken and released elsewhere, if any, numbers taken and disposed of in another manner, to be specified; the type of trap or traps used; the particular circumstances that justified the taking of the animals.

Privately Rented Housing

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the Acts of Parliament since 1960 and their dates of implementation which relate to the operation of the privately rented housing market.

Mr. Chope: The information requested is given in the table. In some cases the commencement date refers only to the relevant part or parts of the Act.

Act	Commencement Date
Protection from Eviction Act 1964	17 December 1964
Rent Act 1965	8 December 1965
Rent Act 1968	8 June 1968 (consolidation Act)

Rent Act 1974	14 August 1974
Housing Rents & Subsidies Act 1975	11 March 1975

Rent (Amendment) Act 1985	23 May 1985
Housing Act 1988	15 January 1989

Local Government Finance

Mr. Haynes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how the standard spending assessment for Ashfield district council, Nottinghamshire, was arrived at.

Mr. Chope: The standard spending assessment for Ashfield district council was calculated according to formulae set out in the revenue support grant distribution report (England) approved by the House of Commons on 18 January.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice has been given to employers about their responsibility for collecting cash from poll tax defaulters.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 23 January 1990]: Attachment of earnings is one of the remedies available to a charging authority that has obtained a liability order from a magistrates court in respect of an individual who has failed to pay the community charge. The attachment order served on employers will contain all the information necessary for the correct deductions to be made. Community charge practice note No. 15 contains a model form of attachment order and explanatory notes which a local authority may use in correspondence with individual employers. Employers will be entitled to deduct £1 towards their administrative expenses each time an attachment is made.

County Councils

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to abolish county councils; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: None.

Rateable Values

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the rules by which valuation officers arrive at the rateable value of manufacturing, commercial and retail premises.

Mr. Chope: The principles of rating valuation, which govern assessments made by the valuation officer, are set out in schedule 6 to the Local Government Finance Act 1988, and are supplemented by a number of regulations and orders made under that schedule. Apart from these provisions, there are no rules for the assessment of any class of property.

OMNIPAC

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will reply to the letter from the Manufacturing, Science and Finance trade union of 12 September 1989 on the subject of OMNIPAC.

Mr. Trippier: I can find no trace of the letter. If the Manufacturing, Science and Finance trade union would be kind enough to send me a further copy of its letter, I will ensure that it receives a reply.

Dangerous Wastes

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to revise the controls on dangerous and difficult wastes.

Mr. Trippier: We have today published a consultation paper which reviews the operation of the Control of Pollution (Special Waste) Regulations 1980 (SI 1980, No. 1709) and sets out the changes that the Government propose to make to strengthen and improve the controls applied to dangerous and difficult waste.

The proposals made in the consultation paper are complementary to the measures on waste disposal included in the Environmental Protection Bill. However, they are designed to deal with those wastes that are particularly dangerous or difficult to dispose of and for which special provision is required. We have carried out a fundamental review of the 1980 regulations. The starting point of the review was the announcement in December 1985 of our conclusions on the report of the joint review committee. We have subsequently taken account of the proposal for a directive on hazardous waste which the European Commission published in July 1988 to supersede the existing directive on toxic and dangerous waste (78/319/EEC); complementary work on the definition of hazardous waste carried out by the OECD; and the definition of such waste contained in the Basel convention on the control of transboundary movements of hazardous wastes and their disposal which the Government signed on 6 October 1989.

The changes proposed in the consultation paper include:

(a) a new, broader definition of special waste. In future, special waste will be defined by reference to eleven characteristic properties and will explicitly include substances which present an immediate, delayed or accumulative risk to the environment as well as those harmful to human health. It will also include clinical waste;

(b) a requirement that before special waste is removed from the producer's premises there must be a contract which ensures its disposal at an appropriately licensed site;

(c) a requirement on disposal authorities to recover a reasonable charge for consignment note forms, including the cost to authorities of administering and monitoring the operation of the consignment note system;

(d) a prohibition on disposers accepting special waste unless they have contracted to do so and have a licence which authorises its disposal. On rejection of a consignment the carrier will be required to return it without undue delay to the person from whom he collected it;

(e) a prohibition on carriers mixing different consignments of special waste and from mixing special waste with non-special waste. Disposers will also be prohibited from mixing special waste with non-special waste except for the purpose of improving safety during disposal or ensuring that it is disposed of without causing danger to public health, serious detriment to local amenities or risk to the environment; and

(f) a requirement on disposal authorities to keep a public register of consignment notes for each licensed site in their area. Safeguards will be provided to prevent the disclosure of information which would prejudice to an unreasonable degree the producer's commercial interests.

The Government are committed to improving standards in waste management and disposal. These proposals are specifically designed to ensure that dangerous and difficult waste is managed and disposed of safely, without endangering human health or harming the environment. I am arranging for copies of the consultation paper to be placed in the Library of the House.

Sellafield

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on how many occasions during the past 10 years discharges (a) to the air and (b) to water from the Sellafield nuclear complex have been found to exceed maximum permissible limits; what is the frequency of official inspections; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: During the past 10 years there have been no occasions recorded when radioactive discharges to the air, or to water, from the Sellafield nuclear complex have been found to exceed maximum permissible limits. Other discharges to air are subject to the requirement that the best practicable means are used to prevent emissions and are not subject to maximum permissible limits. Other discharges to water are the responsibility of the National Rivers Authority. Currently HMIP inspectors spend an average of about five man days per month on the Sellafield site.

Turton Report

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will now declassify the Turton report on the Crown Suppliers; and if he will place a copy of the report in the Library;

(2) what criteria are used for classifying Government documents; and how these were applied in the case of the Turton report on the Crown Suppliers.

Mr. Chope: Government documents are given a security classification if unauthorised disclosure would damage the interests of the nation. The Cabinet Office review team's report of September 1985 on the future of the Crown Suppliers was not classified. It did, however, contain commercially sensitive information and other sensitive material given to the review team in confidence. The trade unions were consulted on the report, excluding only such sensitive material, in December 1985. It is not usual for officials' advice to Ministers to be disclosed. I, therefore, see no reason to change the decision taken by my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, Acton (Sir G. Young) not to publish it more widely; nor do I propose to place a copy in the Library.

Local Government Superannuation Schemes

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on what basis it is now proposed that the cost of pensions increases should be transferred to the local government superannuation funds in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My right hon. Friend the then Minister for Local Government announced on 24 April 1989 that he proposed, subject to consultation with the relevant local government interests, to transfer the cost of pensions increases to the local government superannuation funds as from 1 April 1990 on the basis that the present requirement that they should be in a position to meet all foreseeable future liabilities in respect of basic pensions only should be replaced by a provision that they should be able at any point in time to meet three quarters of a combined liability for basic pensions and pensions increases. He estimated that on that basis most local authorities in England and Wales would be able to reduce their overall annual expenditure on superannuation by about £6 per head of adult population.

Local government interests have made representations to the effect that it may be appropriate for the funds to be required to meet a rather higher proportion of their new combined liability at any one time. I have come to the conclusion, however, that a 75 per cent. rate of funding would be entirely prudential, as explained by my right hon. Friend, and would minimise the number of authorities who were required to increase expenditure on superannuation in consequence of the transfer of responsibility for payment of pensions increases to the funds.

I shall, however, keep the level of liabilities that funds are required to be in a position to meet under review, with a view to increasing it in future years as such increases become appropriate.

Bathing Water

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will announce the results of the survey of bathing water quality made in 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The results for the survey carried out during the 1989 bathing season showed that 76 per cent. of the 401 identified bathing waters in England and Wales met the mandatory coliform bacteria standards of the EC bathing water directive. This compares with 66 per cent. of the 364 identified bathing waters in 1988.

These figures are encouraging, though some of the improvement is no doubt attributable to the good weather last year. Nevertheless, the results show that we are continuing to make good progress in cleaning up our bathing waters. We have already announced a £1·4 billion capital investment programme over the next 10 years as a result of which we expect over 95 per cent. of our bathing waters to meet the directive's standards by the mid-1990s and to achieve full compliance within 10 years.

The 1989 results for England and Wales are set out in the table in summary form. I shall arrange for a more detailed summary of the results to be placed in the Library, and we shall also be sending the results to the Commission of the European Communities.

Landfill Sites

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, if he will give the location of the landfill sites officially described as poor by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution in its evidence to the House of Commons Environment Select Committee inquiry into toxic waste, HC22 1988-89.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 15 January 1990]: The responsibility for enforcing landfill site licences rests with the waste disposal authority. The HMIP monitors the performance of waste disposal authorities, which includes visiting a selection of sites. In view of the historical nature of much of the information, it would be neither fair nor helpful to give the locations of those previously listed as "poor".

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Student Loans

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent representations he has received from banks on the subject of student loans.

Mr. Jackson: None.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much the establishment of the headquarters of the Student Loans Company in Glasgow will cost the Government.

Mr. Jackson: The terms of the lease required by the Student Loans Company are commercially confidential. If asked to reveal the terms in confidence by the National Audit Office or the Public Accounts Committee, we shall of course do so. The rent payable is within the terms of the departmental minute laid before the House on 22 November.

Teacher Training Places

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many teacher training places there will be this autumn; how many applicants there are so far; and what were the comparable figures in previous years.

Mr. Alan Howarth: A total of 23,244 places have been allocated to teacher training institutions in England and Wales for 1990. Equivalent target intake allocations for 1986 to 1989 were 18,613, 19,637, 20,509 and 21,187 respectively.

Data on applications are collected by the Central Register and Clearing House Ltd. and 40,325 applications for teaching places in 1990 were recorded at mid-January. Figures for 1986 to 1989 are not comparable with current figures. They no longer include applications to 19 institutions that now recruit through UCCA. The basis for the collection of data has also changed. However, the figures at mid-January for 1986 to 1989 were 20,839, 22,019, 20,532 and 36,314 respectively.

Teachers' Pay

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to change the principles upon which teachers are remunerated; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: No.

Homosexuality

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the Government's current policy with regard to teaching about homosexuality in sex education lessons in schools.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Guidance on teaching about homosexuality in maintained schools in England is provided in the Department's circular 11/87 which was issued to all such schools in England in September 1987. A copy of the circular is in the Library.

School Budgets

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how long schools will have to adapt to their new budgets under the LMS system.

Mrs. Rumbold: Circular 7/88 on LMS provides for the budgets of county and voluntary schools generally to be determined entirely by their LEA's formula by 1 April 1994 where schemes will have been introduced on 1 April 1990. LEAs may propose a longer transitional period for individual schools with particularly high staff costs.

Student Grants

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many OECD member countries provide full cost-of-living student grants and free tuition to all first degree students.

Mr. Jackson: None. The analysis in annex C of the White Paper "Top-up Loans for Students" showed that, by international standards, the British system is generous in the level of the grant after means-testing, in the proportion of higher education students provided for, and in including free tuition. No other country attempts to provide support at this level to such a high proportion of these students.

National Curriculum

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he proposes to take to deal with concern about key stage 4 of the national curriculum.

Mr. MacGregor: I am today inviting the National Curriculum Council and the School Examinations and Assessment Council to undertake a number of tasks designed to help secondary schools accommodate the curricular needs of pupils in the last two years of compulsory education. I am also today setting out in a speech to the Society of Education Officers the flexibility which will be available to schools in planning the curriculum in these years. A copy of the speech has been placed in the Library and the texts of the letters are as follows:

Duncan G. Graham, Esq. CBE
Chairman and Chief Executive
National Curriculum Council
15-17 New Street
York YO1 2RA

25 January 1990

Dear Duncan,

In my speech today to the Society of Education Officers I am making a statement of general policy on Key Stage 4 in the National Curriculum. I enclose a copy of the speech. I recognise that the education service has had a number of anxieties about Key Stage 4 which need to be addressed now. What I have to say benefits from useful advice which I have received from you and your colleagues and from the School Examination and Assessment Council.

Much of the planning for Key Stage 4 needs to be carried out by individual schools, using the various flexibilities that I am describing in my speech. But there is also preparatory work to be done at the centre, and I hereby invite NCC to undertake some of that work. I am writing similarly to Philip Halsey about the work that I want SEAC to undertake, and I expect your two Councils to keep in touch with each other and with my officials in carrying out the work.

The tasks that I wish NCC to undertake are threefold. First, I believe that it would be of value to schools to have illustrations of curriculum planning for Key Stage 4. Schools must make their own planning decisions, but it would help them to see various possibilities illustrated in a booklet. It would be especially valuable to give examples of planning based on the thinking of actual schools. I ask NCC to work on a draft booklet with the aim that it should be published in the Summer of this year.

The second task concerns the curriculum for pupils who will not take a full GCSE course in non-core foundation subjects of the National Curriculum. I suggested in my response to the interim report of the Geography Working Group that the Group might consider how schools might be enabled to select a range of content, still within the statutory requirements, from the full curriculum for Key Stage 4, so as to preserve the depth, vigour and challenge of geographical studies up to age 16. I now confirm my view that schools should be able to select from a range of options for pupils who do not take a full GCSE course in single National Curriculum subjects, and that there should be scope for schools to combine these options, or parts of them, with each other or with subjects outside the National Curriculum to form a GCSE course.

The draft attainment targets and programmes of study for technology are, I believe, flexible enough to accommodate a range of courses at Key Stage 4 and to be combined with other subjects inside and outside the National Curriculum for GCSE purposes. I ask NCC to give attention to these possibilities in writing non-statutory guidance for technology. For all future foundation subjects, I shall ask NCC to give particular attention during the statutory consultation process to the arrangements for those not taking a full GCSE course in the subject at Key Stage 4.

You will see from my letter to Philip Halsey that I expect Examining Groups to develop proposals for combined GCSEs and submit them to SEAC; and that SEAC will need to work out procedures to ensure that such GCSEs are rigorous and conform to the requirements of the National Curriculum where appropriate. I should be glad to know, however, if you feel NCC can make any further contribution in this area in addition to relevant material in non-statutory guidance on particular subjects.

I am considering the arrangements that might be made to allow a small number of pupils, exceptionally, to drop certain subjects before the end of Key Stage 4. I do not intend, however, that any pupils shall be able to drop English, maths, science, technology, and a modern foreign language.

Arrangements will be needed for pupils who obtain a good GCSE in one or more of these subjects before the end of Year 11, or who have already reached level 10, and remain in Key Stage 4. You have given me some preliminary thoughts on this in relation to the core subjects, but you then noted that more work needed to be done. I now ask NCC, in consultation with SEAC, to advise me on the curricular options and associated examination arrangemens that should be available for such pupils. I would like this advice by September of this year. For modern foreign languages I expect advice in the first place from the Working Group which is now considering attainment targets and programmes of study for modern languages in the National Curriculum.

I am copying this letter to Philip Halsey at SEAC and Hywel Evans at the Curriculum Council for Wales.

Yours sincerely,
John MacGregor

Philip Halsey Esq. CB LVO
Chairman and Chief Executive
School Examinations and Assessment Council
45 Notting Hill Gate
London W11 3JB 25 January 1990

Dear Philip,

In my speech today to the Society of Education Officers I am making a statement of general policy on Key Stage 4 in the National Curriculum. I enclose a copy of the speech. I recognise that the education service has had a number of anxieties about Key Stage 4 which need to be addressed now. What I have to say benefits from useful advice which I have received from you and your colleagues and from NCC.

Much of the planning for Key Stage 4 needs to be carried out by individual schools, using the various flexibilities that I am describing in my speech. But there is also preparatory work to be done at the centre, and I hereby invite SEAC to undertake some of that work. I am writing similarly to Duncan Graham about the work that I want NCC to undertake, and I expect your two Councils to keep in close touch with each other and with my officials in carrying out the work.

I am reaffirming today that there should be a single framework of assessment with 10 levels of achievement on the National Curriculum scale for all pupils; and that at the end of Key stage 4 the GCSE will be the main form of assessment. SEAC already have work in train to develop revised GCSE National Criteria embodying the statutory attainment targets and programmes of study for the core subjects; and new GCSEs will similarly need to be developed against revised National Criteria for each of the other foundation subjects. I would hope that the revised assessment instruments thus developed could also be used to assess attainment against the National Curriculum levels within a narrower range of knowledge, skills and understanding than required to obtain a full GCSE.

But I am also concerned that there should be flexibility in the development of GCSEs that combine parts of two, or conceivably more, foundation subjects, or that combine a foundation subject with a subject outside the National Curriculum. It will be for Examining Groups, with LEAs and schools, to develop proposals for such GCSEs and submit them to SEAC. But I would like to be assured that there will be machinery in place to scrutinise such proposals carefully, and to consider their curricular implications. Such GCSEs will need to be rigorous and to confirm where appropriate to the requirements of the National Curriculum. I ask SEAC to work out procedures for their consideration, in consultation with NCC, and to report to me by the end of this year.

I am also declaring today that I expect the vocational examining bodies to be able to submit for approval qualifications covering parts of the National Curriculum. I ask SEAC to work out principles for the guidance of the vocational examining bodies, consulting NCC, and to report to me on this also by the end of the year.

I am copying this letter to Duncan Graham.

Yours sincerely,
John MacGregor

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales will be writing to the School Examinations and Assessment Council and the Curriculum Council for Wales shortly about the involvement of the CCW in this work.

Civil Plutonium

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy, Official Report, 11 January, column 693, if the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament document (CND-5), was amongst the deemed relevant information to which he refers.

Mr. Baldry: I have been asked to reply.

My Department is well aware of the views expressed in CND-5. The creation of a civil plutonium safeguards agency would merely duplicate the existing arrangements which are working satisfactorily.

Incentive Allowances

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Woolwich of 20 December, Official Report, column 253, in March 1988 and March 1989 how many teachers were employed by each local authority in England; how many teachers were in receipt of an incentive allowance for each local authority in England; what percentage this was of the total employed by each local authority; and how many teachers in receipt of an incentive allowance in each local authority in England held allowances that were (a) incentive A, (b) incentive B, (c) incentive C, (d) incentive D and (e) incentive E.

Mrs. Rumbold [holding answer 16 January 1990]: The table shows for each LEA in England for which figures are available the numbers and percentages of full-time main scale teachers in maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools (MNPS) who held an incentive allowance in March 1988. There are 17 authorities from whom the March 1988 return has not yet been received or whose return has not been fully processed. The England total includes an overall estimated component for the missing authorities. Similar figures are not yet available for March 1989.

Surplus School Places

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will update the table on surplus school places given in the answer to the hon. Member for Blackburn, Official Report, 16 February 1989, column 319, with the latest available information for 1988-89, and any estimate for 1989-90.

Mr. MacGregor [holding answer 23 January 1990]: I presume that the hon. Member should have referred to column 315, rather than column 319. The information for 1988-89 is given in the table. Figures from local education authorities of the number of surplus places which they removed in 1989-90 are not yet available.

Year	The number of surplus school places removed 000s (a)	The Public Expenditure White Paper target 000s (b)	Per cent. a/b
1988-89	118	137	86

The figure in column (a) is a grossed up total based on returns from 86 local education authorities.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

EC Directives

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what representations he has made to the European Commission over the failure of France to implement (a) regulation 4056/86 relating to competition rules to maritime transport and (b) regulation 3975/87 relating to competition rules to air transport;

(2) what representations he has made to the European Commission over the failure of France to implement directive 88/593 relating to jams;

(3) what representations he has made to the European Commission over the failure of France to implement directive 85/573 relating to coffee and chicory extracts;

(4) what representations he has made to the European Commission over the failure of France to implement (a) directive 88/380 relating to the certification of seeds and (b) directive 88/572 which amends directive 77/93 relating to plant health;

(5) what representations he has made to the European Commission over the failure of France to implement directive 89/105 relating to price transparency in the prices of medicines and social security refunds;

(6) what representations he has made to the European Commission over the failure of France to implement (a) directive 85/323 and (b) directive 85/324 on microbiological controls;

(7) what representations he has made to the European Commission over the failure of France to implement directive 86/197 relating to the obligation to indicate ingredients and alcoholic strengths;

(8) what representations he has made to the European Commission over the failure of France to implement directive 86/102 relating to emulsifiers (modification);

(9) what representations he has made to the European Commission over the failure of France to implement directive 88/320 relating to good laboratory practices and the non-clinical testing of chemicals.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 18 January 1990]: My Department has made no specific representations about failure by the French authorities to implement the directives mentioned. However, if my hon. Friend is aware of any specific difficulties caused for United Kingdom business we would of course be willing to take this up with the Commission or bilaterally with the French authorities. Responsibility for ensuring member states' compliance with EC directives rests with the Commission which can take a member state to the European Court of Justice for failure to comply with EC legislation.

The United Kingdom has, however, led the way in bringing the issue of implementation to the fore at political level in Brussels, and through our bilateral contacts with other member states. This has in itself put pressure on Governments with a record less good than ours.

Of the measures mentioned I should point out that two directives 85/323 and 85/324 cannot be implemented until further decisions are taken in Brussels. The United Kingdom has not implemented these directives. A further two directives 89/105 and 89/593 were not required to be implemented in member states at the time the Commission produced its latest report on implementation of single market measures.

Postage Stamps

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) how many complimentary presentation packs of new definitive stamps were sent to hon. Members of Parliament in (a) 1989, (b) 1988 and (c) 1987; and what was the cost to the Post Office;

(2) what is the cost to the Post Office of sending each hon. Member of Parliament a complimentary presentation pack of new definitive stamps to celebrate the 150th anniversary of the introduction of the penny post.

Mr. Forth: This is an operational matter for the Post Office and I am asking the chairman to write to my hon. Friend about it.

Microwave Television Channels

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry following his Department's announcement of 23 August on choice of frequency for microwave television channels what progress has been made in exploring the feasibility of establishing networks at 40 GHz; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: As indicated in the announcement on 23 August, technology to operate microwave television delivery services at 40 GHz exists, but development is needed to make equipment generally available. Consultations showed that a number of organisations are interested in developing equipment, and the firm decision to make frequencies available at 40 GHz should enable them to make decisions about the development and production of equipment in time for the new local delivery services proposed in the Broadcasting Bill. It will be for the Independent Television Commission to specify the areas to be served and to oversee the planning of the services.

Merchant Shipbuilding

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow on 17 January, Official Report, column 315, he will list the types and tonnages of the merchant vessels ordered and the shipyards which were awarded these orders.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Following is the information:

Missile Technology Control Regime

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to the answer of 15 January, Official Report, column 56, how many export licence applications have been refused by his Department as a result of the United Kingdom's commitments under the missile technology control regime; and if he will list them.

Mr. Redwood: This information is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Bicycles

Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what assessment he has made of the appropriateness of standard EN71 on bicycle safety (a) as a toy safety standard for cycles up to 435 mm maximum seat height, and (b) for bicycles of 635 mm used by older young persons;

(2) what assessment he has made of the appropriateness of standards EN71 and BS 5665 taken together (a) for bicycles up to 435 mm and used by children up to four years of age and (b) for cycles up to a maximum seat height of 635 mm used by older children; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what consideration he has given in considering the safety of bicycles between 435 mm and 635 mm maximum seat height, to the advice of the independent testing authority that compliance with ISO 8098 is an adequate and equivalent test to the proposals effected on 1 January 1990;

(4) what representations he has received from the cycle industry about the effect of standard EN71 on safety, when applied (a) to cycles up to 435 mm and (b) to those up to 635 mm; and if he will temporarily suspend the application of directive EN71.

Mr. Forth: The Toys (Safety) Regulations 1989 came into force on 1 January 1990 and implement the toy safety directive which is a Community obligation. A manufacturer, importer or retailer is under an obligation to supply toys which conform to the essential safety requirements. Compliance and CE marking may be achieved by self-certification when the toy is manufactured in accordance with European harmonised standards (EN 71). Alternatively, when toys do not conform in whole or in part to harmonised standards, type approval may be sought from an approved body. The approved body is concerned to establish that the model submitted for approval meets the essential safety requirements and in so doing may, if the harmonised standard is inappropriate, have regard to other appropriate tests.

Representations have been made by the cycle industry about the level of safety and appropriateness of EN71 (BS 5665). I am concerned by the suggestions that the tests specified in the European harmonised standard may not provide the level of safety required by the essential safety requirements. The United Kingdom delegation to the European committee for standardisation (CEN) sought to have the braking test specified in the International Standard Organisation's standard 8098 incorporated into the harmonised standards but there was insufficient support for this from other CEN delegates. The matter is being urgently considered. If the Department concludes that any harmonised standard does not meet the essential requirements the procedure is for the Government to refer the matter to the standing committee set up under the directive for reconsideration. If appropriate we will proceed accordingly. In the meantime my officials have been in touch with the manufacturers concerned and advised them about the type approval means of compliance.

Soil Scientists

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what are the reasons for the withdrawal of funding to soil scientists involved with the International Standards Organisation Committee on Soil Quality and Pollution; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 24 January 1990]: The assisted international travel scheme provides assistance towards the travel costs of delegation leaders and principal experts attending standards meetings overseas. The intention is to help individuals, representatives and employees of organisations which are not directly or indirectly public funded. The Government provide a substantial allocation of funds, but it would not be appropriate to accept an open-ended commitment. The Department has therefore given BSI, which administers the scheme, a priority ranking for claims on those funds which gives top priority to meetings of European standards bodies engaged on work to complete the single market.

THE ARTS

British Library

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether, pending the sale of the Store street site, Her Majesty's Government will advance funds to the British Library to enable the safekeeping of the oriental collections in their present accommodation until such time as the St. Pancras building is ready to house them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: The British Library board has already decided in principle to take advantage of the opportunity to unite the oriental collections and the India Office library and records before the St. Pancras building is completed. This is expected to bring benefits to both management and readers. I am confident that the British Library will continue to exercise a proper concern for the safekeeping of its collections and the needs of readers.

Sir Douglas Bader (Log Book)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister for the Arts if his Department has any plans to bid for the log book of Sir Douglas Bader at the forthcoming auction.

Mr. Luce: The Office of Arts and Libraries does not bid for any items at public auction. Decisions on bidding for Sir Douglas Bader's log book are a matter for the trustees of the individual museums.

National Railway Museum

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Minister for the Arts, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside of 16 January, Official Report, columns 210-11, what approaches were made for funding from his Department to assist with the replacement of the roof of the national railway museum at York; what response he made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 24 January 1990]: The national museums and galleries for which I am responsible submit a corporate plan to my office every year detailing their priority concerns and their bids for funding. As a result of the priorities put forward in the science museum's 1988 corporate plan, I announced in November 1988 that the provision for the building programme funds at the science museum included additional allocations of £1 million in both 1989-90 and 1990-91 towards the cost of reroofing the national railway museum.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Investment

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer further to his reply dated 4 December concerning investment in manufacturing industry, Official Report, column 19, what is the corresponding increase in the motor vehicles, mechanical engineering, textile and clothing industries, respectively; and if he will publish a table showing the increase in investment in those industries between 1973 and 1988 at constant prices together with the increase in output, exports and imports.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Figures comparable to those provided in my earlier reply are not available at this level of industry detail. Estimates of exports and imports at constant prices had not been produced prior to 1978, and reliable investment figures by industry are not yet available for 1988. The information available is:

	Percentage change in
	Investment	Output
	1973-1987	1973-1987	1973-1988
Mechanical engineering	−22	−22	−15
Motor vehicles	+10	−34	−24
Textiles, leather, footwear and clothing	−33	−18	−19

Note: The industries are defined in terms of the Standard Industrial Classification (Revised 1980) as follows:
Mechanical engineering: Class 32
Motor vehicles: Class 35
Textiles, leather, footwear and clothing: Classes 43-45

Taxation

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many representations he has received, and from whom, concerning the taxation of company cars; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has received a number of representations concerning the taxation of company cars.

British Rail

Mr. Snape: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much of British Rail's investment programme of £3·75 billion over the next three years will be financed from (a) their own internally generated cash flow, (b) PSO level crossing and section 20 grants and (c) external finance, excluding PSO, level crossing and section 20 grants.

Mr. Norman Lamont: British Rail's investment programme of £3·75 billion over the next three years will be financed from its own internally generated cash flow, which includes payments from passenger transport executives under section 20 of the Transport Act 1968 in respect of services operated by British Rail in metropolitan areas, and from external finance. The Government's public expenditure plans for the next three years provide for a total of £2·2 billion of external finance of which grants (PSO and level crossing) account for £1·25 billion.

Carbon Tax

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the effect of the introduction of a carbon tax on the rate of inflation.

Mr. Ryder: It has not been the practice to publish estimates of the economic effects of hypothetical new taxes.

Central Office of Information

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he is proposing any change to the Central Office of Information cash limit and running costs limit for 1989-90; and whether he is proposing any changes to the services provided on an allied basis by the Central Office of Information for 1989-90.

Mr. Ryder: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the cash limit for Class XIX, Vote 1 will be increased by £50,000, from £1,273,000 to £1,323,000. The additional expenditure is for a new service, the media advisory service and will be charged to the reserve. At the same time the running costs limit will be reduced by £779,000 from £21,850,000 to £21,071,000 in line with the latest forecast of expenditure on repayment services.

Central Statistical Office

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he is proposing any change to the Central Statistical Office's cash limit or running costs limit for 1989-90.

Mr. Lilley: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the cash limit for Class XIX, Vote 18, will be increased by £508,000 from £15,342,000 to £15,850,000 and the running cost limit by £413,000, from £11,967,000 to £12,380,000. Part of the increase reflects a further transfer of provision from the Department of Trade and Industry following the establishment of the Central Statistical Office as a separate Department: a corresponding reduction will be included in a Supplementary Estimate for the Department of Trade and Industry (Class V, Vote 3). In addition, the increase reflects a transfer of provision from the Cabinet Office; Office of the Minister for the Civil Service (Class XX, Vote 1) of £5,000 in respect of the challenge funding scheme for senior management development training. Finally, the remainder reflects provision to meet some of the additional administrative expenditure which arises for the Central Statistical Office as a separate Department, which will be charged to the reserve.

Media (Wartime Advisory Service)

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been made regarding the Government's response, Cmnd. 9499, to the proposal made in the study group chaired by Sir Hugh Beach, Cmnd. 9112, that an advisory service for the media be established to operate during a time of tension or war.

Mr. Ryder: After consultations involving Government Departments, regional authorities and the national and regional media a report on the feasibility of a media advisory service (MAS) was produced last year. The Government have accepted the main conclusion that the basis for a MAS to operate during a time of tension or war should be established. Such a MAS has now been formed in the Central Office of Information under Mr. Peter Brazier, a COI group director. It is expected to cost around £150,000 a year.

Capital Gains

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he has any proposals to amend the definition of a group of companies for capital gains purposes.

Mr. Lilley: We are proposing to include one technical change to the capital gains definition of a group in the 1990 Finance Bill. This is to prevent a company being treated as leaving a group when arrangements are entered into under which rights to profits or assets may be reduced at a future date. We propose that in general the change should be effective from Budget day 1989, when the present definition of a group took effect. But groups will be able to elect for the change to apply only from midnight tonight.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

China

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the refusal of the Consul-General (ref: VC/C/27035/89) in Bejing, China, to allow Peng Ling to join her British husband Peter Flak in Britain.

Mr. Sainsbury: Peng Ling has not applied for a visa to come to the United Kingdom. She has been refused a visa by the Hong Kong authorities to join her British husband in Hong Kong, where her husband is understood to be working until 1991.

Under an agreement between the Hong Kong Government and the Chinese authorities residents in China who wish to join spouses in Hong Kong can apply for a one-way permit from the Chinese authorities.

Argentina

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what new regulations there are on the exclusion zones to Argentine shipping and aircraft figures around the Falkland Islands.

Mr. Sainsbury: In the joint statement issued after the Anglo-Argentine talks in Madrid last October, a copy of which, as I stated in my reply of 20 October to my right hon. Friend, the Member for Guildford (Mr. Howell), was placed in the Library of the House, it was announced that two small changes to the Falkland Islands protection zone would be made:

(a) the limits of the protection zone would be aligned with that of the Falkland Islands Interim Conservation and Management Zone, reducing its size slightly in the South West corner;

(b) the requirement that Argentine merchant shipping should not enter the protection zone without prior agreement would be dispensed with.

These changes subsequently came into effect on 1 December and 1 January respectively.

Palestine Liberation Organisation

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last had communications with members of the Palestine Liberation Organisation; what was discussed; and what decisions were made.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs renewed his acquaintance with Mr. Qaddumi in Paris on 22 December and I met Bassam Abu Sharif on 8 January, as part of our continuing dialogue with the PLO on the prospects for peace in the middle east.

Middle East

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to offer the good offices of Her Majesty's Government for talks, in London between members of the Israeli Government and members of the Palestine Liberation Organisation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We support the expansion of contacts between Israelis and Palestinians, including the PLO. The present efforts to arrange talks between the Israeli Government and representative Palestinians in Cairo offer the best way forward.

Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy, Official Report, 12 January, column 796, on the non-proliferation treaty, what response he has made to the proposal by Dr. Lowry to which his reply makes reference.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Department replied that it was not United Kingdom or NATO strategy to make premature reductions in defence commitments. There would therefore be no immediate diversion of manpower into tackling the problems of pollution.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information his Department has concerning the policy of (a) the Republic of South Africa and (b) Namibia towards the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Waldegrave: The South African Government have expressed interest in acceding to the nuclear non-proliferation treaty (NPT) and we have made it clear that we would welcome a decision on their part to do so. With regard to the second part of the question, only independent states may accede to the treaty and it will be for Namibia, once independent, to decide its policy on this matter.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the Government's policy towards the imposition of sanctions upon countries which transgress the terms and conditions of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Waldegrave: We adhere strictly to our own obligation under the nuclear non-proliferation treaty not in any way to assist, encourage or induce any non-nuclear weapon state to manufacture or otherwise acquire nuclear weapons or other nuclear explosive devices.

British Diplomats

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to increase the number of British ambassadors and high commissioners who are (a) black and (b) Asian.

Mr. Sainsbury: FCO recruitment literature makes clear that the FCO is an equal opportunities employer.

Toxic Waste

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consultation his Department has had with the Norwegian Government about the dumping of toxic industrial waste in the North sea.

Mr. Waldegrave: None. The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food is in touch with the Norwegian and other interested Governments through the Oslo commission. The waste which the United Kingdom permits to be dumped in the North sea is not toxic.

Daya Bay Power Plant

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress, and any problems encountered, in the construction of the two units for the Daya Bay nuclear power plant joint venture with the Guangdong Power Company; when Daya Bay is expected to be commissioned and at what cost in (a) Hong Kong dollars and (b) pounds sterling; and what safety oversight role is being carried out by the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority.

Mr. Maude: Construction of the Daya Bay plant is proceeding according to schedule and in compliance with the quality requirements. Units I and II of the plant are scheduled to be commissioned by October 1992 and July 1993 respectively. The project costs are not expected to exceed the budget of HK$28·7 billion or £2·7 billion. As far as we are aware the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority is not carrying out any safety oversight role in connection with the project.

Tibet

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have made, and intend to make, to the Government of China to end the state of martial law in Lhasa.

Mr. Maude: The Chinese Government are well aware of our hope that, following the lifting of martial law in Peking, they will take further steps to strengthen the protection of human rights in China, including the lifting of martial law in Lhasa. Together with our European Community partners, we intend to register our concerns about human rights in China, including Tibet, in the forthcoming meeting of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his Department's assessment as to whether (a) Argentina, (b) Brazil, (c) Iraq, (d) Israel, (e) Iran, (f) India, (g) Pakistan, (h) North Korea and (i) the Republic of South Africa have developed the capability to build and deliver nuclear weapons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: Iraq and Iran are both states party to the nuclear non-proliferation treaty (NPT) and, as such, have undertaken not to develop a nuclear weapons capability. North Korea, although not recognised as a state by Her Majesty's Government, is also a party to the NPT. South Africa has expressed interest in adhering to the NPT, and has held talks with the depositary powers. Argentina and Brazil have both signed the treaty of Tlatelolco, which bans nuclear weapons in Latin America. All of the countries listed in the question have always declared that their nuclear activities are exclusively for peaceful purposes. We take every suitable opportunity to stress the importance of the international non-proliferation regime and of securing universal adherence to the NPT.

East Timor

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the position of Her Majesty's Government at the forthcoming United Nations Human Rights Commission on the question of East Timor and abuse of human rights.

Mr. Sainsbury: East Timor is not, at present, on the agenda for the forthcoming UNCHR session. We support the role of the UN Secretary-General in encouraging a bilateral settlement between Indonesia and Portugal which fully takes into account the interests of the people of East Timor. We should also examine carefully any report of human rights abuses.

Ivory

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has made an assessment of the effect of his decision to release for sale ivory stocks in Hong Kong on the population of African elephants.

Mr. Maude: Hong Kong is committed to comply in full with the CITES ban. The United Kingdom reservation is designed to give the territory a reasonable period in which to adjust to this. In the meantime, Hong Kong has imposed a total ban on exports to all CITES parties and on imports, which will ensure that there is no loophole for the entry of illegal ivory onto the market. There should, therefore, be no adverse consequences for the African elephant.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Sentencing

146. Mr. Stanbrook: To ask the Attorney-General how many cases of alleged over-lenient sentencing have been referred to him under the provisions of the Criminal Justice Act 1988; and how many sentences have been revised upwards in consequence.

The Attorney-General: Sixty-seven cases of alleged unduly lenient sentencing have been referred to me. I have applied for leave to refer the sentencing in nine cases to the Court of Appeal. Leave has been granted in seven such cases and sentences have been increased in six of the cases. I have withdrawn two cases in the light of later information. I have referred one case to the Court of Appeal in Northern Ireland: the sentence in that case was also increased.

Duty Solicitors

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on the operation of the duty solicitor scheme.

The Attorney-General: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 7 December 1989, Official Report, column 317. I have nothing further to add.

Civil Justice Review

Mr. Soley: To ask the Attorney-General when the Government will publish their consultation paper on the housing aspects of the civil justice review.

The Attorney-General: The civil justice review consultation paper on housing cases was published in 1987. Following the publication of the civil justice review's final report (Cm. 394) in June 1988 the Lord Chancellor said that there would be further consultation with court users and others with an interest in housing matters before changes were made to the procedures for handling housing cases in the county courts. He expects the consultation to be completed before the end of this year.

Mr. Kevin Taylor

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Attorney-General whether he will consult the Director of Public Prosecutions with a view to him asking a police force, other than that of Greater Manchester, to investigate what transpired necessitating the discontinuance of the Taylor prosecution and, in particular, the implications arising from the application to the judge which was wrongly based.

The Attorney-General: The Director of Public Prosecutions has referred to the chief constable of Greater Manchester certain aspects of evidence given by police witnesses for the prosecution, for the chief constable to consider whether a police investigation should be instituted. The decision whether there should be such an investigation (and, if so, by whom) is one for the chief constable.

EMPLOYMENT

Ko Hsuan School, Chawleigh

145. Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what work permits have been issued to teachers and staff at the Ko Hsuan School at Chawleigh in North Devon; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply of Thursday 11 January 1990, Official Report, column 702.

Ethnic Background Data

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will give the ethnic background data for YTS trainees, for the latest available date, separately for each youth training scheme operating in (a) each of the training agency areas of Greater London, (b) Manchester, (c) Birmingham and Solihull and (d) Coventry and Warwickshire;

(2) if he will give the ethnic background data for YTS trainees, for the latest available date, separately for each youth training scheme operated through the YTS large companies unit.

Mr. Nicholls: Because of the length of the replies, I will write to the hon. Member with the available information, copies of which have been placed in the Library.

Merseyside Training and Enterprise Council

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to appoint trade union representatives to the Merseyside training and enterprise council.

Mr. Eggar: It will be up to key business leaders in Merseyside to prepare an application for a training and enterprise council (TEC) and to decide whether to invite a trade union representative to join the TEC board.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the newly appointed members of the Merseyside training and enterprise council together with their qualifications and experience.

Mr. Eggar: Key business leaders are now preparing an application for development funding for a Merseyside training and enterprise council. That application will set out the proposed board of directors for the TEC.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the payment in salary or expenses of the members of the Merseyside training and enterprise council.

Mr. Eggar: Training and enterprise council board members will not be entitled to draw a salary or other remuneration from public funds other than out-of-pocket expenses.

Labour Statistics

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will outline the level of unemployment in the parliamentary constituency of Greenock and Port Glasgow at the most recent date for which figures are available.

Mr. Lang: I have been asked to reply.

There were 5,014 unemployed in the Greenock and Port Glasgow constituency in December 1989, the most recent date for which information is available.

PRIME MINISTER

Lancashire

Q37. Mr. Michael Jack: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to visit Lancashire.

The Prime Minister: Yes.

Scotland

Q67. Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Prime Minister when she next plans to visit Scotland.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Wild Animals

Q102. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Prime Minister if she will co-ordinate Government legislation to prevent unnecessary suffering to wild animals.

The Prime Minister: Existing legislation, which has been greatly strengthened over the last decade, is already well co-ordinated. Wherever necessary, non-captive animals are protected in law, and the Protection of Animals Act 1911 forbids the causing of unnecessary suffering to all animals in captivity. The law has been further strengthened in recent years notably through the Protection of Animals (Penalties) Act 1987, the Protection of Animals (Amendment) Act 1988 and the Protection Against Cruel Tethering Act 1988.

Summer Time

Q136. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if she will raise at the next meeting of the European Council the implications of the recent directive on summer time arrangements in the Community.

The Prime Minister: I have no plans to do so.

Alloway

Q137. Mr. Harry Ewing: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to visit Alloway.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Rutland Water

Q163. Mr. Latham: To ask the Prime Minister, whether she will pay an official visit to Rutland Water, in the county of Rutland.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Gloucestershire

Q172. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to visit Gloucestershire.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Ivory

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Prime Minister if she will place in the Library copies of all representations she received before 18 January on the release of Hong Kong ivory stocks on to the market.

The Prime Minister: No. It is not my normal practice to release such correspondence.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Prime Minister what assessment she has made of the implications for the survival of the African elephant species of the sale of impounded poached ivory on to the world market; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Following the decision of the seventh conference of parties to CITES the African elephant was added to appendix I on 18 January. Conference resolution 2.15 adopted by the second conference of parties to CITES indicated that confiscated appendix I specimens "should not be returned to commercial utilisation in any form".

West Wiltshire District Council

Mr. Randall: To ask the Prime Minister what recent discussions she has had about the conduct of West Wiltshire district council; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: None. Questions relating to the conduct of West Wiltshire district council are for the district auditor. I understand that he has begun an investigation.

Pay Settlements

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a further statement on the current level of pay settlements.

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave on Tuesday 23 January at column 738.

Cabinet Office

Sir David Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister if there are any proposals to change the 1989-90 cash limit and running costs limit for the "Cabinet Office: other services".

The Prime Minister: Both the overall cash limit and the running costs limit for "Cabinet Office: other services" (Class XX, Vote 2) have been reduced. Cash limit has been reduced by £37,000 from £16,461,000 to £16,424,000 and running costs by £44,000 from £17,905,000 to £17,861,000. These decreases go to offset corresponding increases in the cash limit and running costs limit of the Department of the Environment: administration (Class 10 Vote 5) of £61,000 and £68,000 respectively. This reflects a transfer of functions. In addition, the Cabinet Office is to receive a transfer of £24,000 from the Department of Trade and Industry: administration, regulation of domestic trade and industry and consumer protection (Class 5 Vote 3) which will increase both running costs and cash limit by the same amount. The reason for this increase is that the Office of the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster has transferred to the Cabinet Office.

Engagements

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 25 January.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 25 January.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 25 January.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 25 January.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 25 January.

Mr. French: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 25 January.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 25 January.

Mr. John P. Smith: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 25 January.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 25 January.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Family Credit

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many inquiries he has received from hon. Members during the past six months relating to the family credit system; and if he will make a statement on the working of this benefit.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: During the past six months over 120 letters about family credit have been received from right hon. and hon. Members; these have mainly been concerned with individual cases rather than the system as such. Family credit is an income-related benefit and therefore it is necessary to ask for detailed information about earnings and other income in order to determine entitlement in accordance with the rules laid down in the legislation. In general, these arrangements work well, but we shall continue to be prepared to consider the need for changes in the light of practical experience.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many families in Scotland are in receipt of family credit; and what estimated proportion these families represent of those entitled to this benefit; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The latest information is for September 1989 when the number of families receiving family credit who were living in Scotland at the time their award was made was 39,000. Information about the total number of families eligible for family credit can be obtained only for Great Britain and only retrospectively, from family expenditure survey data.

Income Support

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claims for income support have been made since 11 April 1988 at the local offices of his Department in (a) Greenock and Port Glasgow, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland as a whole; and how many of these claims were determined.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The information is as follows:

	Number of income support claims made since 11 April 1988[1]	Number of income support claims determined since 11 April 1988[1]
(a) Greenock ILO	16,433	16,300
(b) Port Glasgow ILO	7,148	7,128
(c) Strathclyde	397,017	394,571
(d) Scotland	803,789	798,770

[1] Figures do not include claims received and determined after 29 December 1989.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many people are in receipt of income support in (a) Greenock and Port Glasgow, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland as a whole; and what are the corresponding figures for those in receipt of supplementary benefit for each year since 1979;

(2) how many people were in receipt of supplementary benefit in 1983, 1984, 1985, 1986, 1987 and 1988; and how many are now in receipt of income support in (a) Greenock and Port Glasgow, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland as a whole.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The information is in the table.

Social Security Staff

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total number of staff employed in local offices of his Department in (a) Greenock and Port Glasgow, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland at the latest available date; if any changes are envisaged in the number of those employed therein the near future; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The total number of staff employed in the Department's local offices on 1 January 1990 in Scotland was 6,924·5 (excluding casual staff). Included in this figure are 3,634 staff employed in Strathclyde and 213·5 in Greenock and Port Glasgow local offices. No changes in staffing are envisaged in the near future. The annual recomplementing exercise will take place in April 1990.

Hostels

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will make a statement on his plans for the long-term financial arrangements to compensate hostels which have lost income as a result of the income support changes introduced in April 1989;

(2) (a) on what date transitional payments direct to hostels will cease to be made and (b) what financial arrangements are to be brought in from the date when transitional payments cease.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Changes to income support for hostel dwellers were introduced from 9 October 1989. The temporary arrangements for protecting hostels' income will cease from April 1991. After that date, the money being paid by the central unit will be transferred to other Departments to be channelled through existing funding sources. We expect to announce the detailed financial arrangements shortly.

Budget and Crisis Loans

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what number of claimants on income support were repaying a budget or crisis loan at the social security offices in (a) Caernarfon and (b) Porthmadog for each month since January 1989; what number of (a) one parent families, (b) sick and disabled claimants, (c) pensioners and (d) unemployed claimants on income support were repaying budget or crisis loans at (i) Caernarfon and (ii) Porthmadog for each month since January 1989.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 22 January 1990]: The information available is given in the tables. The figures represent the number of loans being repaid on the last day of each month.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

New Parliamentary Building

Mr. Cox: To ask the Lord President of the Council on what date he expects the new parliamentary building in Bridge street, Westminster, to be open for use by hon. Members; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: I have been asked to reply.

As I advised the House on 28 July the contractor, Fairclough Building Ltd., had reported that the work was behind schedule and was not expected to be finished until October 1990.

The latest forecast from the contractor indicates that their revised programme has slipped by a month.

Subject to there being no further slippage the building should be fitted out and ready for occupation around Easter 1991.

Queen's Consent

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many Bills in the current Session have required the Queen's consent to proceed; and how many have received that consent.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: Of the Bills introduced in the Commons and printed so far this Session, one will require the Queen's Consent on Second Reading and six will require the Queen's Consent on Third Reading. Consent has not yet been signified in respect of any Bill during the Session.

ENERGY

French Nuclear Power Stations

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he will institute an inquiry into potential dangers posed to the United Kingdom by French nuclear power stations located near to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Baldry: There is no reason to suppose that the standards of safety adopted by the French are any less rigorous than those applied in the United Kingdom. French reactors are built and operated to the highest safety standards. Moreover, the Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate has a formal exchange of information arrangement with the French nuclear safety regulatory body—the Service Central de Surete des Installations Nucleaires (SCSIN). Under this exchange the SCSIN has undertaken to inform the nuclear installations inspectorate of any matters which could affect the safe operation of plant.

Nuclear Power

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what action his Department is taking in respect of the Council for the Preservation of Rural England's complaint to the European Commissioner for competition, seeking an investigation under articles 85, 86, 90, 92 and 93 of the treaty of Rome, of the provisions of the Electricity Act relating to a nuclear levy and associated subsidies, to nuclear power.

Mr. Baldry: As is normal, the Department has been discussing its proposals with the European Commission. We are confident that the arrangements for the new industry will be consistent with the United Kingdom's Community obligations.

Plutonium

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make it his policy to publish the annual plutonium production and storage figures in the Official Report.

Mr. Baldry: The information referred to by the hon. Member is detailed and specialised and is already circulated widely as a press release by my Department.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy in respect of his departmental press release No. 180 of 5 December 1989, how the estimate in paragraph 1.B(a) and (b) of plutonium contents of fuel is made; how the figures in paragraph 2(C) quoted for plutonium oxide were reached; why the figures in paragraph 2(d)(i) and (iii) for cumulative stocks of plutonium aggregate BNFL and overseas customers; what is the reason for the rounding of plutonium figures to 50 kg; and whether the figures are forwarded to the safeguards authorities with the same rounding.

Mr. Baldry: The estimates in paragraphs 1B(a) and (b) of plutonium contents of fuel are made from a knowledge of the irradiation levels of fuel elements. The plutonium content of these is calculated using standard computer codes and then summed for all the elements in the reactor or in the irradiated fuel stores as appropriate.

Plutonium oxide which has been separated in the reprocessing operation (paragraph 2(c) is analysed to measure its precise composition and weighed very accurately.

The format of the press release and its predecessors followed a recommendation by the Sizewell inquiry that details of plutonium in the United Kingdom's civil reactors should be published. The column of figures at paragraph 2(d) of the release, which shows stocks belonging to BNFL and its overseas customers, is additional information included to indicate the overall stock of safeguarded plutonium held by BNFL at Sellafield. The stock of BNFL's own plutonium is less than 0·5 tonne.

Information on stocks of plutonium, to the nearest gramme, is supplied to Euratom who are aware that some of the figures have been calculated as described above.

Dr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what revisions have been made in the estimates of amounts of plutonium in spent nuclear fuel, as referred to in his Department's press release No. 180 of 5 December 1989, on annual civil plutonium figures.

Mr. Baldry: As stated in press release 180, since the figures for 1986-87 and 1987-88 were published some revisions have been made in the estimates provided by the generating boards of the amounts of plutonium in spent fuel. The changes to the estimates of plutonium were:

Reactor discharges estimated kg of plutonium rounded to nearest 50 kg Pu

Heysham 1	50	0
1987-88
Heysham 1	100	50

No amendments have been necessary to any measured quantities of plutonium. All of this material is accounted for and remains under safeguards.

Uranium

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what was the level of (a) world uranium consumption and (b) United Kingdom uranium consumption in each year since 1960; what has been the percentage annual growth in each case; and what levels are predicted to be reached by 2000.

Mr. Baldry: For world uranium consumption I refer the hon. Member to the 1986 OECD/IAEA publication "Uranium Resources, Production and Demand". On United Kingdom consumption I am advised by the British Civil Uranium Procurement Organisation (BCUPO), which procures all civil uranium for electricity generation in the United Kingdom, that uranium consumption by the CEGB and the SSEB in the years in question was as follows:

	tu
Pre-1970	[1]10,000
1970	900
1971	1,000
1972	1,200
1973	1,300

1975	1,300
1976	1,400
1977	1,300

1985	1,500
1986	1,800
1987	1,500
1988	2,000
1989	1,900

[1] The BCUPO is unable to provide annual figures for the period prior to 1970.

Based on the requirements currently advised to the BCUPO by the CEGB and the SSEB, consumption in 2000 is expected to be around 1,200 tonnes.

Nuclear Reactors (Decommissioning)

Mr. Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many statements he or Ministers in his Department have made since May 1979 (a) in Parliament and (b) outside Parliament on decommissioning of nuclear reactors; and if he will indicate the source of the outside information relied upon for each statement.

Mr. Wakeham: Department of Energy Ministers have made a number of statements about the decommissioning of nuclear reactors both in Parliament and elsewhere since May 1979. Such statements are not recorded centrally, and the information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

In the majority of cases the source of any outside information relied upon would have been the Central Electricity Generating Board.

Magnox Nuclear Plants

Mr. Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will conduct a comparative costing study of Magnox back-end fuel cycle financial requirements in those OECD countries possessing Magnox nuclear plants.

Mr. Baldry: No.

Nuclear Electric

Mr. Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will set out the grounds on which he based his estimate that the new nationalised nuclear generation company will be cash positive.

Mr. Baldry: The Government intend that Nuclear Electric will have a positive cash flow. The precise cash position of the company will depend on the outcome of contractual negotiations with the area boards. The initial contracts will be subject to Government approval.

Mr. Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he will direct the new nuclear company to make public information currently restricted by commercial confidentiality.

Mr. Baldry: Nuclear Electric plc will be operating in a commercial market. It would not be in the taxpayer's interest to have different practices on commercial confidentiality for the company than for other participants in the market.

Mr. Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether the new nationalised nuclear company will hold title to all plutonium currently in the civil sector in England and Wales; and what restrictions will apply to the company's freedom to sign uranium enrichment, fuel fabrication and reprocessing contracts with French or Japanese fuel cycle companies.

Mr. Baldry: Nuclear Electric will take over responsibility for the Central Electricity Generating Board's plutonium. Contracts for nuclear fuel services will be entered into on a commercial basis.

Biblis Nuclear Plant

Mr. Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what volume of low level wastes will arise from the spent fuel from the Biblis nuclear plant, contracted to British Nuclear Fuels plc by the RWE Electrical Utility in the Federal Republic of Germany.

Mr. Baldry: It is estimated that approximately 1000 cu m of conditioned low-level waste will arise from the reprocessing of the Biblis fuel contracted to British Nuclear Fuels plc.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to publish the consultation document on the scheme for the promotion of energy efficiency in low-income households.

Mr. Peter Morrison: It is my intention that the consultation document should be available before discussion of clause 10 of the Social Security Bill takes place in Standing Committee.

Magnox Reactors

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will set a maximum operational life period for the Magnox reactors.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him by the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary for Energy on 14 December 1989 at column 778.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when the safety audits of the 11 Magnox stations are expected to be completed.

Mr. Baldry: Long-term safety reviews (LTSRs) of Magnox power stations are scheduled to take place as shown in the table. The stations will of course continue to be subject to normal regular inspections by the Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate.

Column 1 Station	Column 2 Licensee's LTSR completion dates	Column 3 Possible next LTSR (note 2)

1. ( ) = Date of commissioning.
2. If licensees wish to extend the station's operation beyond the date shown in column 3, then, a further LTSR would have to be completed by the licensee and considered by the Health and Safety Executive's Nuclear Installations Inspectorate (NII) by that date.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Bovine Spongiform Encepholopathy

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the number of confirmed cases of bovine spongiform encephalopathy for each county of England and Wales for the four-week period ended 16 January.

Mr. Maclean: The information is as follows:

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what number of animals were identified at (a) slaughterhouses and (b) livestock markets and for each of 1987, 1988 and 1989 as bovine spongiform encephalopathy suspects; and how many of those subsequently were confirmed as bovine spongiform encephalopathy infected.

Mr. Maclean: The information is available from 21 June 1988, when BSE became a notifiable disease, up to 30 September 1989, the end of the most recent quarter for which figures are currently available.

Period	Slaughterhouses		Markets
	Reported	Confirmed	Reported	Confirmed

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received concerning the banning of ruminant-derived protein for use as animal feed for animals other than ruminants.

Mr. Maclean: I have received a number of representations seeking a ban on the feeding of ruminant derived protein to non-ruminants, and a number pointing out that there is, however, no scientific justification for such action.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he has taken to ensure that foodstuffs imported into Britain do not contain the bovine offals currently banned from human consumption in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maclean: Such measures are unnecessary as BSE has not been confirmed in any other country except the Republic of Ireland, where the incidence is too low to justify a similar ban.

Livestock Welfare

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which of the recommendations of the Farm Animal Welfare Council's report on the welfare of livestock when slaughtered by religious methods he proposes not to implement; which would require primary legislation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The Government's response to the Farm Animal Welfare Council's report on religious slaughter was published on 29 October 1987 (MAFF press release No. 326/87) and a copy is available in the Library of the House. This explains the Government's conclusions on each of the council's recommendations and the reasons for them.

Proposals for regulations to implement many of the council's recommendations were issued for public comment on 20 June 1989. Representations received are now being considered and regulations will be laid before Parliament in the near future.

Primary legislation is required to implement a council recommendation that deer should not be slaughtered by religious methods in abattoirs, although my understanding is that no such slaughter takes place. The legislation will be introduced as soon as the parliamentary programme permits.

Food Irradiation

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what departmental representation there was at the international meeting on food irradiation organised through the international consultative group on food irradation, held in the United States between 27 November and 1 December.

Mr. Maclean: There was no departmental representation; the meeting was concerned solely with the harmonisation of regulations on trade in irradiated food between the countries on the continent of America in which the process is applied.

Sheep Dips

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any plans to offer new guidance concerning the disposal of organophosphate sheep dips; and if he has any proposals to ban the use of soakaways for this purpose.

Mr. Maclean: Sheep dip disposal is currently being reviewed by the pesticide disposal working group, which reports to the independent Advisory Committee on Pesticides. Moreover sheep dip product licences—including organophosphates—are being included in a review of ectoparasiticide product licences commencing this year. In the light of the conclusions of these reviews I shall consider whether to revise existing guidance. Increased restrictions on the use of soakaways would be a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment.

Nitrates

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any proposals to introduce maximum limits of nitrates permissible in winter vegetables grown in intensive growing systems; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Levels of nitrates in vegetables are kept under close review as part of the Government's ongoing programme of food surveillance. The committee on toxicity of chemicals in food, consumer products and the environment has examined the results of this monitoring and concluded that any possible risk to health from dietary intake of nitrates is likely to be small. Accordingly, I have no proposals to introduce maximum limits.

Cattle Imports

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on what date he was notified of each of the bans imposed by those countries operating restrictions against the import of live cattle from the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maclean: The table provides information in respect of those countries which at present do not permit the import of live cattle from the United Kingdom because of concerns about bovine spongiform encephalopathy.

Country	Date of notification
Sweden	21 October 1988
Australia	1 December 1988
New Zealand	20 December 1988
Finland	4 January 1989
United States of America	24 July 1989
Member states of the European Community:
(i) Cattle born before 18 July 1988	28 July 1989
(ii) Cattle more than 6 months of age	With effect from 1 March 1990
Israel	Not applicable[1]

[1] Israel has issued no licences for imports of cattle from the United Kingdom for a number of years.

Overfishing

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what consideration he is giving to the ruling by Sheriff Douglas Risk at Aberdeen sheriff court on 19 January that charges of overfishing are not a criminal offence under the Sea Fish Conservation Act 1967; whether he has any plans to seek to amend current legislation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to her today by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Scottish Office.

United Kingdom Fishing Fleet

Dr. Godman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the extent of the required reduction of the United Kingdom's fishing fleet in (a) percentage terms, (b) terms of gross registered tonnage and (c) engine power and approximate number of vessels under the multi-annual guidance programme over the next two years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The information requested by the hon. Member is as follows:

	GRT		Engine power (kw)
	Number	Per cent.	Number	Per cent.
Active fleet size
30 June 1989	165,878	—	849,032	—

31 December 1990	150,336	9·4	785,340	7·6
31 December 1991	141,620	14·6	748,145	11·9

Notes:
1. Figures are based on commercially active fishing vessels.
2. Flags of convenience vessels are excluded.
3. Figures are currently being renegotiated with commision officials.
4. Vessels numbers are not required for MAGP purposes.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the size of the United Kingdom's fleet of active, commercial fishing vessels in each of the past seven years.

Mr. Curry: The size of the United Kingdom's fleet of active, commercial fishing vessels in each of the past seven years is as follows:

Year	Number of vessels
1982	6,797
1983	7,227
1984	7,584
1985	7,920
1986	8,166
1987	8,193
1988	8,125

Information for 1989 is not yet available. The figures have been taken from MAFF's annual publication "Sea Fisheries Statistic Tables" published by Her Majesty's Stationery Office and are as at 31 December of each year.

Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to include a site or sites in south Wales on the short list of locations for relocation of the Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce, Reading.

Mr. Curry: A site in south Wales has been shortlisted, along with sites in other parts of the United Kingdom, for the relocation of a major part of the work of the Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to announce a decision on the relocation of part or all of the Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce, Reading.

Mr. Curry: As soon as my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales, for Scotland, and for Northern Ireland and the Minister of Agriculture have concluded their consideration of the advice received from the Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce.

Livestock Welfare

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which of the recommendations of the Farm Animal Welfare Council's report on the welfare of livestock—red meat animals—at the time of slaughter, he proposes not to implement; which would require primary legislation to implement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The Government's response to the Farm Animal Welfare Council's report on the welfare of red meat animals at slaughter was published on 20 August 1985 (MAFF Press Release No. 235) and a copy is available in the Library of the House. This explains the Government's conclusions on each of the council's recommendations and the reasons for them.

A number of the council's recommendations are included in proposals for regulations which were issued for public comment on 20 June 1989. Representations received are now being considered and regulations will be laid before Parliament in the near future.

Primary legislation is needed to:

require local authorities to designate an official to be responsible for welfare supervision in red meat slaughterhouses;

enable Ministers to issue directions to local authorities on supervision and enforcement matters relating to welfare; give Ministers power to require slaughterhouse management to nominate a member of staff to be specifically responsible for animal welfare; give Ministers powers to issue codes of practice with statutory backing on matters relating to welfare of animals in slaughterhouses;

add rabbits to the species covered by the welfare provisions of the Slaughterhouses Act 1974 and the Slaughter of Animals (Scotland) Act 1980;

require licences for slaughterhouses to be renewed on an annual basis in Scotland (this is already a requirement in England and Wales); provide additional powers necessary for the training and licensing of slaughtermen.

Primary legislation will be introduced as soon as the parliamentary programme permits.

Quarantine

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if animals imported into the United Kingdom for experimentation purposes are subject to normal quarantine regulations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: There are no exceptions to the general quarantine regulations.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give the figures for the total numbers imported into the United Kingdom for experimentation purposes during 1989 of (a) dogs and (b) primates.

Mr. Maclean: During 1989 647 dogs and 3,671 primates were imported into the United Kingdom for research purposes.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Contracts

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many contracts over £92,500 have been let by his Department in the 1988-89 financial year and in the current financial year to date; and how many of these were (a) automatically renewed and (b) open to competition by advertisement throughout the European Community.

Mr. Cope: The number of contracts awarded by Northern Ireland Departments and covered by the provisions of the EC supplies directive, for which the current threshold is £92,000, was 23 in the 1988-89 financial year and 26 in the current financial year to date. Of these 11 were awarded following advertisement in the EC journal and 38 were considered to be exempt from advertising and may have been awarded to the previous supplier.

Police Liaison Committees

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many district councils in Northern Ireland have official or unofficial police liaison committees.

Mr. Cope: A total of 21 of the 26 district councils have police liaison committees.

Recruitment Advertising

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give the amount expended on recruitment advertising for the last three years by each Northern Ireland Department and the total amount, together with a breakdown of the spending between (a) regional press, (b) national press, (c) specialist or periodical press and (d) other.

Mr. Cope: Recruitment of all permanent non-industrial staff for NI Departments is the responsibility of the Civil Service Commission for Northern Ireland and expenditure cannot be disaggregated. Total expenditure for the last three financial years for NI Departments and the NIO is given in the table.

The recruitment of industrial staff is usually done through job markets with some expenditure on local press advertising as follows:

Bathing Water

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will announce the results of the survey of bathing water quality made in 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The results for the survey carried out during the 1989 bathing season showed that all of the 16 identified bathing waters in Northern Ireland met the mandatory coliform bacteria standards of the EC bathing water directive. The corresponding figure for 1988 was 14.

The 1989 results for Northern Ireland are set out in summary form. Arrangements have been made to place a more detailed summary of the results in the Library and also to send copies to the Commission of the European Communities.

Firearms Certificates

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what were the reasons for the increase in cost of a new firearms certificate to the present level in January 1990.

Mr. Cope: Fees for firearms certificates are set so as to recover the costs of administering the licensing system, the largest single element of which is police staff costs. The fee for a new firearms certificate was increased from 1 January 1990 to reflect the increased costs since the fee was last set in 1986.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many firearms certificates have been issued to visitors to Northern Ireland in each of the last five years for (a) shotguns, (b) ·22 rifles, (c) rifles of a calibre larger than ·22 and (d) other firearms.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 9 January 1990]: The Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary has informed me that the information is as follows:

At 31 December	(a) shotguns	(b) ·22 rifles	(c) Full bore	(d) Other firearms
1989	156	37	42	8
1988	70	29	13	6
1987	83	15	21	4
1986	108	4	7	3
1985	153	7	26	5

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, how many persons in Northern Ireland hold certificates as firearms dealers.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 9 January 1990]: The Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary has informed me that there are 155 registered firearms dealers in Northern Ireland.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons in Northern Ireland, not being firearms dealers, have firearms certificates on which are listed more than 10 firearms which are a mixture of muzzle loading and cartridge firing weapons; whether such persons are treated as collectors of firearms; and what were the numbers of such persons five and 10 years ago or as much of such information as is available to him.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 9 January 1990]: The Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary has informed me that the information is not available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Nursing and Residential Homes

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many residents of (a) private residential homes, (b) private nursing homes, (c) National Health Service residential homes and (d) National Health Service nursing homes are in receipt of income support; and if he will give details for each health board unit of management.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 19 January 1990]: The information in relation to (a), (b) and (c) is not readily available and there are no Health Service nursing homes. The available figures are as follows:

Numbers of income support recipients in private and voluntary homes: May 1989

Post Office Counters Ltd.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether Post Office Counters Ltd. was requested, prior to the nominated date of 15 January 1990, to register with the Fair Employment Commission for Northern Ireland in accordance with the Fair Employment (Northern Ireland) Act 1989.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 22 January 1990]: I refer the right hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave him on 23 January 1990 at column 635.

Cerebral Palsy

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the number of children born in Northern Ireland in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available, who have been diagnosed as having cerebral palsy.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 22 January 1990]: This information is not available centrally.

Mines

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list his powers in relation to the licensing of the opening or operation of mines in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 23 January 1990]: With the exception of precious metals the responsibility for the licensing of any prospecting or mining operations in Northern Ireland falls to the Department of Economic Development under the Mineral Development Act (NI) 1969. The Act vests ownership of most minerals in the Department and empowers it to grant prospecting licences and mining leases, licences, and permissions. Mining applications are subject, of course, to the normal planning procedures operated by the Department of the Environment (NI). The licensing of precious metals is dealt with by the Crown Estate Commissioners.

Brandywell Stadium

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the safety and fire regulations that apply to the Brandywell stadium.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 23 January]: Duties are laid upon the employers of work people in the Brandywell stadium and upon the persons in control of the Brandywell stadium by the Health and Safety at Work (Northern Ireland) Order 1978.

Regulations made under that order which the Department of Economic Development's health and safety inspectorate considers applicable to work activities at the Brandywell stadium are:—

The Safety Representatives and Safety Committee Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1979.
The Safety Signs Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1981
The Health and Safety (First-Aid) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1982
The Petroleum—Spirit (Plastic Containers) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1983
The Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1986.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the Brandywell football ground was last inspected in regard to fire and safety regulations and if any improvements were required.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 23 January 1990]: The last inspection of the Brandywell football ground by an inspector from the Department of Economic Development's health and safety inspectorate was on 8 April 1986. At this inspection it was confirmed that certain improvements had been made in compliance with recommendations arising out of an earlier inspection on 9 July 1985.

The last inspection by the Northern Ireland fire brigade was on 14 December 1989. No improvements were required.

Sporting Events (Disturbances)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list those sporting events in Northern Ireland in 1989 at which there were disturbances either during the event or among supporters preceding or following the event which required action by the police; how many persons were arrested at each such disturbance; and what were the events and teams involved.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 23 January 1990]: The Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary has informed me that the information is not available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Tourism

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table in the Official Report to show for each of the last three years the sums paid by the Government to each district council in Northern Ireland to encourage tourism; what sums for capital expenditure have been paid to each council for tourist amenities; and what are his projections for the current and future two years.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 23 January 1990]: Government assistance to district councils for tourism development takes the form of grants toward the cost of providing tourist amenities. The amounts paid in each financial year are as follows:

District council	1986-87 actual £	1987-88 actual £	1988-89 actual £	1989-90 estimated £

Suckler Cows

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has as to what was the average gross margin for a suckler cow in Northern Ireland in the years 1984 to 1989; and what information he has as to the average net profit per cow.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 23 January 1990]: Average gross margins for suckler cows for the years 1984-85 to 1988-89 are presented in the table.

Suckler cow gross margins (£s per cow)

Cow Type	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88	1988-89
Lowland	233	140	140	277	229

An estimate of net profit per cow would require that farm fixed costs are allocated to individual enterprises. It is not possible to do this on a realistic basis.

Animal Feeds

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what safeguards have been implemented to ensure that imported grain which has been contaminated with lead or other substances dangerous to animal health will not be incorporated into animal feeds sold in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 23 January 1990]: It is a requirement that animal feed, including imports and imported ingredients, comply with the Feeding Stuffs Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1988. These regulations, which are enforced by inspectors of the Department of Agriculture, prescribe the maximum permitted limits for undesirable substances, including lead, in animal feed.

Students Unions

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what sums from public funds were paid to the student's union in each of the following institutions of higher education in Northern Ireland in the academic years 1987-88 and 1988-89, or financial years if more convenient (a) Queen's university, (b) University of Ulster, Coleraine, (c) University of Ulster, Jordanstown, (d) University of Ulster, Londonderry, (e) Stranmillis college, (f) St. Mary's college and (g) St. Joseph's college.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 23 January 1990]: The sums are as follows:

	Academic Years 1987-88 £	1988-89 £
(a) The Queen's University of Belfast[1]	464,162	358,315
(b-d) University of Ulster[2]	453,450	528,000
	Financial Years 1987-88 £	1988-89 £
(e) Stranmillis College	34,500	36,980
(f-g) St. Mary's College[3]	27,793	28,935

[1] At QUB there was an apparent decline in funding, but this reflects the rationalisation of overspending in a previous year.
[2] It is not possible to subdivide the amount of funding between the various campuses of the University.
[3] St. Joseph's college ceased to exist as a separate entity when it merged with St. Mary's college on 1 September 1985 to become St. Mary's college.

Firearms

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether a separate audit is carried out into the costs of the firearms section of Royal Ulster Constabulary headquarters.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 23 January 1990]: No, but the firearms section records and associated accounts are open to audit by the National Audit Office in the same way as other accounting records maintained by the Police Authority for Northern Ireland.

SCOTLAND

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowance

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received on the future levels of hill livestock compensatory allowances; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to him by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on 23 January, column 641-42.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the expenditure each year since 1986 on hill livestock compensatory allowances.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The total expenditure in Scotland on hill livestock compensatory allowances in each year since 1986 was as follows:

	£ million
1986	43
1987	43
1988	44
1989	[1]45

[1] Provisional.

Local Authority Spending

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the average increase in local authority spending in Scotland in each of the past two years; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Local authority spending in Scotland showed an average increase of 8·3 per cent. in 1988-89 and a budgeted increase of 10·9 per cent. in 1989-90.

Local authorities have been warned that they cannot expect such increases to be endorsed through corresponding increases in central Government support. If they persist with such overspending it will lead inevitably to higher community charges for which they will be responsible and answerable to their local electorates.

Environmental Protection

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make funds available to local authorities for recycling and other environmental protection measures.

Mr. Rifkind: I support expenditure by local authorities through aggregate external finance, which assists the provision of the full range of local authority services. Within their environmental services recycling can become largely self-financing.

Marine Fish Farms

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many consents have been granted by each of the water authorities in the regions and islands for marine fish farms in each of the past five years; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In Scotland, responsibility for aquatic pollution control and issuing consents for discharges to water lies with the river purification authorities, the seven mainland river purification boards and the three islands councils. The information requested by the hon. Member is not held centrally, but is recorded in the public registers maintained by the RPAs under the Control of Pollution Act 1974.

Labour Statistics

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will list the number of people who were classified as long-term unemployed in (a) Greenock and Port Glasgow, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland as a whole in January 1980, January 1983, January 1989 and for the most recent date for which figures are available;

(2) how many and what percentage of claimants in (a) Greenock and Port Glasgow, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland as a whole were classified as long-term unemployed people at the most recent date for which figures are available.

Mr. Lang: The available information is given in the table. Unemployment is analysed by duration quarterly and October 1989 is the latest date for which information is available on the number of long-term unemployed. Direct comparisons of unemployment by duration since 1979 are not possible because of the changes in October 1982 from a count of registrants at jobcentres to a count based on unemployed claimants and because of other changes in the coverage of the count.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide a breakdown of the unemployment statistics for Greenock and Port Glasgow by district electoral division, or on another convenient basis; and what were the comparable figures for 1988.

Mr. Lang: The table gives a breakdown of the number unemployed in each ward in Inverclyde district in December 1988 and 1989.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the level of unemployment expressed as a percentage, according to the latest available figures for (a) the Greenock travel-to-work area, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland as a whole; and what were the comparable figures 10 years ago.

Mr. Lang: The table shows the level of unemployment expressed as a percentage for the Greenock travel-to-work area, Strathclyde and Scotland as a whole, calculated on the narrow base, for December 1979 and 1989.

The figures are affected by the changes in the compilation of the counts and are not directly comparable.

Council House Sales

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many council properties have been sold to council house tenants in (a) Inverclyde, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland as a whole in each of the past five years; and what proportion of the total stock of council properties in (a), (b) and (c) these sales represent in each of the past five years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 13 March 1989, Official Report, volume 149, column 36.

Updated information for 1988 and for 1989 is given in the table:

Inverclyde Initiative

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many jobs have been created by the Inverclyde initiative in the Inverclyde area; and, of these, how many are filled by women in full-time employment.

Mr. Lang: The Inverclyde initiative aims to stimulate local economic activity and create opportunities for employment. It does not itself directly create new jobs. Information is not therefore available in the form requested.

However, total jobs created by projects which have been assisted by the Inverclyde initiative between March 1985 and March 1989 are approximately 3,100.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the total amount spent by the Scottish Development Agency, by way of the Inverclyde initiative; and if he will break down the expenditure on the Inverclyde initiative, showing on what it has been spent.

Mr. Lang: Expenditure by the Scottish Development Agency from March 1985 to December 1989 is set out in the table.

	£ million
Environmental improvements	4·5
Acquisition and preparation of sites for industrial/commercial development	10·7
Acquisition/development of industrial/premises	1·8

Social Work Training

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many social workers have successfully undertaken training programmes, approved by the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work, in order to qualify as mental health officers under the Mental Health (Scotland) Act 1984 in each of the regional and islands' councils' social work departments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: Detailed information in the form requested is not yet available. The following social work staff are estimated by the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work to have completed a training programme approved, or accepted as comparable to a programme approved, by the council in relation to the requirements of the Mental Health (Scotland) Act 1984, as at 31 December 1989.

Pesticide Research

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he has now received the findings of the research into the effects of Nuvan 500 EC undertaken by members of the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries marine laboratory in Aberdeen; if he will place any publications or reports concerning this research in the Library; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he has received the findings of the research into less-toxic or non-toxic alternatives to the pesticide Nuvan 500 EC; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: A wide range of studies is being undertaken by DAFS, and other organisations, on the use and effects of Aquagard (formerly Nuvan 500 EC) and on possible alternative treatments for sea lice infestation of farmed salmon.

A report on the toxicity of Aquagard for other species has been prepared by DAFS scientists and will be published shortly. A copy of this report and any subsequent publications of work by DAFS scientists will be placed in the Library.

Work is in progress on identification and assessment of possible chemical alternatives to Aquagard. The work which is being partly funded by the salmon farming industry is not yet complete. I gave details of other work on other alternatives in my written replies to the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) on 22 November.

Urban Aid Programme

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report (a) the total allocation for the financial year 1990-91 under the urban aid programme, (b) the amount awarded to voluntary associations within that figure and (c) the proportion of the overall amount which is allocated for voluntary associations in respect of (i) Inverclyde, (ii) Strathclyde and (iii) Scotland as a whole.

Mr. Lang: The Government's public expenditure decisions, recently announced, will enable approved urban programme expenditure in Scotland in 1990-91 to rise to a total of £68·989 million. This represents a considerable increase over the 1989-90 programme.

Some £39·6 million of this will be taken up by existing projects. The balance will be taken up partly by adjustments to the costs and expenditure phasing of projects already approved, but mainly by new approvals arising from the 1990-91 competition, currently in progress.

Of the £39·6 million already allocated for 1990-91 some £23·1 million, 58·3 per cent. is for projects managed by community and voluntary groups. Approximately 64·7 per cent. of this amount is for projects in Strathclyde and 2·7 per cent. for projects in Inverclyde.

Argyll and Clyde Health Board

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the names of the chairman and members of the Argyll and Clyde health board, their periods of office and the organisations from which they were recruited, selected and appointed.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Health board members are appointed as individuals on the basis of their skills and experience. The table gives the names of the chairman and members of Argyll and Clyde health board, their period of appointment and information on any nominating organisation or individual.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the names of the chairman and directors of the Scottish Development Agency, their periods of office, their annual remuneration and the organisations and associations from which they were recruited, selected and appointed.

Mr. Lang: The information is set out in the table.

Individuals are appointed to the agency board in recognition of the personal contribution they can make to the work of the agency and not as representatives of particular bodies. They do, of course, bring to bear experience in relevant fields of activity, including industry, property, small businesses, higher education, local government and trades unions, and appointments are made with a view to having an appropriate balance of experience and interests.

Housing Tenure

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the proportion of different forms of housing tenure in Scotland in each of the past 10 years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The available information is published in Housing and Construction Statistics, part 2, table 2.22—which is available in the House Library.

Sea Bed Monitoring

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement concerning the monitoring of the sea bed immediately adjacent to the wreckage of Piper Alpha and the surrounding area.

Mr. Lang: As I indicated in my previous reply to the hon. Member on 25 July last year (volume 157, columns 645-46) the results of initial monitoring work by DAFS scientists were published and copies of the reports placed in the Library.

In addition, as part of the abandonment programme approved by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy under the Petroleum Act 1987, Occidental Petroleum (Caledonia) Ltd. and its co-venturers have been required to carry out surveys to determine the disposition of the debris, to examine the remains of the installation for petroleum leakage and to sample water sediment and fish for the presence of PCBs and radioactivity. The results of these surveys have been received and views on them will shortly be invited from representatives of the fishing industry and the Nature Conservancy Council. It will then be for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy to decide what further action may be necessary under the abandonment programme in the light of the results of the survey, the views of interested parties and expert advice, including that of Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland marine laboratory, Aberdeen and Her Majesty's industrial pollution inspectorate.

DAFS will continue to monitor the area around Piper Alpha as part of its general monitoring of the environmental quality of sea waters around Scotland.

Victim Support Schemes

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on Scottish Office funding for victim support schemes in (a) Strathclyde and (b) Scotland as a whole.

Mr. Lang: The Scottish Office has assisted the Scottish Association of Victim Support Schemes for the past five years through a grant under section 10 of the Social Work (Scotland) Act 1968. Scottish Office funding for the victim support movement is in line with the Government's policy to improve services to victims of crime generally. Funding has risen from £600 in 1984-85 to £286,000 in 1989-90. In Strathclyde 10 co-ordinator posts in local schemes have been funded by this means.

Apart from a special grant of £13,000 in March 1989 to meet a specific financial difficulty, no central Government grant has been paid to the Strathclyde association (a regional body representing local schemes in Strathclyde). Strathclyde regional council provides significant funding to the Strathclyde association and actively supports the objectives of the Scottish association.

Prison Building Programme

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the current prison building programme and renovations to prisons.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The current prison building programme is, at nearly £14 million for 1989-90, the largest to date. The projects included in the programme are carefully prioritised to ensure that the most urgent work is carried out first. This includes, in particular, work relating to security, health and safety, hygiene, medical provision and the improvement of inmate and staff accommodation.

Manufacturing Investment

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table, taking 1979 as 100, of investment in real terms in manufacturing in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Lang: The table gives estimated gross domestic fixed capital formation in £ million at current prices by manufacturing industry in Scotland in each year between 1977 and 1987, the latest year for which figures are available. It is not possible to provide estimates in real terms.

Ambulance Dispute

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the costs to date to each of Scotland's police forces caused by the industrial dispute in the ambulance service.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Police forces in Scotland have responded to over 6,700 calls for assistance since the current dispute in the Scottish ambulance service began.

No claims for reimbursement of the costs incurred have yet been submitted by the police forces concerned to the Common Services Agency.

School Meals

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the change in the take-up of school meals, since 1986, in (a) Inverclyde, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland as a whole.

Mr. Lang: Information about school meals in Strathclyde region is collected on an education division basis and is not available separately for Inverclyde. Details on the take-up of meals in Strathclyde and Scotland during the period 1986-89 can be found in the annual reports of the school meal census, copies of which are in the Library.

Crack

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the number of prosecutions concerned with the trafficking in or possession of the drug crack in each of the past two years; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There have been no seizures of "crack" recorded by the police in Scotland. The available information on prosecutions relating to cocaine, of which "crack" is a derivative, are published in "Statistics of the misuse of drugs: seizures and offenders dealt with, United Kingdom, 1988—Scotland Tables", a copy of which will shortly be placed in the House of Commons Library.

Mr. Manouchehr Tehrani

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations he has received regarding the dismissal of Mr. Manouchehr Tehrani from his employment as a consultant-surgeon at the Inverclyde royal hospital, by the Argyll and Clyde health board; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: None. Mr. Tehrani's law agents have, however, intimated that they are taking their client's instructions concerning future action relating to his appeal against dismissal. A decision is awaited.

Shipbuilding and Marine Engineering Industry

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the number of people employed in the shipbuilding and marine engineering industry in Scotland in each year from 1979.

Mr. Lang: The table gives the available information, from the censuses of employment in 1981, 1984 and 1987, showing the total number of people employed in the shipbuilding and repairing industry in Scotland in September of each year. There is no comparable information available for 1979.

Offshore Fabrication Yards

Kelvin Central plc

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will provide details of the criteria used in selecting the in-house bid for Kelvin Central plc to receive financial assistance from the Scottish Transport Group;

(2) pursuant to his answer of 22 January, why the Scottish Transport Group decided not to provide financial assistance to the employee-led bid for Kelvin Central plc.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Financial assistance was made available by the Scottish Transport Group to the management-employee team led by the managing director of the company in the light of information supplied by the team about the shareholding structure and financing arrangements proposed for their bid. No request for assistance has been received for any other employee-based group.

White Fish Quota Allocation

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will detail both the white fish quota allocation, by species and areas, and the final catch for the non-sector fishing boats, by species and area, for 1989.

Mr. Lang: The table shows the final allocations made and provisional figures for landings by non-sector vessels for the eight white fish stocks for which there were sectoral allocations in 1989.

Fisheries Conservation

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the implications of the Aberdeen sheriff court judgment of 19 January for fisheries conservation policy.

Mr. Lang: The Government are still studying the text of the judgment. Changes may be necessary in the wording of fishing vessel licences and in the basis on which prosecutions for certain categories of offence are brought before the courts. However, alleged breaches of the quotas made to individual vessels by fisheries departments will still be reported for prosecution.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consideration he is giving to the ruling by Sheriff Douglas Risk at Aberdeen sheriff court on 19 January that overfishing charges are not a criminal offence under the Sea Fish Conservation Act 1967 as amended by the Sea Fish Licensing Order 1983; what action he intends to take to amend current legislation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The sheriff found that exceeding the allocation made in respect of an individual vessel should be regarded as a contravention of the limitations of fishing vessel licences under section 4(5) of the Sea Fish Conservation Act 1967, rather than a contravention of the conditions included in fishing vessel licences under section 4(6) of the above Act. He further found that section 4(6) of the Act could not be regarded as subsuming section 4(5). This judgment has implications for the wording of fishing vessel licences and for the basis on which certain kinds of prosecutions are brought, and the Government are considering these urgently. However, alleged breaches of the quotas made to individual vessels by fisheries departments will still be reported for prosecution. In his judgment, the sheriff acknowledged that prosecutions might be brought under different subsections of the Act or that other steps might be taken to ensure that allocations are adhered to.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give for each health board and for Scotland as a whole the number of (a) acute beds and (b) non-acute beds for each year since 1979.

Mr. Rifkind: The information is not readily available. I will write to the hon. Member in due course.

Bathing Waters

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will announce the results of the survey of bathing water quality made in 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The results of the monitoring carried out by river purification boards in 1989 showed that 16 of the 23 identified Scottish waters met the mandatory standards for coliform bacteria set by the European Community bathing water directive, as compared with 12 in the 1988 bathing season.

While this improvement is encouraging, the effects of the better weather in 1989 are likely to have been a factor in the results. In the longer term, progress will be founded on the capital works programme for which my right hon. and learned Friend announced increased provision in December 1989, with the specific objective of enabling water authorities to accelerate their spending on water and sewerage projects, and in particular to meet the target of compliance with the directive's standards at 95 per cent. of bathing waters by the mid-1990s and full compliance within 10 years.

The 1989 results for Scotland are set out in the table. A more detailed summary of the results is being placed in the Library, and the results will also be made known to the Commission of the European Communities.

Illegal Dumping

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he takes to monitor the dumping of asbestos in the river Clyde off Cloch point; and what information he has on what other dangerous waste or products have been dumped there.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 24 January 1990]: The dumping of waste at sea is subject to licences, under the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985, issued by the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland. No licences have been issued for disposal of asbestos at sea. Licences are issued by DAFS, however, for the disposal at sea of dredge spoil from Clyde navigation channels.

For the dump site near Cloch point, licence holders are required to submit details of the material they intend to dump and to carry out sampling and analysis of individual consignments for contaminants including asbestos. This process has revealed only trace amounts of asbestos contamination at the Cloch point site and the levels recorded are not thought to present any threat to human or marine life.

Scrutiny of applications and monitoring of dumping operations are carried out in accordance with international obligations of the United Kingdom under the Oslo convention on dumping of material at sea and the Government's commitment to apply to all United Kingdom waters principles laid down in the ministerial declaration of the second North sea conference. Annual reports on dumping operations are submitted to the commission of the Oslo convention.

DEFENCE

Aircraft Crashes

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the level of training and length of experience required before aircrew can take part in Royal Air Force low-flying exercises; and what was the level of training and experience of the aircrew involved in crashes during such exercises during the last two years.

Mr. Neubert: Aircrew are not permitted to take part in RAF exercises, including low-flying exercises, until they have received appropriate training and have demonstrated that they possess the requisite skills. This was the case for all aircrew involved in major accidents during such exercises over the last two years.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many aircraft crashes have taken place in (a) Wales, (b) Scotland, (c) north-east England and (d) north-west England over the past 10 years.

Mr. Neubert: There have been the following major accidents involving British military aircraft since 1 January 1980:

	Number
Wales	[1]18
Scotland	21
North-east England	[1]17
North-west England	5

[1] Each figure includes one aircraft damaged while on the ground.

Near Miss

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the near miss involving an RAF Tornado and flight BA5950 on Friday 19 January.

Mr. Neubert: An air miss report has been filed with the Civil Aviation Authority by the captain of a Boeing 737 aircraft, following an incident on Friday 19 January. The report is being investigated in the normal way. Until the investigation is complete, it would be inappropriate to comment further.

Greenham and Crookham Commons

Mr. Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) of the parcels of land at Greenham common or Crookham common acquired by compulsory purchase if he will specify (a) the details of the land acquired (b) the names of the vendors, (c) the date or dates of acquisition, (d) the statutory authority used for the purchases and (e) the consultative procedures carried out prior to acquisition;

(2) which parts of Greenham common and Crookham common were purchased under compulsory powers; and which were purchased by voluntary agreement with the vendor by his Department.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No parts of Greenham and Crookham commons were purchased under compulsory powers by the Ministry of Defence. Land was requisitioned under emergency powers during the last war and the freeholds were later acquired by agreement.

Main Battle Tank

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what studies have been carried out to evaluate the M1 Abrams as a replacement main battle tank for the United Kingdom;

(2) what studies have been carried out to evaluate the Leopard 2 as a replacement main battle tank for the United Kingdom.

Mr. Alan Clark: By the time of a decision on the tank to replace the Chieftain tank, each of the contenders will have been subjected to a process of detailed assessment against our requirement.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has made any revision to the United Kingdom's requirement for main battle tanks in the light of recent events in eastern Europe.

Mr. Alan Clark: We keep our investment in all weapons systems, including main battle tanks, under constant review.

Soviet Military Doctrine

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what studies he has commissioned into the purported change of Soviet military doctrine from an offensive to a defensive one.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We welcome the recent shift in emphasis in Soviet military doctrine towards defensive objectives. In consultation with our allies we are studying closely statements by senior Soviet spokesmen on the subject, and will continue to watch with interest the evolution of Soviet views on "reasonable sufficiency" in defence. We are also monitoring the extent to which force structures are modified to reflect changes in doctrine.

Armed Forces (Re-enlistment)

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he has taken to encourage re-enlistment in the armed forces in an effort to combat reduced manpower projections for the 1990s; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: All three services encourage the reenlistment of ex-service personnel. It is their practice to advise those leaving of the opportunities and the methods for re-enlistment. They also approach selected ex-service personnel to remind them of the possibilities which exist for re-enlistment.

Laser Systems

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to see that laser dazzle sight systems are fitted to all United Kingdom destroyers and frigates; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is our policy to ensure that all HM ships are fitted with equipment appropriate to their role and theatre of operations.

Chinook Support Helicopter

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has instructed any evaluation of the Boeing CH-47 Chinook support helicopter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Boeing CH-47 Chinook helicopter is already in service with the RAF. Its capability is kept under regular review.

WALES

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the exhibitions of paintings, photographs and sculpture which he has visited in an official capacity since 1987.

Mr. Peter Walker: I have visited the following exhibitions since June 1987.

Chernobyl Contamination

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether his Department will launch a comprehensive aerial survey into the effects of post-Chernobyl contamination in north Wales.

Mr. Grist: No. It is unlikely that such a survey would add significantly to the data provided through existing monitoring arrangements.

Hill Farmers

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the average income level of hill farmers in each year since 1986.

Mr. Peter Walker: Average farm income figures for hill and upland (LFA) farms for years 1986 and 1987 have been published in "Agriculture in the United Kingdom:

1988." Similar information for later years is due to be published, early next month, in "Agriculture in the United Kingdom: 1989."

Water Act Authorisations

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many (a) consents and (b) authorisations have been made subject to any conditions in accordance with section 152 (4) or (5) of the Water Act 1989;

(2) how many (a) consents and (b) authorisations he has made for the disposal of land, or rights or interests in or over any land, in accordance with section 152 (3) of the Water Act 1989;

(3) how many requests he has received for his (a) consent or (b) general authorisation for the disposal of land, or of any interest or right in or over any land, in accordance with section 152 (2) of the Water Act 1989;

(4) if he will list the location of all land, or the nature and location of any right or interest in or over any land, which has been subject to a request for consent for disposal in accordance with section 152 (2) of the Water Act 1989, specifying which have received his consent or general authorisation under section 152 (4), and what if any conditions were attached under section 152 (4) and (5).

Mr. Grist: My right hon. Friend has consented, under section 152 (2) and (3) of the Water Act 1989, to the disposal by Dwr Cymru Cyfyngedig of one parcel of land forming a substantial part of the Elan Valley estate in Powys, Mid Wales.

Under section 152 (4), my right hon. Friend gave his consent subject to the condition that disposal was to a charitable trust whose objectives are identified in the conditions of its trust deed.

Water Act Covenants

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on how many occasions he has had an opportunity to enter into a convenant with a company holding an appointment under chapter I of part II of the Water Act 1989 for the purposes set out in section 152 (7) of that Act; how many convenants have been entered into; on how many occasions he has declined to enter into such covenants; and what were his reasons in each case.

Mr. Grist: None.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement concerning the impact of mad cow disease on Wales in 1990.

Mr. Peter Walker: Bovine spongiform encephalopathy is expected to continue to affect cattle in Wales in 1990 at approximately the present level. Precautionary measures have been taken to safeguard human health.

Pig Producers

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many pig producers went out of business in Wales between 1980 and 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: Information is not available in the form requested. The numbers of holdings classified as being of specialist pig, and mixed pig and poultry, types in 1980 and 1988 (the latest year for which figures are available) are shown in the following table:

Number of Holdings

	Specialist pigs	Mixed pigs and poultry
1980	143	270
1988	84	105

The figures refer to statistically significant agricultural holdings only.

Urban Programme

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list (a) the total allocation for 1990-91 under the urban programme, (b) the amount allocated for voluntary organisations within that figure and (c) the percentage of the total figure which is allocated for voluntary organisations in respect of (i) the local authorities of South Glamorgan, (ii) the county of South Glamorgan, (iii) the city of Cardiff, (iv) the borough of the Vale of Glamorgan and (v) any other local authorities in South Glamorgan.

Mr. Grist: The information as requested is shown in the following table:

Urban programme
(a) Total 1990-91 urban programme allocation	£29,187,000
(b) Total allocated to voluntary organisations	£4,493,205
(c) Percentage of voluntary organisations share allocated to:—
(i) local authorities of South Glamorgan	15·4 per cent.
(ii) South Glamorgan County Council	8·5 per cent.
(iii) Cardiff City Council	6·1 per cent.
(iv) Vale of Glamorgan Borough Council	0·8 per cent.

Family Practitioner Committees

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what considerations are taken into account in deciding the appointment of the general managers of family practitioner committees.

Mr. Grist: In recruiting general managers, the overriding consideration for the employing authorities must be to identify and appoint the best qualified candidates. In making their individual choices FPCs will have been particularly anxious to secure managers able to undertake the additional tasks arising from the White Papers "Promoting Better Health" and "Working for Patients".

Community Health Councils

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to ensure that community health councils will have a role to play in ensuring public participation in the planning of health care services.

Mr. Grist: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's proposals for the restructuring of community health councils in Wales, which are currently out to consultation, do not envisage any change in their primary role. They will continue to monitor the quality of services and comment on issues relating to changing patterns of service which have a bearing on the welfare of patients. The consultation document makes it clear that CHCs are expected to provide the major consumer voice on local health service issues. The proposals are intended to strengthen and focus that consumer voice and provide a more strategic overview of DHA and FPC activity from the consumer perspective.

Health Planning Forum

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to include representatives of consumers on the Welsh health planning forum.

Mr. Grist: Members of the planning forum are selected for their personal contribution rather than as representatives of a particular interest. Nonetheless, the forum sub-groups being established to develop work in the key areas of health gain and people-centred services will have a user input; and we are sympathetic to the forum itself including an explicit consumer voice.

Local Management of Schools

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will consult the Welsh counties committee before setting (a) the time-limit for transitional arrangements and (b) the permanent formula for calculating school staff salary budgets under local financial management.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Advice on the transition arrangements and formula funding is contained in circular 36/88. The Welsh counties committee was included in the list of organisations which were invited to comment on the draft circular.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will extend the proposed transitional period to the year 2000 for variations according to actual, and not average, staff salary bills, in the staff salary component of local financial management schemes in maintained schools.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: There are no plans for a general extension of the transition period beyond April 1994. We shall, however, look sympathetically at proposals to extend the transition period selectively for schools which would otherwise be faced with annual reductions of 1 per cent. or more in their total budgets because their staff costs are above the LEA average.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to allow county councils to set a school staff salary formula under local financial management, which reflects actual salary costs in individual schools.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Our position on calculating teacher salary costs in primary schools was outlined in my reply on 20 April last to my hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, South-West (Mrs. Shephard). Secondary schools' budgets will be based on average teachers' salary costs. This is because to fund the actual salary costs of individual schools would mean funding schools according to numbers of teachers rather than numbers of pupils. This would be counter to the policy aim of putting pupil numbers at the heart of funding.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to allow each county council local discretion in setting the formula for the staff salary component under local financial management in maintained schools.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Each LEA was required to devise its own formula having regard to local needs and circumstances and after consultation with the governing body and head teacher of all the schools that will be covered by its LMS scheme. The formula must be based on an assessment of schools' objective needs and conform to the requirements of the Education Reform Act and the guidance in circular 36/88.

Hospital Closures

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will make it his policy to ensure that no Welsh health authority implements a decision to close a geriatric hospital on a temporary basis without full consultation with the appropriate county social services department and voluntary organisations;

(2) if he will make it his policy to treat all proposed temporary hospital closures in South Glamorgan as though they were proposals for permanent hospital closures, for the purpose of the consultation procedure laid down.

Mr. Grist: We have no plans to change the present policy in respect of hospital closures in this context. This recognises that temporary closures can be part of the day-to-day management of the resources of a health authority and an issue for local decision. None the less, any such closure amounting to a substantial change in service is subject to such advance consultation as is reasonably possible with the relevant community health council. We would always expect health authorities to give full and careful consideration to the needs of patients when making alternative provision for them.

Inflation

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will make it his policy to recompense health authorities for the financial year 1990-91 for the underestimation by the Government of the rate of inflation for 1989 as measured by the Government's published retail price index;

(2) what financial assistance he will make available to South Glamorgan health authority to make good its published estimated financial deficit for the year 1990-91;

(3) what proposals he has for recompensing health authorities drawing up their budgets for the next financial year for the underestimation of inflation, both as measured by the retail price index and by the sectoral health service price index in the year just finished.

Mr. Grist: I would refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to the hon. Member for Cardiff, North (Mr. Jones), on 11 January. He will note that the recurrent revenue cash increase for hospital and community health services in Wales is 8·2 per cent. and, in addition, health authorities are expected to realise, as a minimum, a further 1·3 per cent. from new cash-releasing cost improvement and income-generation schemes. This gives an effective increase in resources of at least 9·5 per cent.

The estimated excess cost of inflation to be met by authorities in 1989-90 was 1·72 per cent. The recurrent effect of this leaves an increase of almost 7·8 per cent. available for hospital and community health services in Wales in 1990-91 which represents a real terms increase of nearly 3 per cent. after taking account of the 5 per cent. forecast of general inflation given in the Chancellor's Autumn Statement.

The figures will vary as between authorities in Wales depending on the funding they receive for centrally directed developments and the distribution of equalisation provision in accordance with the latest formula assessment relative to resource requirements. The latter is included in the figures given for initial allocations to authorities in my earlier reply.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place copies in the Library of the correspondence between his Department and the South Glamorgan health authority regarding financial recompense in the setting of the authority's 1990-91 budget for the underestimation of the rate of inflation in the current year.

Mr. Grist: Apart from follow-up action to the annual review meeting which is referred to in a separate reply given to the hon. Gentleman today there has been no correspondence between the Department and South Glamorgan health authority regarding the funding of the excess costs of 1989-90 inflation.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place copies in the Library of the minutes of meetings between his Department and Welsh health authorities regarding financial recompense in the setting of the authorities 1990-91 budgets for the underestimation of the rate of inflation in the current year.

Mr. Grist: I presume the hon. Gentleman is referring to the annual review meetings between the Department and Welsh health authorities which were held during the autumn and which included discussion of authorities' 1989-90 financial positions. By mutual agreement these meetings were not minuted, but points of action arising are being pursued with individual authorities. Where authorities projected overspending due to higher than expected inflation during the current financial year, they were reminded of the need to maintain budgetary control and requested to provide details of how they planned to restore financial balance.

School Staff Salary Budgets

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received regarding the formula for calculating school staff salary budgets under local financial management for maintaned schools.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: We have received a number of representations from local education authorities, governing bodies and head teachers of schools, and teacher unions.

South Glamorgan Health Authority

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he next expects to meet the chairman and general manager of South Glamorgan health authority; and what matters he expects to discuss.

Mr. Grist: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has no immediate plans to meet the chairman and general manager of South Glamorgan health authority.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give for each district health authority and for Wales as a whole the numbers of (a) acute beds and (b) non-acute beds for each year since 1979.

Mr. Grist: The information is shown in the following table:

Welsh Language Studies

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list by grade the total number of staff in his Department above the principal who are able to fulfil the whole of their responsibilities in the Welsh language.

Mr. Wyn Roberts [holding answer 23 January 1990]: No such criterion is used; but the following information relates to numbers of Welsh speakers above grade 7 (principal):

1 Grade 2
4 Grade 3
1 Grade 4
14 Grade 5
39 Grade 6.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list by grade those of his officials whose duties are related solely to the Welsh language.

Mr. Wyn Roberts [holding answer 23 January 1990]: The information is as follows:

1 HEO
2 EO
1 AO
2 Typists

Other staff who are primarily responsible for Welsh language matters also have other duties. In addition, there is a range of posts across my Department in which Welsh language matters form part of the duties of officials.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the applicability of the Council of Europe's charter on minority language to the Welsh language and Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts [holding answer 23 January 1990]: The Government's policies in relation to the Welsh language compare very favourably with the measures outlined in the Council of Europe's draft charter on regional and minority languages.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when and for how long he last visited Nant Gwrtheyrn, on official business.

Mr. Peter Walker [holding answer 23 January 1990]: I have not yet been able to visit the national language centre at Nant Gwrtheyrn.

CADW

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the annual expenditure of CADW in each financial year since its establishment.

Mr. Wyn Roberts [holding answer 23 January 1990]: The information requested is shown in the following table:

Outturn
1984-85	3,611
1985-86	6,205
1986-87	4,173
1987-88	5,806
1988-89	5,250
Plans
1989-90	5,907

Welsh Office

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the legislation for which the Welsh Office has been the sponsoring Department since 1980.

Mr. Peter Walker [holding answer 23 January 1990]: My Department has sponsored the following two items of primary legislation since 1980.

Conwy Tunnel (Supplementary Powers) Act 1983
Welsh Development Agency Act [redacted]8

Simultaneous Translations

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what are the responsibilities of his Department's translation unit with regard to simultaneous translation at meetings;

(2) what provision exists within the Welsh Office for simultaneous translation at meetings involving outside bodies.

Mr. Wyn Roberts [holding answer 23 January 1990]: The main conference room in the Welsh Office has simultaneous translation facilities. The Welsh Office translation unit can arrange for interpreters to be available as needed.

HEALTH

Leukaemia

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will be in a position to give figures of cancer registration data for cases of diagnosed leukaemia in children by (a) each year since 1985 to date and (b) by regional health authority.

Mr. Freeman: OPCS publishes annual cancer statistics using data collected by 11 regional registries and the Wales cancer registry which are funded by the regional health authorities. The timing of publications is largely governed by when the slowest regional cancer registry provides OPCS with data. For 1985, data from the last registry were not received until September 1989. Additionally, publication of 1985 data has been affected by amendments made to the presentation of the data following consultation between OPCS and users of the data. The targets for the publication of data for individuals diagnosed in 1985 and 1986 are March and July 1990 respectively.

Immunisation

Mrs. Currie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the most recent results for the immunisation campaign using the multiple mumps, rubella, measles vaccine; and what were the targets announced in 1988.

Mr. Freeman: As measles, mumps and rubella (MMR) vaccine was introduced in October 1988, the mid-point of the financial year, full uptake figures are not yet available. However, over the first 15 months since the vaccine's launch, more than 3 million doses have been distributed. This is double the calculated requirement for the two priority groups: children aged 12 to 15 months and those attending for their pre-school boosters. The most encouraging results can be seen in the weekly notification for measles. Notifications for 1989 have been at the lowest recorded levels and this is likely to be a direct consequence of the keen support of the MMR programme. The uptake targets remain those agreed for the European region of the World Health Organisation—90 per cent. by 1990 for measles, tetanus, polio and whooping cough—and we hope to reach those targets in the financial year 1990-91.

Hearing-related Problems

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is (a) the current maximum waiting time and (b) the number of people waiting for consultations for hearing-related problems in the Sheffield district health authority.

Mr. Freeman: At 31 March 1989 the maximum waiting time for a first appointment in the ear, nose and throat specialty in Sheffield health authority was 70 weeks. The number of people waiting is not collected centrally and the hon. Member may care to contact the chairman of Sheffield health authority for this information.

Hearing Aids

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current average and maximum delay between the prescription of a hearing aid, and its supply and fitting in the Sheffield district health authority.

Mr. Freeman: This information is not held centrally. I suggest the hon. Member contacts the chairman of Sheffield health authority for the information he seeks.

Monica Prospero

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement as to why it took 10 years to agree damages to Monica Prospero, following an abortion at Nottingham City hospital that went wrong; how the various percentage elements of the claim were calculated; and whether the health authority has now written to her apologising for the error.

Mr. Freeman: Claims for damages are entirely a matter for the health authority concerned, the claimants and their authorised representatives.

West Midlands Ambulance Personnel

Mr. Denis Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he can now report upon the result of his inquiries into the letter written to all West Midlands ambulance personnel on 18 December by the regional general manager of the West Midlands health authority threatening them and any passengers they might carry with prosecution under the Theft Act; if he has now been able to make inquiries into all the matters submitted to him in the memorandum provided by the Birmingham group of Labour hon. Members; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The letter of 18 December from the general manager of West Midlands regional health authority to all West Midlands ambulance personnel pointed out that if ambulance personnel drive an ambulance when not authorised by the authority they may be liable to prosecution. This is a factually correct statement. Of course, if ambulance crews turn out in response to a control room this would not apply and West Midlands ambulance personnel are well aware that if they are responding to a call from ambulance control they are authorised to use ambulance service vehicles.

The memorandum submitted to me on behalf of several right hon. and hon. Members for Birmingham constituencies dated 17 January concerns local operational matters which are the responsibility of the West Midlands regional health authority and I will pass the memorandum on to the chairman of that authority so that he can respond.

Social Workers (Training)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many social workers have successfully undertaken training programmes, approved by the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work, in order to qualify as mental health officers under the Mental Health Act 1984, in each of the area health authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: In England and Wales, approved social workers are appointed in accordance with section 114 of the Mental Health Act 1983. It is for individual social services authorities to determine how many approved social workers they need to appoint in the light of local circumstances. Information is not available centrally on how many social workers have successfully undertaken training programmes to qualify as approved social workers.

Personal Health Information

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress his Department has made on issuing a health circular on ownership, confidentiality and disclosure of personal health information in the National Health Service; and when he expects to be able to announce the results of the consultation process.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I can add nothing further at this stage to the reply I gave my hon. Friend on 13 December at column 681.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many secure units exist in each region and for England as a whole in National Health Service hospitals; and what was the number of beds in secure units for each year since 1979.

Mr. Freeman: There are now 21 regional secure units (RSUs). All regions have at least one, except South West Thames which is at an advanced planning stage. South Western and North Western RHAs each have two secure units, Oxford has three and South East Thames has five. The remaining nine regions have one each. Because of changes in the way the information has been collected since 1980, when the first permanent RSU was opened, it is not possible to provide comparative figures over time. In 1989 there were 660 available and staffed beds in RSUs, including interim units.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give for each year since 1979 and for each district health authority, Scottish health authority, regional health authority and for England the numbers of (a) acute beds and (b) non-acute beds.

Mr. Freeman: Information for 1988-89 has been placed in the Library. For the information for 1979 to 1987-88, I refer the hon. Member to figures which were placed in the Library in connection with my reply to him of 16 May 1989 at column 145. Figures for Scotland are a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Yorkshire Regional Health Authority

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people are employed by the Yorkshire regional health authority headquarters and administration; and if he will list the 20 highest paid personnel and indicate their duties for 1990-91 and for each of the past five years.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: At 30 September 1988 there were 3,230 staff in post. This includes consultants and senior registrars whose contracts are held by headquarters but who may work elsewhere in the authority. The further information required is not held centrally. My hon. Friend may like to approach the chairman of Yorkshire regional health authority.

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total amount of funding available from his Department to the Yorkshire regional health authority for 1990-91 and for each of the past five years; and on what basis this is allocated to the district health authorities in Yorkshire.

Mr. Freeman: The table shows total revenue allocations to the Yorkshire regional heath authority since 1985-86.

	£ million
1985-86	686·2
1986-87	739·2
1987-88	816·0
1988-89	892·6
1989-90	[1]965·5

[1] provisional

Initial cash limits for 1990-91 will be announced shortly.

Allocations to districts are a matter for regions. My hon. Friend may wish to write to the chairman of the Yorkshire regional health authority seeking the information she requires about allocations to districts within the region.

NHS Spending (Dewsbury)

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the new Dewsbury general hospital and the problems of underfunding it now faces.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Based on resource assumptions for 1990-91 Dewsbury health authority will receive a recurrent cash allocation of £33·8 million: this represents a cash increase of 8·6 per cent., and a real terms increase of 2·8 per cent. over 1989-90. For the three-year period to 1990-91 the district will have received over £2 million in growth money. The funding of individual hospitals is the responsibility of the district health authority concerned.

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total amount of money available for National Health Service health care for Dewsbury health authority for 1990-91; and what was the figure for each of the previous 10 years.

Mr. Freeman: Allocations to Dewsbury health authority are a matter for the Yorkshire regional health authority. My hon. Friend may wish to write to the chairman of the Yorkshire RHA for the information she requires.

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received about the imminent closure of approximately 60 beds, in the new hospital by Dewsbury district health authority.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: My hon. Friend made a representation about the financial position of Dewsbury health authority last October to which my noble Friend Baroness Hooper has responded.

Contingency Fund

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what guidance he has given to (a) district health authorities and (b) Dewsbury on what patient care their contingency fund should be spent on;

(2) what guidance he has given to (a) district health authorities and (b) Dewsbury on what is a realistic amount of money to have in their contingency fund;

(3) what guidance he has given to (a) district health authorities and (b) Dewsbury as to on what contingency their contingency fund should be spent on.

Mr. Freeman: None.

Dewsbury District Health Authority

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he last met the chairman of Dewsbury district health authority; what matters were discussed; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: My right hon. amd learned Friend the Secretary of State has not met the chairman of Dewsbury health authority recently.

Homosexuality

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the Government's policy concerning the fostering or adoption of children by homosexual couples in stable, long-term relationships.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Courts and child care and adoption agencies are required to give first consideration to promoting and safeguarding a child's welfare. Agencies must act within a framework of primary legislation and regulations which lay serious obligations on agencies to safeguard the welfare of children. These include requirements for thorough investigation and assessment of individual prospective foster parents and adopters. The law does not allow two people to adopt jointly unless they are married.

Disablement Services Authority

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what powers he has in relation to the Disablement Services Authority and the provision of artificial limbs;

(2) which part of his Department is responsible for the Disablement Services Authority.

Mr. Freeman: The Disablement Services Authority is a special health authority with full responsibility for the provision of artificial limbs and appliances. The authority is accountable directly to my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State, whose powers in respect of it are the same as those in respect of all other health authorities. General oversight of the DSA is the responsibility of the deputy secretary, health and personal social services policy, supported as necessary by parts of the Department.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the average waiting time for an artificial limb (a) in 1986-87 and (b) currently.

Mr. Freeman: This is a matter for the Disablement Services Authority to which the hon. Member should address his question.

Family Practitioner Committees

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the general managers of family practioners committees, their qualifications and their date of appointment.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 22 January 1990]: The available information is contained in the following list. Information about the academic, professional or other qualifications of individual general managers is not held centrally. This is a matter for each family practitioner committee as the employing authority.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Young Offenders

2. Mr. Dover: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the figures for attendance at court by parents in cases where their children who are aged under 18 years are being tried.

53. Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the figures for attendance at court by parents in cases where their children who are aged under 18 years are being tried.

69. Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the figures for attendance at court by parents in cases where their children who are aged under 18 years are being tried.

Mr. John Patten: When juveniles under 17 appear in court charged with criminal offences the court has the power to require their parents to attend. We do not have statistics on parental attendance, but they should always be there, taking their responsibility.

44. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he intends to take to make parents more accountable for the behaviour of their own children below the age of 16 years.

102. Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about his proposals to increase the responsibilities of parents whose children are charged with criminal offences.

Mr. John Patten: We propose to strengthen courts' powers to require parents to attend court with their children and pay fines and compensation orders imposed on their children. We also intend to widen courts' powers to bind over parents to take proper care of and exercise proper control over their children who are convicted of criminal offences.

124. Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what reaction he has received to his proposal to make parents of young offenders obliged to attend court and to take greater responsibility for their children's behaviour.

Mr. John Patten: It is well recognised that parents have an important responsibility for their children's behaviour, and my right hon. and learned Friend's proposals have been widely welcomed.

128. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many young people aged under 17 years are locked up in prison establishments at the present time.

Mr. Mellor: According to the records held centrally, which are approximate, on 30 June 1989 about 620 persons aged under 17 were held in prison service establishments in England and Wales.

Violent Crime

10. Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will now announce new initiatives to combat crimes of violence.

68. Mr. Buckley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will now announce new initiatives to combat crimes of violence.

141. Mr. Archer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will now announce new initiatives to combat the rising number of crimes of violence.

Mr. John Patten: The most effective crime prevention initiatives are taken locally to tackle local problems. Action already taken by Government includes higher penalties for violent offences; increases in police manpower and resources; and measures to deal with drug trafficking, terrorism and alcohol-related disorder.

97. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much was paid out in the form of compensation to the victims of violent crime in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. John Patten: The Criminal Injuries Compensation Board paid out £69,381,286 in compensation in the year ended 31 March 1989.

Birmingham Pub Bombings

11. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last discussed the Birmingham pub bombings case with the assistant chief constable of West Yorkshire, Mr. Shaw; and if he will make a statement.

42. Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last discussed the Birmingham pub bombings case with the assistant chief constable of West Yorkshire, Mr. Shaw; and if he will make a statement.

133. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last discussed the Birmingham pub bombings case with the assistant chief constable of West Yorkshire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. and learned Friend has not discussed this case with Mr. Shaw. However, officials in the Home Office have maintained close contact with the Police Complaints Authority, which is supervising Mr. Shaw's investigations into the West Midlands serious crime squad. We will consider carefully whether anything emerges from this investigation which might cast doubt on the safety of the convictions of the Birmingham Six.

17. Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last discussed the Birmingham pub bombings case with the Director of Public Prosecutions; and if he will make a statement.

58. Mr. Wall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last discussed the Birmingham pub bombings case with the Director of Public Prosecutions; and if he will make a statement.

129. Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last discussed the Birmingham pub bombings case with the Director of Public Prosecutions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. and learned Friend has not discussed this case with the Director of Public Prosecutions.

34. Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last discussed the Birmingham pub bombings case with the chief constable of the West Midlands; and if he will make a statement.

51. Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last discussed the Birmingham pub bombings case with the chief constable of the West Midlands; and if he will make a statement.

55. Mr Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last discussed the Birmingham pub bombings case with the chief constable of the West Midlands; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. and learned Friend has not discussed this case with the chief constable.

35. Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met the Foreign Minister of Ireland to discuss the Birmingham pub bombings; and if he will make a statement.

50. Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met the Foreign Minister of Ireland to discuss the Birmingham pub bombings; and if he will make a statement.

107. Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met the Foreign Minister of Ireland to discuss the Birmingham pub bombings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I refer the hon. Members to the reply given earlier to a question from the hon. Member for Hackney, South and Shoreditch (Mr. Sedgemore).

43. Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a further statement on the case of the Birmingham Six.

62. Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received on behalf of the Birmingham Six.

78. Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration he has given to representations he has received concerning the Birmingham Six.

88. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects the investigation into the Birmingham Six to take place; and if he will make a statement.

116. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to complete his consideration of the new evidence in the Birmingham bombings case.

139. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to complete his consideration of the new evidence in the Birmingham pub bombings case.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to complete his consideration of the new evidence on the Birmingham pub bombings case.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. and learned Friend is considering very carefully the further material which has been presented to him by a solicitor on behalf of the Birmingham Six, and will decide as soon as possible whether it justifies any intervention on his part.

65. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the West Midlands police officers who were involved in the Birmingham pub bombings case and who have subsequently been (a) gaoled, (b) dismissed, (c) transferred to non-operational duties and (d) severely reprimanded.

93. Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the West Midlands police officers who were involved in the Birmingham pub bombings case and who have subsequently been (a) gaoled, (b) dismissed, (c) transferred to non-operational duties and (d) severely reprimanded.

122. Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the West Midlands police officers who were involved in the Birmingham pub bombings case and who have subsequently been (a) gaoled, (b) dismissed, (c) transferred to non operational duties and (d) severely reprimanded.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: None of the police officers who were involved in interviewing those convicted of the Birmingham pub bombing have subsequently been imprisoned, dismissed from the force or reprimanded. Four of the officers concerned have been transferred to non-operational duties. In the absence of any evidence at this stage that these officers have acted improperly it would be wrong to name them.

Prisons

13. Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the number of mentally handicapped people held in prison in England and Wales.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the number of mentally handicapped people held in prison in England, Wales and Scotland.

Mr. Mellor: On 30 September 1989, the latest date for which figures are available, a total of 329 inmates in the prison system in England and Wales were reported by prison medical officers to be mentally disordered as defined by the Mental Health Act 1983.

14. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were in prison at the most recent count.

Mr. Mellor: On Friday 19 January, 46,755 people were held in prison establishments in England and Wales. The prison population is now 2,146 lower than at the same time last year.

100. Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current prison population; what it was one year ago; and what projections he has made for the prison population over the next five years.

126. Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current project prison population; what it was one year ago; and what projections he has made for the prison population over the next five years.

Mr. Mellor: The prison population in England and Wales on 12 January 1990 was 46,504. The corresponding figure for 13 January 1989 was 48,736, including those held in police cells. The figures are an estimated 1,500 lower than would otherwise be the case due to the usual seasonal fall in the population over Christmas and the new year. Projections of the prison population are published annually in spring, in a Home office statistical bulletin "Projections of long term trends in the prison population" (the latest was issue 11/89, dated 6 April 1989). A revised projection taking account of changes in the prison population in the first half of 1989 and the anticipated effects of further measures to divert offenders from custody agreed in current public expenditure plans is as follows:

Projected prison population, England and Wales

	Numbers
1990-91	51,600
1991-92	53,000
1992-93	54,600
1993-94	56,400
1994-95	58,200

Begging

15. Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what factors governed the time taken to produce the figures covering the number of people in the Metropolitan police district prosecuted in 1988 for begging under section 3 of the Vagrancy Act 1824; when he plans to make the 1989 figures available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The Home Office collects returns from all police forces covering each defendant appearing in court for a criminal offence. Information for 1989 will not be available until autumn 1990. The Home Office is examining whether information could be provided directly from the courts, so reducing delays.

Remand Prisoners

16. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made with the provision of private sector remand places; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We are considering the results of the further study of the cost-effectiveness of private sector involvement in the remand system which my right hon. Friend the Member for Witney (Mr. Hurd) announced in his statement to the House on 1 March 1989. We hope to be able to announce a decision soon.

84. Mr. Fry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current number of remand prisoners held in police cells; and what it was one year ago.

96. Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the latest figures for numbers of remand prisoners held in police cells; and what were the comparable figures six months and one year ago.

139. Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current number of remand prisoners held in police cells; and what it was one year ago.

Mr. Mellor: Yesterday, there were no remand prisoners held in police cells in England and Wales. Comparable figures for 21 July 1989 and 20 January 1989 were 192 and 277 prisoners respectively, most of whom were on remand.

108. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he has taken to ensure that prisoners held on remand are brought to trial within a reasonable period.

Mr. John Patten: Our aim is to reduce both the number of people remanded in custody and the time taken to deal with cases. Bail information schemes are now operating in 42 courts and widespread expansion is planned. These schemes enable the probation service to provide Crown prosecutors with better information on defendants, to help prosecutors decide whether they need to oppose bail. Resources have been provided for the provision of a further 500 places in bail hostels over the next three years.

Custody time limits, first introduced on a limited basis in 1987, are now in operation in most of England and Wales. We intend to extend their operation to the remaining areas—London and eight counties in the south-east—later this year.

Delays in the court system are also being tackled. In the magistrates courts, magistrates and clerks have been urged to concentrate on reducing delays and a new management information system is being introduced. My noble and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor, has taken steps to tackle delays in the Crown court through improved management and the provision of more resources including additional judges and new court rooms. Separate initiatives are in hand on committals procedure and the development of mode of trial guidelines for magistrates, with a view to reducing the numbers committed for trial and accelerating the procedure.

Security Services

18. Mr. Aitken: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he is planning to reduce the numerical strength and resources of the security service in the light of political developments in eastern Europe.

Mr. Waddington: It is not the practice to make detailed announcement on such matters.

Cocaine and Crack

19. Dame Janet Fookes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of seizures of cocaine, in the most recent years for which figures are available, was of cocaine entering the United Kingdom from member states of the European Community.

29. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of seizures of cocaine, in the most recent years for which figures are available, was of cocaine entering the United Kingodm from member states of the European Community.

Mr. Mellor: Provisional figures for 1989 indicate that, of a total of 402 seizures (424 kg) of cocaine by Customs, 27 per cent. by numbers of seizures (62·8 per cent. by weight) were known to have been consigned from or routed through other member states of the European Community. This includes one seizure of 153 kg which originated in Ecuador and arrived at Southampton via Le Havre. The origin of a further 20 per cent. approximately, of the total number of seizures of cocaine by Customs was not known or not recorded. These figures may be compared with 1988 figures showing that fewer than 5 per cent. by number (1·5 per cent. by weight) of cocaine seizures by Customs were known to have originated from or arrived in the United Kingdom via other EC countries. (The figures exclude seizures of cocaine made by the police, for which the country of origin is not generally known.)

33. Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the percentage increase in the number of cases reported over the last year involving the drug crack.

114. Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the percentage increase in the number of cases reported over the last year involving the drug crack.

136. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the percentage increase in the number of cases reported over the last year involving the drug crack.

Mr. Mellor: The provisional total number of seizures of crack reported by the police and Customs in 1989 was 139, an increase of almost 500 per cent. over 1988 (28 seizures).

Drugs

21. Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what amount of illegal drugs coming from outside the European Community have been seized during the last 12 months for which statistics are available; and what was the figure in the previous 12-month period.

Mr. Mellor: At present only provisional figures are available for seizures of controlled drugs made by Customs in 1989. Figures for seizures of heroin, cocaine and cannabis coming from outside the European Community in 1989 are, provisionally, 247 kg of heroin, as against 218 kg in 1988; 158 kg of cocaine, as against 178 kg in 1988; and 25,750 kg of cannabis, as against 34,973 kg in 1988.

Comparable figures for police seizures are unavailable since the country of origin is not generally known or recorded.

26. Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what will be the annual operating cost of the new anti-drugs network recently announced by the Government.

103. Mr. Illsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what will be the annual operating cost of the new anti-drugs network recently announced by the Government.

Mr. Mellor: As I stated in my reply to a question from the hon. Member for Torfaen (Mr. Murphy) on 7 December, subject to Parliament's approval of the Supply Estimates, up to £2·3 million is being made available in 1990-91 for the drug prevention initiative which was announced on 11 October 1989.

39. Mr. Irvine: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures police forces are taking in conjunction with local education authorities to warn pupils of the dangers of drug taking.

Mr. Mellor: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Cambridgeshire, South-East (Mr. Paice) on 5 December at column 176. Since then, Home Office circular 99/1989 has been issued to the police offering ideas on the way forward on police-schools liaison.

89. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many seizures of illicit drugs have been made by police and Her Majesty's Customs and Excise from 1989 to date; and what is the estimated value of drugs seized.

Mr. Mellor: Customs report a provisional total of 8,026 seizures of controlled drugs in 1989. It is estimated that these would have had an equivalent street value of some £250 million. The provisional figures for January 1990 to date are 262 seizures with an estimated street value of £151,000. Comprehensive figures are not yet available for police seizures in 1989 or 1990; the latest information is for 1988 when police made 32,947 seizures and Customs 5,288 seizures of controlled drugs.

91. Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many countries will be represented at the forthcoming world ministerial summit on drug demand reduction.

Mr. Mellor: The world ministerial summit to reduce the demand for drugs and to combat the cocaine threat, which will be held in London from 9 to 11 April, is being organised by Her Majesty's Government in association with the United Nations. Invitations are being extended to the member states of the United Nations, specialised agencies and related organisations, non-member observer states and intergovernmental and other organisations having standing invitations to participate in the sessions and work of the General Assembly as observers. The indications are that most countries will accept the invitation to participate in the work of the conference.

137. Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current establishment of the Police national drugs intelligence unit.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The unit's complement has doubled since it was established in 1985. Including officers serving overseas, it now has a complement of 100 police, Customs and civilian staff.

Special Constables

22. Mr. John Townend: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his policy with regard to expanding the number of special constables.

32. Dr. Goodson-Wicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the number of special constables now attached to police forces in England and Wales; and what steps he will take to encourage chief constables to recruit more, particularly amongst ethnic minority communities.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer my hon. Friends to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Rugby and Kenilworth (Mr. Pawsey) earlier today.

Members' Letters

23. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of letters from hon. Members to his Department are answered within one month; and what plans he has to speed up this rate.

Mr. Waddington: During the final quarter of 1989 about 50 per cent. of letters from hon. Members to the Home Office were answered within one month of their receipt. The underlying trend over recent years has been one of steady improvement in our performance and we hope that hon. Members will see further improvements in our service, not least by their taking increased advantage of the scheme for writing direct to the immigration and nationality department with their more routine inquiries in that area and also by writing direct to local managers about other matters handled away from the centre, where they do not require their letters to be answered personally by Ministers.

Local Government Finance

24. Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what advice or instructions his Department is giving to clerks of magistrates in respect of the expected change in work load following the introduction of the community charge.

Mr. John Patten: None.

Litter

25. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were fined under the Litter Act 1983 in 1989; and what proportion of these received the maximum sentence of £400.

Mr. John Patten: Information for 1989 will not be available until autumn 1990. In 1988, a total of 1,560 people were fined under the Litter Act 1983, of which two (0·1 per cent.) received the maximum fine of £400.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with police organisations about enforcing the present anti-litter laws.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: None, but bodies representing the police service were invited to submit comments on the proposals about litter which are now contained in the Environmental Protection Bill.

Safer Cities Initiative

27. Mr. Waller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many safe cities schemes are now established; how many local initiatives prepared by safer cities teams have now been approved; and in what categories they fall.

60. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many safer cities schemes are now established; how many local initiatives prepared by safer cities teams have now been approved; and in what categories they fall.

Mr. John Patten: Fifteen projects are now operating and one more should be in place next month. Two hundred and sixty grants, totalling over £1·8 million, have now been agreed to support local crime prevention initiatives. The initiatives cover a wide range of activities which come within four broad categories—physical security improvements; activities for young people; changes in local services to take account of the need to prevent crime; and educational and development opportunities for individuals and communities.

Private Security Firms

29. Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to introduce legislation regarding the private security industry.

113. Mr. John P. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to introduce legislation regarding the private security industry.

Mr. John Patten: We have no plans at present to introduce legislation to regulate the activities of the private security industry. However, in the light of the report of a Home Office working group, we have asked officials to consider the scope for improving the self-regulation of the industry.

52. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from the chief constable of the Northumbria police on the need for regulation of the private security guard industry.

Mr. John Patten: Last August we received representations from the chief constable of Northumbria police, in favour of legislation to regulate the private security industry.

Electronic Tagging

30. Mr. Knowles: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the electronic monitoring pilot scheme in Nottingham revealed any technical faults in the equipment used; and whether he will be conducting further trials.

Mr. John Patten: Minor faults in the electronic monitoring equipment used in Nottingham have occurred on 13 occasions, but the trial has shown clearly that the basic technology performs satisfactorily. As indicated in my reply to a question from my hon. Friend on 10 January, we plan to conduct a further trial of electronic monitoring on a larger scale later this year.

47. Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the electronic tagging system.

59. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has for the continuation of tagging.

Mr. John Patten: I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave on 10 January to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Nottingham, East (Mr. Knowles) at columns 626-27.

101. Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons have been electronically tagged in the United Kingdom since pilot schemes commenced.

Mr. John Patten: As of 16 January, 40 defendants have been granted bail subject to the condition that they are electronically monitored.

Serious Crime Squad, West Midlands

31. Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many members of the now-disbanded West Midlands police serious crime squad have now been charged with criminal offences; and in respect of how many former members charges are being considered.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The investigation led by Mr. Donald Shaw into the West Midlands police serious crime squad is still at an early stage. No consideration has yet been given to whether or not to institute criminal proceedings against any officer. In November last year criminal proceedings were instituted against four former members of the serious crime squad, on charges of perjury and attempting to pervert the course of justice. These proceedings followed a separate inquiry by the police.

It would not be appropriate to give details of cases under consideration by the Crown prosecution service which may or may not result in prosecutions of former members of the serious crime squad.

106. Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the progress of the inquiry by West Yorkshire police, under the auspices of the Police Complaints Authority, into the West Midlands police serious crime squad.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will make a statement on the progress of the inquiry by West Yorkshire police, under the auspices of the Police Complaints Authority, into the now-disbanded West Midlands police serious crime squad.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand that the investigation team, led by Mr. Shaw, assistant chief constable of the West Yorkshire police force, is in the process of examining the files relating to all the arrests made by the squad since 1986, and has begun to investigate individual complaints made against officers of the squad. The report of each investigation will be submitted to the Police Complaints Authority and the chief constable of West Midlands as it is completed, and it will be some time before all cases have been examined.

Rape

36. Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made with improving police support for rape victims.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Considerable progress has been made. In order to ensure privacy and comfort for victims it is now normal for the police either to provide special rape examination suites or to utilise facilities in hospitals or doctors' surgeries. Much greater emphasis is being placed on sympathetic and informal treatment of victims, with officers receiving both general awareness training on rape and more specialised training if they are to be directly involved in the investigation of offences.

Summer Time

37. Mr. Forman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the results of his Department's consultation on the possible introduction of single double summer time.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We shall be informing the House of the results in the near future.

127. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department with whom the responsibility for determining the summer time arrangement in the United Kingdom and the rest of Europe from 1993 onwards will lie.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The start and end dates for summer time for 1993 onwards in all member states of the European Community will be determined by negotiation within the EC and ultimately by the Council of Ministers as has been the case since 1981. It is for the United Kingdom alone to determine which time zone it wishes to adopt throughout the year.

Immigration

38. Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) spouses and (b) children were awaiting entry clearance as at 30 November 1989; and if he will make a statement.

73. Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) spouses and (b) children were awaiting entry clearance as at 30 November 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is available only for the Indian sub-continent, where 5,800 spouses and 4,300 children were awaiting a decision on their application for entry clearance for settlement in the United Kingdom at 30 November 1989.

134. Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce a system of language tests for spouses and others seeking migration from the Indian sub-continent.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have no plans to do so.

Safety of Sports Grounds

40. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consultations he has had with the Association of Chief Police Officers and the Association of County Councils on the application of the Safety of Sports Grounds Act.

Mr. John Patten: None.

DNA Testing

41. Mr. Pike; To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when it is proposed to start the DNA testing scheme for applicants for settlement in the United Kingdom.

104. Mr. Cabom: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when it is proposed to start the DNA testing scheme for applicants for settlement in the United Kingdom.

119. Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when it is proposed to start the DNA testing scheme for applicants for settlement in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, Central (Mr. Darling) on 27 November at column 108.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how long it takes to obtain a DNA test in paternity suits for each magistrates court in England and Wales.

Mr. John Patten: Information in the form sought is not readily available. But commercial testers expect to provide reports to courts within four months of a direction to do so.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the cost to the Exchequer of a DNA test in a magistrates court taken for the purposes of a paternity suit.

Mr. John Patten: The parties to the case pay the fees for blood tests ordered by magistrates courts in civil cases. Some parties are legally aided. The maximum fee that may be charged for a court-directed blood test, which may include a DNA test, is £115·90 per sample exclusive of VAT. So, where a party is legally aided, the maximum cost to the Exchequer of a blood test is £115·90 per sample excluding VAT.

Independent Broadcasting Authority

45. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he next plans to meet the chairman of the Independent Broadcasting Authority; and what will be discussed.

123. Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he next plans to meet the chairman of the Independent Broadcasting Authority; and what will be discussed.

143. Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he next plans to meet the chairman of the Independent Broadcasting Authority; and what will be discussed.

Mr. Mellor: I have regular meetings with the chairman of the IBA at which a wide range of broadcasting issues are discussed.

Child Pornography

46. Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received about pornography involving children; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 18 January at column 377 to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Pembroke (Mr. Bennett).

Magistrates Courts

48. Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to improve the efficiency of magistrates courts.

Mr. John Patten: We are still considering the case for legislation to reconstitute the magistrates courts service as an executive agency on the lines proposed in the report of the 1989 scrutiny of magistrates courts. In the meantime we are taking forward a programme of action largely drawn from the report aimed at improving the efficiency and effectiveness of the courts, including the identification and dissemination of best practice on case listing, fine enforcement and other matters; a review of criminal and domestic court procedures; the promotion of court user groups; practical evaluations of pre-trial reviews, new methods of paying fines and the use of bailiffs in executing bail warrants; the preparation of a standard specification for magistrates' courts computers; and the development of resource and other management training programmes for justices' clerks and their staff. As was indicated in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Westminster, North (Sir J. Wheeler) on 9 November 1989 at column 262 our intention is to introduce cash limits on grants supporting current expenditure on magistrates courts.

AIDS (Prisons)

49. Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the action the Government are taking to reduce the spread of HIV among the prison population.

Mr. Mellor: High priority is given to measures to prevent the transmission of HIV infection in prison. The main plank of the prevention strategy is education. Our latest initiative is a new package of education materials, including a video film, entitled "AIDS Inside and Out". Other measures include medical inquiry and examination at the reception stage, counselling of individual prisoners, and limited regime restrictions for prisoners identified as HIV antibody positive.

83. Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons in prison have been diagnosed as HIV positive.

Mr. Mellor: On 17 January 1990 the prison population of England and Wales included 63 prisoners reported as having been identified as HIV antibody positive. By that date 270 such prisoners had been so reported since reporting began in March 1985.

Community Radio

54. Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects community radio franchises to be let in west Hertfordshire.

Mr. Mellor: We understand that the shadow Radio Authority plans in the next few months to invite letters of intent from would-be providers of new local radio services. This will assist it in establishing the nature of the demand in different areas, and in drawing up a plan for the progressive introduction of new stations over several years starting early in 1991. It is not possible at this stage to say what will happen in particular areas.

Greenwich Mean Time

56. Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the implications of European Community regulations for the maintenance in Britain of Greenwich mean time.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There have been no proposals for European Community regulations which would affect the continuation of Greenwich mean time in Britain; and none is expected unless requested by the United Kingdom.

Trevi Group

57. Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he proposes to meet his colleagues in the Trevi Group.

Mr. Waddington: I attended a meeting of Trevi Ministers under the French presidency in Paris on 14 and 15 December. I shall be attending the one to be held under the Irish presidency in Dublin in June.

Crime Statistics

61. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the latest figure for recorded crime in Suffolk.

Mr. John Patten: Information for 1988 was published in tables 2.5 and 2.7 of "Criminal Statistics England and Wales, 1988", Cm 847, a copy of which is available in the Library. Further detailed figures for the 12 months to the end of September 1989 for local police force areas have also been placed in the Library. In the 12 months to September 1989, Suffolk police recorded 31,149 offences —125 more than in the previous 12 months.

Neighbourhood Watch

63. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many neighbourhood watch schemes are currently in operation; and what was the equivalent number for 1979.

87. Mr. David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many neighbourhood watch schemes are now established in England and Wales.

112. Mr. Kirkhope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many neighbourhood watch schemes now exist in England and Wales.

Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many neighbourhood watch schemes are now established in England and Wales.

Mr. John Patten: At the end of September 1989 there were estimated to be in the region of 75,000 neighbourhood watch schemes in England and Wales. There were no schemes operating in 1979.

Crime Prevention

64. Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will next meet the Association of Chief Police Officers to discuss new initiatives in crime prevention.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. and learned Friend has at present, no plans to meet the Association of Chief Police Officers to discuss crime prevention. Home Office officials regularly meet representatives of ACPO to consider aspects of this subject and expect to be consulting the association in the near future about new inter-departmental guidance on crime prevention.

71. Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will next meet the AMA to discuss new ways of preventing crime.

Mr. John Patten: Home Office officials expect to be consulting the Association of Metropolitan Authorities and other bodies in the near future about new interdepartmental guidance on this subject.

Coach Parking (London)

66. Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to how many no-coach-parking signs have been ordered by the Metropolitan police, in each of the last five years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand that the Metropolitan police currently hold a stock of approximately 40 'no coach parking' signs which are distributed according to local demand.

Dogs

67. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he proposes to introduce any proposals which would seek to restrict those allowed to be in charge of dogs in public to persons over 16 years of age.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No. This is a matter over which we would expect all dog owners to exercise discretion.

National Lottery

70. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received concerning the possible introduction of a national lottery.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: In the 12 months to 16 January 1990, we received letters from 19 hon. Members and from seven members of the public either advocating, or inquiring about the merits of, a lottery or lotteries with major prizes, on a national scale, and one previous parliamentary question about any legislative plans which we might have in this respect.

Fines

72. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the introduction of day or unit fines.

125. Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration he is giving to the introduction of day or unit fines; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Experiments in four magistrates courts have suggested that a unit fine system can be operated successfully. Subject to a full evaluation of these experiments, we are likely to propose a legislative framework for unit fines.

Prison Building

74. Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the prison building programme.

75. Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the prison building programme.

Mr. Mellor: The prison building programme continues to make good progress. Out of the full programme of 28 new prisons, eight have already opened and 14 are at various stages of planning and construction, leaving only six on which construction work has not yet started. Construction is, however, planned to begin on two of these in 1991-92 and 1992-93. Sites and planning permissions are being sought for the four remaining prisons, but decisions on when and where to start building them have been deferred pending further analysis of the lower projected prison population.

The changes in the projections have allowed the emphasis of the prison building programme to be changed from building new prisons to speeding up improvements to the existing estate. Essential health, safety and security measures are now being brought forward, while at the same time progress is being maintained on a wide range of refurbishment and redevelopment work already under way at many establishments. Some of these developments involve virtually rebuilding older prisons which are in such excellent locations that they need to be preserved. Most important to the general quality of life in the older prisons, a substantial reduction in slopping out is a major part of the expanded programme.

Corporal Punishment

76. Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to reintroduce corporal punishment for serious crimes of violence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: No. Corporal punishment was abolished in 1948. Its reintroduction would be contrary to the United Kingdom's obligations under the European convention on human rights.

Juvenile Crime

77. Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of reported crime was committed by juveniles in the years 1978 and 1988.

Mr. John Patten: The available information relates to the number of offenders who were cautioned by the police or convicted for indictable offences by the courts. In 1978, 34 per cent. of those cautioned or convicted were juveniles and in 1988 the figure was 23 per cent. Such information is available from "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales", 1988 (table 5.22), a copy of which is in the Library.

Drug Trafficking

79. Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the latest totals for assets confiscated from convicted drug traffickers, and assets frozen, pending trials for drug trafficking offences.

Mr. John Patten: The figures are substantially as given in answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Beaconsfield (Mr. Smith) on 7 December at column 381, except that the national drugs intelligence unit's current estimate is that more than £16 million has been ordered to be confiscated since the Drug Trafficking Offences Act came into force in January 1987.

142. Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment has been made of the efficiency of the Drugs Trafficking Offences Act 1986 in dealing with drug traffickers.

Mr. Mellor: The Government have kept the provisions of the Drug Trafficking Offences Act under close scrutiny since they came into effect in January 1987. The Act has worked well and has been a major weapon in the fight against drug trafficking, both domestically and internationally. In a recent case, for example, nearly £3 million was ordered to be confiscated from a group of convicted drug traffickers, bringing current estimates of the total ordered to be confiscated under the Act to more than £16 million.

The Government accept, however, that a provision of such significance may need adjustment in the light of experience. Some changes to the drug trafficking and money laundering provisions, to bring them fully into line with the requirements of the 1988 United Nations convention against illicit drug trafficking, are proposed in the Criminal Justice (International Cooperation) Bill, now before Parliament. The Government are also considering the relevant recommendations of the Home Affairs Committee report on drug trafficking and related serious crime (HC 370), and is discussing with practitioners how the working of the Act might be further improved. This is a continuing process, and the Government will not hesitate to make any changes which may be found to be necessary.

144. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the extent of drug trafficking in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Mellor: The ministerial group on the misuse of drugs, which I chair, receives regular assessments of the extent of drug misuse and trafficking in the United Kingdom. The picture as regards heroin is mixed: although provisional figures show an increase in Customs seizures in 1989 of over 40 per cent. to 332 kilos, latest reports indicate a levelling off in some areas in the supply of heroin at street level. It is, however, clear that the United Kingdom is facing an increasing threat from cocaine: provisional figures of Customs seizures of this drug in 1989 increased by some 50 per cent. to 424 kilos and more cocaine than heroin has been seized by Customs in each of the past three years. Traffic in other drugs such as amphetamines, cannabis, LSD and MDMA (ecstasy) remains of concern.

Victims of Crime

80. Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on Government funding for victim support.

105. Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on Government funding for victim support.

Mr. John Patten: In 1989-90 the Home Office granted £3·7 million for local victims support schemes and £210,000 to victim support headquarters. Details of funding for 1990-91 will be published shortly in the public expenditure White Paper.

Rehabilitation of Offenders

81. Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will re-examine the working of the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act; and if he will make a statement.

85. Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the working of the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act.

Mr. John Patten: The working of the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974 is kept under review. Much of the pressure for change is to extend the categories which are excepted from the provisions of the Act. We consider that the Act does, on the whole, strike a reasonable balance between the need to protect the interests of the public and the interests of former offenders.

The effectiveness of the Act depends on its provisions being made known to ex-offenders. With that aim we issue free of charge large numbers of the leaflet "Wiping the Slate Clean", which is available for example, to all citizens advice bureaux.

Visas

82. Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made towards a common visa regime within the EEC after 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Members for Ashfield (Mr. Haynes) and for Caerphilly (Mr. Davies) earlier this afternoon.

Ambulance Dispute

86. Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the costs to date to the Metropolitan police force arising from the ambulance dispute.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The costs incurred by the Metropolitan police in providing assistance are recoverable. I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that claims for £1·5 million for the period up to 19 November have been presented and paid. Claims for a further £3·4 million for the period up to the end of December have been submitted.

Knives

90. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions have been brought under the Criminal Justice Act 1988 provisions banning the public carrying of knives.

Mr. John Patten: Section 139 of the Criminal Justice Act 1988 came into force on 29 September 1988. During 1988, there were 150 prosecutions for this offence. Information for 1989 will not be available until autumn 1990.

West Midlands Police

92. Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met the chief constable of the West Midlands police; and what was discussed.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. and learned Friend has had no meetings with the chief constable since he took office as Home Secretary.

BBC

94. Mr. Robert Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he next proposes to meet the chairman of the British Broadcasting Corporation; and what matters he intends to discuss.

Mr. Mellor: I meet the chairman of the BBC regularly in order to discuss a wide range of broadcasting issues.

Video Surveillance

95. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any proposals to bring the regulation of video surveillance into line with article 8 of the European convention on human rights; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: I am not persuaded that video surveillance is inconsistent with article 8 of the convention.

Passports

98. Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimated response time to postal applications for passports during the Easter and summer peak periods as well as off-peak periods.

117. Ms. Quinn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimated response time to postal applications for passports during the Easter and summer peak periods and in off-peak periods.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The passport department will be aiming in 1990 to process all straightforward, non-urgent passport applications within a maximum of 30 working days during the peak period between January and June, and within 20 working days at other times. Urgent cases will receive priority and should not normally be subject to delay.

Director of Public Prosecutions

99. Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met the Director of Public Prosecutions; and what was discussed.

Mr. John Patten: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given earlier to the question from the hon. Member for Oxford, East (Mr. Smith).

Under-age drinking

109. Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has considered extending the powers of the police to suppress under-age drinking of alcohol; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The Licensing Act 1988 made it easier for police to take action against landlords who sell alcohol to people under 18. I am satisfied that police powers in enforcing the licensing law are sufficient and effective. There is also a part for schools to play in providing health education about the dangers of alcohol misuse, and for parents in discouraging their children from drinking alcohol.

Punishment in the Community

110. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a further statement on his policy on punishment within the community.

Mr. John Patten: The Government's legislative proposals for punishment in the community will be explained in a White Paper on criminal justice, which we hope to publish shortly.

Sunday Trading

111. Mr. Couchman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has considered the implications of the judgement of the European Court of Justice on Torfaen borough council against B and Q concerning Sunday trading; and if he will make a further statement.

Mr. Mellor: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to the question from my hon. Friend the Member for Swindon (Mr. Coombs) on 7 December 1989 at columns 463-64. It is now for the courts which made referrals to the European Court to determine their cases in the light of the judgment of the court.

Vandalism

115. Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he collects on the current annual number of prosecutions in the United Kingdom against vandals using paint spray aerosol cans to deface walls in public places.

Mr. John Patten: No information is separately collected on such prosecutions. Such offences are included as criminal damage in the statistics collected by the Home Office.

Police Manpower

118. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many additional police posts are to be created for 1990-91; and what proportion of these will be allocated to provincial forces.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Bosworth (Mr. Tredinnick) on 23 November 1989, at column 12.

13. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the adequency of the present strength of the Devon and Cornwall police force.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. and learned Friend with advice from Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary, has decided to approve an increase of 17 posts for the Devon and Cornwall constabulary with effect from 1 April 1990.

Drink-related Crime

12. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of criminal offences by young adults are drink-related.

Mr. John Patten: A total of 9 per cent. of young adults (those between 17 and 20) convicted in 1988, the latest year for which figures are available were convicted of drunkeness or drink-driving offences. No reliable estimate can be made of the extent to which the offences for the remaining 91 per cent. convicted were alcohol related.

Regional Crime Squads (Drugs Investigations)

121. Mr. Andrew Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers are now employed in regional crime squad drugs wings.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There were 232 officers on the strength of regional crime squads drugs wings on 16 January. In No. 9 region, which covers the Metropolitan police district, drugs investigation is not undertaken by the regional squad but by the Metropolitan police central drugs squad. Its strength on 16 January was 110.

My right hon. and learned Friend announced on 23 November at columns 12-13 that he is prepared to approve a further 51 police posts for regional crime squads specifically for their work in connection with drugs.

Terrorism

131. Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will report on progress in the fight against international terrorism.

Mr. Waddington: We continue to work vigorously with like-minded countries to strengthen the international co-operation which is crucial in preventing and combating international terrorism. The 44th United Nations General Assembly recently reaffirmed its unequivocal opposition to terrorism and urged all Governments to act firmly against it. Practical measures are being developed in bodies like the International Civil Aviation Organisation, which as part of its continuing work to improve aviation security is making good progress on a new international regime for marking explosives for detection. In the Trevi Group, EC member states have strengthened their procedures for informing one another about terrorist threats and incidents and counter terrorist measures. The group is studying further measures such as action against the financial base of terrorist groups.

The fruit of such co-operation can be seen in the current prosecutions in Europe and the United States of a number of people suspected of involvement in terrorist activities threatening United Kingdom interests.

Religious Broadcasting

132. Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received about religious broadcasting; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We have recently received written and oral representations on these matters from a number of groups and individuals, and we are taking careful account of the views put to us. The Broadcasting Bill retains certain safeguards, closely based on provisions in existing legislation, against abuse of religious broadcasting. But it provides for a less restrictive regime for religious sponsorship and advertising, and would also allow Christian and other religious groups to own radio stations in the United Kingdom for the first time. More generally, it proposes a framework under which the number of outlets for religious broadcasting could increase significantly.

Police Rent Allowance

135. Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement concerning the outcome of representations he has received on his decision to set aside certain elements of the police negotiating board's recommendations on rent allowance.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Draft regulations that would give effect to my right hon. and learned Friend's decisions on the police negotiating board's recommendations were sent to the board for comment on 4 January. The board was asked to submit any comments by 26 January and my right hon. and learned Friend met representatives of the staff side of the board on 17 January. We shall carefully consider their representations before laying regulations before Parliament.

Television Shopping

140. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the European directive on broadcasting in so far as it relates to television shopping.

Mr. Mellor: The EC directive on broadcasting, which was adopted on 3 October 1989, provides in article 18 that member states shall limit to no more than one hour per day the broadcasting of forms of advertisements such as direct offers to the public for the sale, purchase or rental of products or for the provisions of services. Article 20 enables member states to lay down different conditions in respect of broadcasts intended solely for reception within their national boundaries and which may not be received, directly or indirectly, in one or more other member states.

The Government are currently considering the detailed implementation of the directive, which must be complied with by 2 October 1991 at the latest.

Prison Medical Officers

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of prison hospital officers have nursing qualifications; what is the complement of full-time and part-time prison medical officers in England and Wales; and how many posts in each category are currently filled.

Mr. Mellor: About 13 per cent. of hospital officers hold a recognised nursing qualification. Of 117 authorised full-time medical officer posts 110 are currently filled. The corresponding figures for part-time medical officer posts are 129 and 112.

Deaths

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list by year since 1980, the number of persons who have died (a) while in police care and (b) through police shootings.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The number of persons who died while in police care has been published, since 1980, in the annual reports of the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis, in respect of the Metropolitan police district and Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Constabulary, for all other police forces. Since 1982 the statistics have included brief details of the circumstances surrounding the death, and from 1987 information about persons who have died as a result of injuries caused by police officers acting in the execution of their duty. Information which is not recorded in the annual reports is not available centrally.

Dr. Sinha

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on when Dr. Sinha, a constituent of the hon. Member for Newham, North-East, will be told of the further allegations to be made against him or informed that no charges are to be made.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: It is understood that a meeting has been arranged for 25 January, at which time Dr. Sinha, in the presence of his solicitor, will be interviewed by police officers about the further allegations that have been made against him.

Forensic Science

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on shortages in the forensic science available to the police and to his Department.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: In its reply to the Home Affairs Select Committee report in May the Government accepted the difficulties facing the Home Office forensic science service in keeping pace with the demands on it. Eighteen additional staff have been recruited to the service and at least 10 more have been approved for 1990-91, bringing the total staff in post up to 598. Work is also in hand to improve the way in which the service's available resources are used to meet the needs of its customers.

Horserace Betting Levy Board

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list in the Official Report the names of the chairman and members of the Horserace Betting Levy Board, their periods of office, their annual remuneration and the organisations and associations from which they were recruited, selected and appointed.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Section 24(2) of the Betting, Gaming and Lotteries Act 1963 provides that the levy board shall consist of a chairman and seven other members, of whom the chairman and two other members shall be appointed by the Secretary of State. Following is the information requested as to the names, periods of office and remuneration of the chairman and those two other members:

Name	First appointed	Expiry of present appointment	Annual salary with effect from 1 January 1990
Sir Ian Trethowan (Chairman)	1 October 1982	31 December 1990	£33,300
Sir Patrick Meaney (Deputy Chairman)	18 March 1985	28 February 1991	£13,300
Mrs. Anna McCurley	1 April 1988	31 March 1991	£ 9,950

Those appointed to the board by the Secretary of State are to be persons who he is satisfied have no interests connected with horseracing which might hinder them from discharging their functions as members of the board in an impartial manner. At the time of their respective appointments, Sir Ian Trethowan had recently been the Director-General of the BBC, Sir Patrick Meaney was (and is) chairman of the Rank Organisation, and Mrs. McCurley was a public relations executive with Dewe Rogerson and formerly the hon. Member for Renfrew, West and Inverclyde.

Section 24(2) of the 1963 Act further provides that the other members of the levy board shall comprise three appointed by the Jockey Club, one of whom is now customarily the chairman of the Horseracing Advisory Council (HAC), and the chairmen for the time being of the Bookmakers' Committee and of the Horserace Totalisator Board (the Tote) respectively. In their capacity as members of the levy board, these members receive expenses only. The names of these five members, and information as to the capacities in which they sit as members of the levy board and their periods of appointment, are as follows:

Name	Appointed by or as	First appointed	Expiry of current appointment
Mr. M. E. Wates	The Jockey Club	1 January 1987	31 July 1990
Captain H. M. Gosling	The Jockey Club	1 July 1989	31 July 1992
Sir Nevil Macready Bt. CBE (Chairman, HAC)	The Jockey Club (ex-officio)	2 September 1986	1 September 1990
Mr. L. P. Cowburn	Chairman of the Bookmakers' Committee	24 October 1989	23 October 1991
Lord Wyatt of Weeford	Chairman of the Tote	1 May 1976	30 April 1991

Mr. Kevin Taylor

Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Greater Manchester as to what measures are being taken to ensure the security and preservation of all police operational logs, notebooks and diaries relating to the case of Mr. Kevin Taylor.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand from the chief constable that all possible steps have been taken to secure the material relevant to the case.

Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the Greater Manchester police as to whether he was involved directly or indirectly in the decision of the Greater Manchester police to investigate the affairs of Mr. Kevin Taylor.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No. The chief officer of any force is responsible for all operational matters.

Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what factors are taken into consideration when deciding whether a chief constable is the appropriate person to determine alleged serious misconduct by senior officers of his force.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The police authority, not the chief constable, is the disciplinary authority for officers above the rank of chief superintendent in police forces other than the Metropolitan police force.

BOM Holdings

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has received any representations about proposed land sale transactions by BOM Holdings plc.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No.

Homosexuals

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many men are currently imprisoned in the United Kingdom for consenting homosexual acts with males between the ages of 16 and 21 years; and what is the average sentence being served by such men.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is not recorded centrally.

Deportation Orders

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for each of the last 12-month periods from October 1986, how many deportation orders were found to be invalid subsequent to the signing of the order; and for what reasons and in how many cases the orders were revoked or withdrawn following representations.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: This information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate expense.

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for each year for which records are available how many times senior executive officers or members of the Home Office case working section have changed decisions to deport when they have been authorised by immigration inspectors.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A study of the cases handled by the immigration service between 1 August 1988 and 31 July 1989 has shown that up to 5 September 1989, a total of 22 of the 2,096 decisions taken by inspectors had been changed by members of the Home Office deportation section.

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for each 12-month period from June 1985 how many notices of intention to deport have been issued under section 3(5)(a) of the Immigration Act 1971 (a) for working in breach of condition and (b) for breach of limited leave to enter; of these, how many have been initiated by the deportation case working section of the Home Office; how many by immigration officers and/or inspectors; of the total, how many resulted in removal from the United Kingdom; and how many deportees were then permitted to remain.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The readily available information about the number of notices of intention to deport issued and the number of deportation orders enforced under section 3(5)(a) of the Immigration Act 1971 is published in table 24 of the Home Office volume "Control of Immigration: Statistics United Kingdom 1988" (Cmnd. 726) and in table 14 of Home Office statistical bulletin issue 45/89 "Control of Immigration: Statistics—Third Quarter 1989", copies of which are available in the Library.

The breakdown of information between overstayers and workers in breach is not available before August 1988. In the 12 months ending June 1989, a total of 2,666 notices of intention to deport were issued under section 3(5)(a) of the Immigration Act 1971, of which 713 were authorised by the deportation section for overstaying; 1,953 were authorised by inspectors of which 1,295 were for overstaying and 658 for working in breach. Information about these subsequently permitted to remain is not available.

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how immigration officers and inspectors obtain access to Home Office information and representations in respect of intended deportees; and when the officers seek authorisation from inspectors to serve a notice of intention to deport.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: In some cases information is available to the immigration service before inquiries are initiated. In other cases it may be obtained by telephone, or the decision will be deferred until the information is available. All members of the immigration service engaged in enforcement work are aware that they must not reach a decision until satisfied that all the relevant information has been taken into account.

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) of cases referred by immigration officers to immigration inspectors for authorisation to serve a notice of intention to deport for breach of condition or overstaying under section 3(5)(a) of the Immigration Act 1971, on how many occasions immigration inspectors have declined to give authorisation in each six-month period for the last five years;

(2) of cases referred by immigration officers to the Home Office deportation case working section for authorisation to serve a notice of intention to deport under section 3(5)(a) of the Immigration Act 1971, on how many occasions the case working section has declined to give authorisation in each six-month period for the last five years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: This information is not available.

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department to which Home Office office the head of the immigration service reports.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The chief inspector of the immigration service reports to one of the two assistant under-secretaries in the immigration and nationality department of the Home Office.

Immigration Act 1988

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many training courses or seminars have been held about the operation of section 5 of the Immigration Act 1988; when they were held, who attended; and what information was made available to attendants.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A seminar about the provisions of the Immigration Act 1988 was held in June 1988, attended by training liaison officers representing all immigration service ports. Local training seminars then followed and videos of the original talks were distributed for the information of all grades. In August 1988 a seminar was attended by deportation section staff and those inspectors with delegated authority to authorise the issue of a notice of intention to deport. This was followed up by a further seminar in June 1989 to review the operation of these arrangements. Immigration service law enforcement courses from September 1988 have specifically covered the deportation provisions of the Immigration Act 1988 and include lectures from senior officers of the immigration service and the deportation section of the relevant division of the immigration and nationality department. There have been nine such courses so far covering some 150 staff.

Risley Remand Centre

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library a copy of the full report of the Home Office inquiry conducted by the director of the prison service, south-west region, into the disturbances at Risley remand centre in May 1989.

Mr. Mellor: The full report was an internal management document, but a summary including the list of all the recommendations resulting from the inquiry has already been placed in the Library, and action taken as indicated in the reply of my right hon. Friend the Member for Witney (Mr. Hurd) to a question by the hon. Member for Warrington, North (Mr. Hoyle) on 25 July 1989 at columns 607-08.

Prisoners (Psychiatric Treatment)

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many prisoners currently on remand have been psychiatric inpatients; and how many prisoners currently on remand were unable to give a permanent address when the order for their remand was given;

(2) if he will give the numbers of convicted prisoners who (a) have received and (b) are receiving psychiatric treatment for the latest available date;

(3) if he will give, for the latest available date or whole year, the numbers of prisoners on remand who have previously received or are receiving psychiatric treatment, for each remand centre.

Mr. Mellor: The number of inmates who have received or are undergoing psychiatric treatment, or who were unable to give a permanent address when the order for their remand was given, is not recorded centrally.

Remand Centres (Suicide)

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list, for each remand centre, the numbers of inmates who committed suicide for each year since 1983; and if he will give similar figures for the prison officers.

Mr. Mellor: The table gives the numbers of inmates who have died in remand centres and local prisons in each of the last seven years, and in respect of whom a suicide verdict was returned at the inquest. The figures in brackets give the numbers of those inmates who were being held on remand.

Before 1 January 1990 no central record was kept of the causes from which serving prison officers died. The information requested is therefore not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Speed Limits (Enforcement)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance he issues to police forces concerning different courses of action to be pursued against motorists exceeding speed limits.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: None. The responsibility for enforcing road traffic law, including the speed limit, rests with individual chief officers of police.

Prisoners' Pay

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the basic pay paid to inmates in prisons in England and Wales; when this was last increased; and what is the highest weekly pay that can be earned by an inmate who is in full-time employment in a prison establishment in England and Wales.

Mr. Mellor: The basic pay, which is paid to inmates who are unemployed or incapacitated through illness or injury, is £1·65 per week. The maximum pay that can be earned under various incentive schemes is £5·55 per week. Rates were last increased in April 1989.

Violence, Drugs and Sex

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of people at present serving sentences in Her Majesty's prisons are doing so for offences which involve violence, drugs or sex.

Mr. Mellor: Nearly 50 per cent. in 1989, compared with less than a third in 1979.

Judicial Inquiries

Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the criterion in the past when independent judicial inquiries have been instituted to inquire into matters of national importance and interest; and whether these criteria are applicable in the matters appertaining to Mr. John Stalker.

Mr. Waddington: Successive Home Secretaries have reserved such inquiries for circumstances where the whole efficiency of a force is called into question, or where there has been serious public disorder, or some similar circumstance where wide-ranging and serious disquiet is felt about a matter affecting a large proportion of a force.

I do not consider that these criteria apply to the events surrounding Mr. John Stalker's suspension from the Greater Manchester police force and his subsequent reinstatement therein.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Haberdashers' Aske's Schools

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will take steps to ensure that pupils registered at the five north Lewisham sixth form consortium schools, who begin the study of any of their A-level courses at the Haberdashers' Aske's school in September, will be able to complete the second year of those courses without interruption or disruption due to the conversion of the Aske's schools to a city technology college in September 1991.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Haberdashers' Company has repeatedly stated its wish that the Haberdashers' Aske's city technology college, once established, should remain within the north Lewisham sixth form consortium. How this is achieved will be a matter for the governing body of the CTC and for the London borough of Lewisham.

Governing Bodies, Humberside

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to be able to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Beverley of 19 September 1989 regarding local education authority representatives on school governing bodies in Humberside.

Mrs. Rumbold: I wrote to my hon. Friend on 22 January explaining the current position.

National Union of Teachers

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on proposals to restore negotiation rights to the National Union of Teachers.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend held a series of meetings with the teacher unions, including the National Union of Teachers, in October and November last year to discuss new pay determination arrangements. He is considering carefully the points made to him then. Further meetings will take place in due course.

Collective Worship

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the representations he has received concerning collective worship in schools.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has received various representations concerning collective worship in schools.

National Curriculum

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the cost to the Exchequer of implementing the national curriculum.

Mrs. Rumbold: The cost of delivering the national curriculum will be met largely by the redirection of existing resources. However, we are giving local education authorities specific grant support to help with implementation. In this financial year, some £70 million will be available from the Exchequer through education support grants and LEA training grants to support some £100 million LEA expenditure for this purpose. This is in addition to general rate support grant which local authorities may use to implement the national curriculum.

Some £20 million of Exchequer funds will additionally be deployed on central expenditure on the national curriculum, including the running costs of the National Curriculum Council and the School Examinations and Assessment Council and the costs of developing standard assessment tasks.

Under-fives

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what submissions the committee examining the education of the under-fives has received; and if he will place copies in the Library.

Mrs. Rumbold: The organisations and individuals listed in the table have submitted written evidence to the committee. Most organisations have made their submissions public, but the committee does not feel free to make the views of individuals more widely available. In these circumstances it does not propose to place copies of the evidence in the Library.

Computers

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what conclusion he has reached on the proposals for the future for the computer board for the universities and research councils, issued for consultation on 15 September 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: The computer board is, like the former University Grants Committee, a non-statutory and strictly advisory body. The consultation proposals were for re-establishment of the board's functions with a new executive character within the Universities Funding Council (UFC); and for the relocation of the board's secretariat from London to Bristol, alongside the two higher education funding councils in 1991.

In the light of responses to the consultation exercise, particularly from the board and the UFC, I now confirm these proposals. Detailed arrangements will now be made to secure the change of status as soon as is practicable and, in any case, by not later than the date of the move to Bristol. As part of these arrangements, lead responsibility for supercomputing matters will, as recommended by the Advisory Board for the Research Councils, be transferred to the research councils.

I pay tribute to the achievements of the board to date in relation to not only universities but the wider academic and research community. These proposals recognise that success and, against the background of changes in computing generally and the development of university funding arrangements under the Education Reform Act 1988, pave the way for this to be carried forward into the 1990s.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when letters will be sent to grant-maintained schools setting out their capital allocations for the financial year 1990-91.

Mrs. Rumbold: Letters are being sent today to existing grant-maintained schools and those approved as grant-maintained schools from April 1990 setting out allocations of capital grant totalling £6·6 million for the financial year 1990-91. A further sum of up to £1·9 million is available to meet commitments and contingencies, including the needs of schools coming into the sector after 1 April 1990.

Following bids from the schools, £5·8 million of the £6·6 million is allocated to named projects and £0·3 million is for committed expenditure resulting from projects in progress before the schools became grant-maintained.

The remaining £0·5 million is being allocated through a small formula-based capital allocation for each grant-maintained school. Governing bodies will be able to use this allocation for items of capital equipment and small capital works which, because of their relatively small size, were outside the scope of the capital bidding system adopted for grant-maintained schools.

Priority in the allocations has been given to schools' most pressing needs, including projects related to the health and safety of pupils. The allocations will also help with the introduction of the national curriculum.

The following is a list of the allocations:

Capital allocations for grant-maintained schools in 1990-91

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Overseas Development Natural Resources Unit

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consultations he had with the users and clients of the overseas development natural resources unit, Chatham, prior to his decision to turn it into a statutory agency; if he will summarise any responses; and if he will state the effects on payments to and the nature of services profferred arising out of the change of status.

Mrs. Chalker: The decision to accord agency status to the Overseas Development Natural Resources Institute (ODNRI) on 1 April 1990 was based on careful study of the needs of ODA customer departments, which are the institute's main source of income, and of the likely demand for its services from other aid donors. The broad conclusion was that ODNRI had a continuing and important role to play in the sustainable development of natural resources across the developing world.

ODNRI's principal objectives as an agency will be to maintain its international reputation and comparative advantage as a source of multidisciplinary, problem-solving expertise; to reflect in its work the particular needs of the British aid programme; to undertake work for other aid donors; and to extend and strengthen links with scientific institutions and universities in Britain and overseas.

ODNRI will remain part of the ODA. Payments for its services will be based on the full economic costs of providing them. The institute's skill base and the services that it offers will depend, as now, on the demands of its customers, acting on behalf of the ultimate beneficiaries of its work in developing countries. The institute will be free to expand if demand for its expertise justifies this.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Planning Applications

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on how many occasions, for each year since 1980, applications for planning permission were refused by the Department of the Environment town and country planning division on the grounds of unsuitable road access; and if he will give details for each district council area.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 19 January 1990]: This information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

PRIME MINISTER

Hong Kong

Mr. Parry: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on her recent meeting with Dame Lydia Dunn and Mr. Allen Lee concerning the future of Hong Kong.

The Prime Minister: I had a useful meeting with Dame Lydia Dunn and Mr. Allen Lee, the two Senior Members of the Office of the Members of the Executive and Legislative Councils, on 23 January. I listened very carefully to what they had to say about Hong Kong's constitutional development. I assured them that we would take their views into account in taking our decisions about this important matter.

Travel

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Prime Minister if, pursuant to the answers given to the hon. Member for Christchurch (Mr. Adley) in the Official Report, 27 November 1989, column 92, and to the hon. Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce) in the Official Report, 1 December 1989, column 446, she will list those occasions since 1 January 1987 when she has travelled on official business on a British Rail train.

The Prime Minister: I have nothing further to add to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Christchurch (Mr. Adley) on 27 November at column 92.

ENERGY

Power Generation

Mr. Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy on how many occasions since May 1979 he or Ministers of his Department stated (a) in Parliament and (b) outside Parliament that nuclear-generated power is cheaper than coal-generated power.

Mr. Wakeham: Such statements are not recorded centrally, and the information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, I draw the right hon. Member's attention to my statement to the House on 9 November 1989, when I stated that "The Government have for some time recognised that our nuclear power is more costly than power from fossil-fuelled generating stations".—[Official Report, 9 November 1989; Vol. 159, c. 1175.]

Cash Limits

Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether any changes will be made to his Department's cash limits or running costs limits for 1989-90.

Mr. Wakeham: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimates, the following changes will be made.

The cash limit for class VI, vote 3 will be increased by £1,210,000 from £37,889,000 to £39,099,000. The increase is sought because of higher than forecast costs of staff, including some additional staff, and certain supporting services, partially offset by savings and increased appropriations in aid. For the same reasons, the limit on the Department's running costs in the vote is also increased by £1,225,000 from £38,122,000 to £39,347,000.

The increase in cash limit for class VI, vote 3 will be fully offset by a reduction of £2,100,000 in the cash limit for class VI, vote 2 from £289,488,000 to £287,388,000 and will not, therefore, add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Office of Electricity Regulation

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether any changes will be made to the Office of Electricity Regulation's (OFFER) cash limit or running costs limit for 1989-90.

Mr. Wakeham: I understand that a Supplementary Estimate will be submitted by the Director General of the Office of Electricity Regulation, who is accountable for the vote. The following changes will be made.

The cash limit for class VI, vote 7 relating to expenditure by the Office of Electricity Regulation has been reduced by £1,499,000 from £7,796,000 to £6,297,000. The running costs limit has been reduced by £2,653,000 from £6,320,000 to £3,667,000.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Defamation

Mr. Waller: To ask the Attorney-General when he expects the review of the law of defamation to be completed.

The Attorney-General: Good progress has been made with the review and my noble and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor hopes that it will be completed fairly soon.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Accountancy Firms

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the accountancy firms which act as auditors to public bodies sponsored by his Department.

Mr. Redwood: The following accountancy firms audit nationalised industries and executive non-departmental public bodies for which my Department is responsible:

Firm	Public body
BDO Binder Hamlyn	British Hallmarking Council
Coopers and Lybrand	National Consumer Council
	Gas Consumers Council
Ernst and Young	English Industrial Estates Corporation
	National Film Development Fund
	Post Office (and Girobank)
Grant Thornton	Hearing Aid Council
Peat Marwick McLintock	British Technology Group (NRDC, NEB)
Price Waterhouse	British Shipbuilders
Touche Ross and Company	Policyholders' Protection Board

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many of Britain's top 100 companies are audited by accountancy firms criticised by his Department's inspectors.

Mr. Redwood: This information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Insider Dealing

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether any of the individuals prosecuted in 1988 and 1989 in connection with insider dealings are accountants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Three of the individuals who were tried for insider dealing offences in 1988 and 1989 are known to have a professional accountancy qualification. In one other case where a prosecution was begun in 1989 the defendant has an accountancy qualification.

Company Prosecutions

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Redcar of 16 January, Official Report, column 187, how many of the 113 successful prosecutions completed since 1 January 1979 were commenced before that date.

Mr. Redwood: It is not possible to provide the information requested by the hon. Member within the time limit imposed on costs. The figure given includes prosecutions carried out not only by my Department but by other prosecution authorities, for example, the Director of Public Prosecutions, the Serious Fraud Office and the police and full records for these are not maintained within the Department.

Petrol

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to receive the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on the supply of petrol.

Mr. Redwood: The Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on the supply of petrol was received on 20 December 1989. It will be published as soon as possible.

Office of Telecommunications

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he proposes to make any changes to the running costs limit for the Office of Telecommunications for 1989-90.

Mr. Forth: The running costs limit will be reduced by £37,000 from £4,196,000 to £4,159,000 to compensate for an overspend in 1988-89.

Companies Act 1989

Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he proposes to commence any provisions of the Companies Act 1989.

Mr. Redwood: Parts of section 75 of the Companies Act 1989 came into force on 25 January 1990. These provisions extend the purposes for which information which is restricted information for the purposes of section 179 of the Financial Services Act 1986 may be disclosed.

Vietnam

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry why export credit guarantee cover has not generally been available for contracts with Vietnam since 1982.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 22 January 1990]: ECGD's assessment of individual markets is based upon economic considerations. It is not departmental policy to publish the full details of these assessments, but in the case of Vietnam, I can say that cover for medium and long-term business was withdrawn following defaults on repayment. Vietnam is currently in breach of its financial obligations to the International Monetary Fund and its major creditor countries.

WALES

Ambulance Dispute

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the ambulance dispute in Wales.

Mr. Grist: This is an unnecessary and damaging dispute. The offer made by the management side is fair and constructive and is the most the NHS can reasonably afford without cutting into patient services. It should be accepted and normal working resumed.

The industrial action being taken by ambulance staff has not so far affected accident and emergency services in any part of Wales. Non-urgent and outpatient services are however being disrupted to varying degrees. Day patients, particularly the elderly and infirm, are suffering as a direct result of this action.

We hope that the dispute can be settled quickly to avoid any further hardship to patients.

Supply Teachers

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many complaints about the pay arrangements for supply teachers he has received; and to which local education authority they referred.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Two. The local education authorities to which they referred were West Glamorgan and Gwent.

Fishing Industry

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will detail the total assistance given to the fishing industry (a) in Wales and (b) for vessels registered for the port of Milford Haven in each year since 1974.

Mr. Peter Walker [holding answer 19 January 1990]: Details of total assistance given to the fishing industry in Wales for each year since 1974 are contained in the published "Appropriation Accounts" covering the period; copies are available in the Library of the House. These publications contain details of EC grant aid for the construction and modification of fishing vessels and for marketing, processing and infrastructure projects associated with the fishing industry, as well as Government expenditure on harbour grants, grants for the decommissioning of fishing vessels and costs incurred on fisheries protection operations.

Assistance was given to Milford Haven registered vessels in two of the years since 1974, as follows:

Welsh Language

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list by grade those posts in his Department for which a knowledge of Welsh is essential.

Mr. Wyn Roberts [holding answer 23 January 1990]: The information is as follows:

1 Grade 7
1 HEO
2 EO
1 AO
2 Typists

In addition there are a number of work areas within my Department in which a proportion of Welsh speakers is very desirable. Staff are recruited and deployed accordingly.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list by grade those staff, excluding Her Majesty's inspectorate, in his Department's education division, whose duties involve the Government's proposals for the introduction of Welsh in the national curriculum who are able to conduct the full range of their responsibilities through the medium of Welsh.

Mr. Wyn Roberts [holding answer 23 January 1990]: No such criterion is used, but the following information relates to numbers of Welsh speakers whose duties include the proposals for the introduction of Welsh in the national curriculum.

1 Grade 3

SOCIAL SECURITY

Disability Benefits

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how he proposes to consult disability organisations on his plans for disability benefits outlined in "The Way Ahead: Benefits for Disabled People."

Mr. Scott: We have sent a copy of our proposals to a wide range of disability organisations and other interested bodies, including the Disability Benefits Consortium which represents over 250 organisations of and for disabled people. We shall take account of comments made during the course of our detailed work on the major changes we have announced, in particular the new disability allowance and the disability employment credit.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on what basis the Government estimate that 50,000 people might be entitled to disability employment credit.

Mr. Scott: The estimate of 50,000 potential disability employment credit (DEC) recipients is a tentative one, derived by examining the OPCS disability survey data to identify two main eligible groups:

(a) disability and incapacity benefit recipients not currently working but who, in response to the survey questions on employment, indicated interest in and capacity for doing some limited paid work, and
(b) disability benefit recipients who were already working but whose hours of work and earnings indicated potential entitlement to the DEC.

The final figure of 50,000 reflects further broad assumptions about the extent to which these people are likely to be able to find suitable jobs and to take advantage of the DEC.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assumptions are made about the level of disability employment credit in suggesting in paragraph 5.17 of "The Way Ahead" that the gross cost of the new benefit will be £80 million.

Mr. Scott: It is assumed that applicable amounts for the disability employment credit will broadly follow those for family credit, but precise details of the credit are still to be considered.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what his Department estimates to be the average costs arising from disability, other than those associated with mobility or attendance needs.

Mr. Scott: The surveys of disability carried out by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys (OPCS) found that average extra costs arising from disability ranged from £3·20 for the least severely disabled adults to £11·70 for the most severely disabled adults. The majority of disabled people have more than one disability, and OPCS found that it was not possible to produce reliable estimates of the extra costs attributable to each type of disability.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether the proposed age-related additions to severe disablement allowance will take account of recipients of NCIP and HNCIP transferred to SDA.

Mr. Scott: Yes. Our intention is that people who have transferred from NCIP and HNCIP will have the addition related to their age when incapacity for work began for the purposes of these benefits.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give (i) the extra expenditure and (ii) any savings for each year up to 2000 as a result of each of the main measures on disability benefits which he announced on 10 January; and if he will make further projections for (a) extra costs and (b) savings for each of these measures between the years 2000 and 2025 where these can be estimated in broad orders of magnitude.

Mr. Scott: The available information is given in the table. It is not possible to provide reliable estimates for each measure in every year, particularly in the longer term, since the costs and savings depend on a large number of factors which cannot be accurately forecast. The table therefore gives estimates for the next four financial years, together with projections of the likely effects in 2000-01 and 2025-26 The figures for 2000-01 and, in particular, those for 2025-26 are subject to considerable margins of uncertainty.

[1] Additional expenditure on Mobility Allowance for the deaf-blind is included in the Disability Allowance totals after 1992-93.
[2] Subject to decisions about the future of the Indpendent Living Fund.
[3] The net effect on expenditure on the Disability Employment Credit is difficult to predict and will depend on whether recipients were previously receiving out-of-work benefits.
[4] Totals revised upwards since the Autumn Statement to reflect a small downwards adjustment of estimated savings from the change in the Reduced Earnings Allowance. Totals may not equal sum of components because of rounding.
[5] Estimates for 2025-26 are rounded to the nearest £5 million, except in the case of ending new accruals of IVB additional pension rights where they are rounded to the nearest £25 million. Asterisk denotes less than £2½ million.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps his Department is taking to extend cold weather payments to include senior citizens, the sick and disabled who do not receive income support.

Mr. Scott: We are satisfied that the social fund cold weather payments scheme concentrates the help available on those most at risk from the cold and who are most in need of help to pay for extra heating.

DEFENCE

Aldermaston

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will make a statement as to progress by his Department's fraud squad on its inquiries into fraud on construction projects at the Atomic Weapons Establishment at Aldermaston.

Mr. Neubert: I have nothing to add to the answer which I gave to the hon. Member for Caerphilly (Mr. Davies) on 9 January at column 804.

Recruitment

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many men and women were recruited to the Army, the Royal Navy and the Royal Air Force in 1985, 1986, 1987 and 1988; how many left each of the services prematurely; and what the average length of service was for each.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Information on premature wastage is not readily available for calendar years but is available for financial years. The total intakes to the United Kingdom regular forces in financial years 1985-86 to 1988-89 are detailed in table 1. The total numbers of exits from the services under premature wastage outflow categories during the same period are detailed in table 2. The categories included in the outflow numbers are those listed in table 4.18 of volume 2 of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates" with the exception of "Time and age expiries or exercise of rights at option point" and for service women only "By exercise of right to give 18 months notice". Details of average length of service could not be produced without disproportionate cost.

Ambulance Service

Sir Alan Glyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what additional training is being undertaken and equipment provided for the ambulance service provided by the Army to bring it up to the same standard as the normal civilian ambulance service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: All service medical attendants receive basic training in medical skills. The majority of those assisting in maintaining a service to the public during the present dispute are full-time medical personnel who normally work in hospitals, medical centres and medical field units. Many of these men will already have been trained specifically to handle medical emergencies. Refresher and additional training has been given where necessary and additional equipment has been fitted to service vehicles to ensure that an effective emergency service can be provided to the public.

Colombia

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what additional sums are being paid to Special Air Service forces serving in Colombia as part of the anti-drug campaign; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is not the practice to comment on matters concerning special forces. Service personnel serving overseas receive their normal pay and, in addition, allowances appropriate to the country in which they are deployed.

HEALTH

Self-governing Hospitals

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which hospitals being considered for self-governing status, have academic, medical or scientific staff working at them with honorary appointments; and what arrangements he has made with the related university authority to ensure that the teaching and research work of academic staff continues and develops.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Until Parliament has approved the necessary legislation, no units will be considered for NHS trust status. However 190 units have expressed interest, including 80 which I understand are likely to be in a position to apply for NHS trust status in April 1991. A number of the units expressing interest include hospitals with significant connections with university, medical and dental schools; all of these might therefore be expected to have working at them clinical academic staff with honorary NHS contracts.

My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Health will continue to be responsible for the provision of clinical services for medical education and research. The NHS and Community Care Bill, currently before the House, empowers NHS trusts to provide teaching, training and research. We are also receiving advice from the steering group on undergraduate medical and dental education, which contains representatives of all the main bodies with responsibility for undergraduate medical and dental education.

General Practitioners (Complaints)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has any proposals to allow lawyers to represent patients in complaint hearings against general practitioners before family practitioner committees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: There are no plans to change the present procedures under which neither party may be represented by a paid advocate except where appeals are concerned.

Haemophiliacs

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health why the haemophiliac sufferers contaminated with the HIV virus have not yet received the capital sum promised them via the McFarlane Trust: and when he expects the payments to be made.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Detailed arrangements for payment of the ex-gratia sums announced by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Health on 23 November 1989 at columns 11-12 are being finalised. Discussions with the McFarlane Trust are almost complete and we hope that it will be possible to start making the payments within a matter of days. A further statement will be made as soon as possible.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Corporation Tax

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the cost to the Exchequer of introducing a nil rate corporation tax band on the first £5,000 of a company's profits; and what would be the cost if it were to be introduced (a) for companies in the first five years from registration for value-added tax and (b) for non-registered companies.

Mr. Lilley: On the assumption that a single £5,000 nil rate band would be available to a company group and would be divided equally between the members of the group, the direct revenue cost is tentatively estimated at some £100 million. This estimate is based on the existing distribution of taxable profits and therefore excludes the effect of behavioural changes. These cannot readily be quantified but they are likely to have a further very substantial effect upon revenue. I regret that information required to provide estimates under conditions (a) and (b) is not available.

Research and Development

Mr. Warren: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what were the amounts of money spent by the Governments of the United Kingdom, West Germany and France on research and development in industry, the universities and defence during their last financial years; and what are their spending expectations in each of these categories separately in their current financial years.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The available information relates to net central Government expenditure on research and development analysed by the European Community objectives, industrial production and technology, research financed from general university funds and defence. For the United Kingdom the information for 1987-88, 1988-89 and 1989-90 was published in table 7 on page 95 of the August 1989 issue of "Economic Trends", a copy of which is in the Library. Comparable figures for France and West Germany for the years available are given in the table.

[1] Provisional.

Drugs

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by how much the balance of payments deficit is affected by the illegal importation of drugs.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Illegally imported drugs are not included in the published data.

Companies

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much has been expended by the United Kingdom on the acquisition of companies abroad and on the acquisition by foreign companies of United Kingdom companies in 1989; and what are the comparable figures for each year since 1979 at constant prices.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The latest available figures are given in business bulletin "Cross-Border Acquisitions and Mergers—Third Quarter 1989." Figures are available on this basis only from 1986. A copy of this publication is available in the Library. Because the figures relate to transactions for which there are no suitable price deflators, values on a constant price basis are not available.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any proposals to review the overall position of charities in respect of value added tax; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: I cannot anticipate my right hon. Friend's Budget statement.

Inland Revenue

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether any changes are proposed in the cash limit and running cost limit for 1989-90 for the Inland Revenue.

Mr. Lilley: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate the cash limit for class XIX vote 7 will be increased from £1,234,973,000 to £1,237,173,000 and the running cost limit for Inland Revenue from £1,202,092,000 to £1,202,308,000. The change in running cost limit arises from a transfer from the Cabinet Office (Office of the Minister for the Civil Service) for challenge funding (class XX, vote 1) and the costs associated with the distribution of profit-related pay pamphlets (these are recovered from HM Treasury—class XIX, vote 11). The change in the cash limit also includes an amount for capital to provide for purchase of land in Nottingham for the relocation of London headquarters staff; this increase will be met from existing but unallocated public expenditure provision.

Customs and Excise

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether any changes are proposed in the cash limit and running cost limit for 1989-90 for Customs and Excise.

Mr. Ryder: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate the cash limit for class XIX vote 2 will be increased from £563,065,000 to £580,342,000 and the running cost limit for Customs and Excise from £505,620,000 to £505,897,000. The change in the running costs limit arises from the transfer from the Cabinet Office (Office of the Minister for the Civil Service) (class XX, vote 1) for challenge funding and the costs associated with a programme for the training of overseas customs officers, the costs of which are being met by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office (class II, vote 1) and the Home Office (class XI, vote 3). There is therefore no net increase in public expenditure as a result of these increases. The change in the cash limit also includes an amount to cover the costs of payments made or being made in respect of interest (or ex-gratia payments in lieu of interest) on repayments of VAT, the need for which I announced in a written reply on 19 December 1989 (Official Report, col 178): these costs fall outside the definition of the public expenditure planning total.

Revenue Support Grant

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the effect of his decision to bring forward payments of revenue support grant to local authorities on the central Government borrowing requirement in 1990-91.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 16 January 1990]: Assuming current interest rates, there will be an interest cost of less than £100 million to central Government in 1990-91, compared with the situation if grant were still to be paid according to the present rate support grant profile. This has no effect on the PSBR, since local authorities will save the cost of borrowing the amounts brought forward.

Aquisitions

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total value for 1989 of takeover acquisitions made by (a) United Kingdom companies abroad and (b) foreign companies in the United Kingdom; and what the comparable figure was for (i) five years and (ii) 10 years ago.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The latest available figures are given in Business Bulletin "Cross-Border Acquisitions and Mergers—Third Quarter 1989". Figures are available on this basis only from 1986. A copy of this publication is available in the Library.

Manufacturing Output

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the increase in output per head in manufacturing since 1979 together with the increase in output per head in the rest of the economy.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The increases in output per head in manufacturing and non-manufacturing between 1979 and the third quarter of 1989 were 53 per cent. and 14 per cent. respectively.

EMPLOYMENT

Homeworkers

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many accidents causing (a) minor injuries, (b) serious injuries and (c) fatalities there have been in the last 10 years to homeworkers while they were engaged with their work in their homes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: Injuries occurring in domestic premises arising out of homework activity are not separately identified from the generality of injuries to employees and the self-employed and therefore data cannot be supplied.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many representations he has received from right hon. and hon. Members since 1979 concerning the rights of homeworkers;

(2) how many representations he has received since 1979 from members of the public concerning rights of homeworkers.

Mr. Nicholls: Records show that 14 letters on the subject of homeworking have been received direct from members of the public since 1979 and 16 through Members of Parliament. Members have also sent seven letters on their own account. Ministers have also received deputations including a Member of Parliament on two occasions. It is not possible in the time available to state how many of the letters should be categorised "representations on the rights of homeworkers".

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the average rates of pay (a) per week and (b) per item made for homeworkers in England and Wales giving the most recent figures for each year since 1979.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is not available.

National Insurance

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the number of national insurance contributors paying the share fishermen's rate (a) nationally, (b) in Grimsby and (c) in Scotland in the latest available year.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I have been asked to reply.

During 1986-87, the latest year for which final figures are available, a total of 12,300 United Kingdom contributors paid the share fishermen's rate of national insurance contribution: of these 11,600 were in Great Britain. I regret that separate figures are not available for either Scotland or Grimsby.

Stockport

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what consultations Stockport metropolitan borough council has had with his Department about a questionnaire, a copy of which has been sent to him, being circulated by the council to the unemployed in Stockport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 19 January 1990]: The Stockport metropolitan borough council discussed the questionnaire with the manager of Stockport "C" unemployment benefit office and the employment service area manager at Rochdale, who agreed to distribute the questionnaire.

This needs to be set in the wider context of the overall reduction in long-term unemployment which has been achieved by activities of the employment services in Stockport. In the past 12 months unemployment in the Stockport metropolitan borough council area has fallen by 23 per cent, with long-term unemployment falling by 28 per cent.

Earnings

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, further to his letter of 11 January to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby, replying further to his holding answer of 19 December to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby, Official Report, 20 December, column 235, whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the percentage median, quartile and decile increases in weekly earnings in each case between 1972-79 and 1979-89.

Mr. Nicholls: Information is not available to compile statistics of the median, quartile and decile percentage increases in weekly earnings.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the percentage increase since April 1979 to the latest available date in real hourly and weekly earnings of full-time manual male employees in manufacturing industry and of full-time non-manual male employees in the rest of the private sector together with the increase in output per hour and per head in manufacturing and in the rest of the private sector or, failing that, the rest of the economy.

Mr. Nicholls: The real increases in average gross hourly and weekly earnings of full-time adult manual male employees in manufacturing industry from April 1979 to April 1989 (the latest available date) were 15 per cent. and 14 per cent. respectively. Figures are not readily available for the private sector less manufacturing and would involve disproportionate cost to compile.

The increases in manufacturing output per hour and output per head between April 1979 and November 1989 were 52 per cent. and 51 per cent. respectively. The increase in output per head in the whole economy less manufacturing between the second quarter of 1979 and the third quarter of 1989 was 12 per cent. Output per hour data are not available for sectors other than manufacturing.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Hong Kong

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many officials in the Hong Kong administration as presently constituted would be excluded after 1997 from office under the provisions of article 74 of the joint declaration.

Mr. Sainsbury: Section IV of annex I to the joint declaration stipulates that British and other foreign nationals may serve as public servants at all levels

"except as heads of major Government departments (corresponding to branches or departments at Secretary level) including the Police Department, and as Deputy Heads of some of those departments".

The Chinese Government have elaborated on this provision in the draft Basic Law. Based on the most recent reports of proposals by Basic Law drafters, we estimate that there are currently between 20 and 30 officials holding such posts.

Somalia

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps are being taken by the British Government to seek an end to the killing of political opponents of the Somali Government; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have made very clear to the Somali Government our concern about continuing reports of serious human rights violations. We have also made adjustments to our aid programme.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals he has to send a diplomatic mission to visit Somalia to investigate claims that the Somali Government have murdered civilians; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have an embassy in Mogadishu which monitors the human rights situation closely. We also keep in touch with other Governments and with NGOs about the human rights situation in Somalia.

SCOTLAND

Infrastructure Projects

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has received any representations from the Institute of Civil Engineers about infrastructure projects in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Institution of Civil Engineers has provided comments on the consultative paper issued by the Scottish Development Department on the routes south of Edinburgh study. These, and other comments which have been received, are currently being considered and a statement on the results of the consultation exercise will be made in due course.

Rents into Mortgages Scheme

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress has been made on the rents into mortgages scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: On 19 January, Scottish Homes, the body responsible for the administration of the rents to mortgages scheme, had received over 450 inquiries from tenants interested in purchasing their homes under the scheme. Twenty-eight firm applications have already resulted from these inquiries.

Since the launch of the scheme on 30 October last year there has been continued interest shown by tenants of both Scottish Homes and the new town development corporations. I am satisfied that good progress is being made towards encouraging owner-occupation among those eligible tenants who have hitherto been unable to consider purchase of their homes.

Roodlands Hospital, Haddington

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the current investment programme to upgrade the operating theatre at Roodlands hospital, Haddington and on the delay in recommissioning that theatre.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The investment programme at Roodlands hospital falls within the delegated authority of Lothian health board and the issue is therefore a matter for the board.

Home Improvements Grants

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has any plans to apply means-testing to the award of home improvements grants; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Government issued a consultation paper in May 1988 setting out their proposals for the reform of the present improvement and repairs grants system in Scotland. The proposals included the introduction of a test of financial eligibility to determine grant entitlement, so that resources could be directed to those most in need of assistance.

The consultation paper was the subject of many detailed and constructive comments from a wide range of bodies. These are being fully considered as proposals for a new system are developed, but there are no plans to legislate on this subject in Scotland for the time being. A further consultation paper will be issued before any legislation is introduced for consideration by Parliament.

Crown Office

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the Lord Advocate proposes any changes to the Crown Office cash and running cost limits for 1989-90.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The cash limit for class XI, vote 14 will be reduced by £499,000 from £26,798,000 to £26,299,000. This is the net effect of a token Supplementary Estimate of £1,000 and a decrease of £500,000 to offset the increase sought on class XI, vote 13 for Crown Office, Scotland: Crown prosecutions and legal services. Within this total the running cost limit for the Crown Office will be increased by £850,000 from £19,786,000 to £20,636,000. This is to enable the Crown Office to meet the cost of hiring additional casual staff, greater than expected salary increases, additional costs relating to tape recording of interviews with suspects and higher than expected costs of hiring temporary procurators fiscal. This increase is fully offset by saving on capital expenditure elsewhere on the vote.

Cash Limits

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he proposes to make any further changes to the cash limits for 1989-90 within his responsibility.

Mr. Rifkind: Yes. I intend to make changes to six of the cash limits and to two running cost limits within my responsibility.

As a result of expected savings on two services the cash limit for class XVI vote 2, agriculture services and fisheries, Scotland, will be reduced by £1,600,000 from £81,624,000 to £80,024,000.

The cash limit for class XVI vote 10, privatisation of the electricity supply industry, Scotland, will be reduced by £1,050,000 from £6,000,000 to £4,950,000.

The cash limit for class XVI vote 11, administration of justice, Scotland, will be reduced by £2,000,000 from £35,474,000 to £33,474,000.

Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the running costs limit for the Scottish Record Office vote, class XVI, vote 18 will be increased by £30,000 from £2,551,000 to £2,581,000 to cover increased accommodation charges. This increase will be offset by a corresponding reduction in the running costs limit of the General Register Office for Scotland, class XVI, vote 19 from £5,865,000 to £5,835,000. The cash limit for vote 19 will be reduced by £250,000 from £5,368,000 to £5,118,000.

The non-voted cash limit SO/LA2, which covers housing capital expenditure by local authorities and capital expenditure by new towns, will be reduced by £1,138,000 from £345,424,000 to £344,286,000.

These reductions in cash limits will be used to offset increases in other votes.

Team Sports

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to respond to the report of the Team Sport Enquiry Group; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 25 January 1990]: I will be responding very shortly.

Neighbourhood Watch Schemes

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many neighbourhood watch schemes have been set up in each of the past five years in (a) Greenock and Port Glasgow and (b) Strathclyde and Scotland as a whole; and what was the financial support given to these schemes by the Scottish Office.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 25 January 1990]: The number of schemes in existence as at 31 December in each of the last three years was as follows:

	Greenock and Port Glasgow	Strathclyde region	Scotland
1987	6	127	259
1988	44	475	629
1989	58	674	1,093

Figures are not available centrally for earlier years. However, I understand that the first Scottish schemes were set up in 1984, and the first schemes in Strathclyde were set up in 1987.

Neighbourhood watch schemes are set up by members of the public with the assistance of the police and are not funded directly by the Scottish Office.

Storm Damage

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the final cost of the damage and restoration work arising from the flooding and gales of 13 February 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 25 January 1990]: The costs of damage and restoration work fell on both the public and private sectors and no comprehensive record of them is held centrally. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland announced on 27 April 1989 that a scheme of special financial assistance to those local authorities which had suffered an undue financial burden would be made available on the same basis as had operated in England and Wales in 1987 (Official Report Vol. 151, Cols. 609-12). On 9 November 1989 my right hon. and learned Friend announced (Official Report Vol. 159, Col. 742) that a quarter of a million pounds would be made available to those authorities which had qualified for assistance under the scheme.

ENVIRONMENT

Waste Oil

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many waste disposal authorities in the United Kingdom have provision for recycling of car and motor vehicle oil; and what percentage of such oil is now recycled.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: This information is not immediately available but the Department is about to conduct a survey of local authorities which will cover, among other things, what facilities exist for the collection and processing of waste oil.

Community Charge

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the community charge in relation to blind people.

Mr. Chope: Blind people on low incomes will be able to claim community charge benefit, which can provide rebates of up to 80 per cent. of the charge. Registered blind people can qualify for community charge benefit at higher levels of income than other claimants because their applicable amount contains a disability premium. Blind people in receipt of income support have had their benefit increased to reflect the fact that they have to pay at least 20 per cent. of the charge. The Royal National Institute for the Blind (RNIB) has produced information on the community charge in Braille, based on a leaflet published by the Department of the Environment; and the Department is pursuing with the RNIB the possibility of help with the production of further material. Registered blind people may qualify for extra help under the transitional relief scheme if they have to pay a community charge but did not formerly pay rates or rent (or were not the partner of anyone who did).

Waste Disposal

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to make provision for a waste disposal authority to refuse a site licence when a landfill is proposed on a site of special scientific interest.

Mr. Trippier: This is a matter for the planning authority to consider as part of the planning application process. The planning authority should have regard to circular 27/87 which contains guidance on the procedures to be followed in considering any development on land used for nature conservation.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to provide statutory powers for voluntary groupings of waste regulation authorities to pool their skills and powers.

Mr. Trippier: Waste disposal authorities are already able to exercise their statutory powers through arrangements with other authorities under the provisions of the Local Government Act 1972.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to make it a condition for the issuing of a waste disposal site licence that the applicant has to demonstrate a certain defined minimum standard of waste management education, training and experience.

Mr. Trippier: The Environmental Protection Bill contains provisions for the waste regulation authority to refuse a licence to an applicant who is not a fit and proper person. Part of the test of being a fit and proper person is that the applicant would provide technically competent management for the proposed facility. The Secretary of State may prescribe, through regulations, the qualifications and experience required of a person for this purpose.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to make it a legal requirement for waste regulation authorities to conform to the frequency of site visits laid down in the waste management papers issued by his Department.

Mr. Trippier: The Environmental Protection Bill contains provisions for the waste regulation authorities to have regard to guidance issued by the Secretary of State with respect to the discharge of their functions in relation to licences. Such guidance would include advice on the frequency of site visits. The authorities will also be required to publish annual reports on their performance in relation to this guidance.

Property Services Agency

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many executive, administrative and support staff are currently employed by the Property Services Agency; and how many of these staff the Property Services Agency anticipate will be required over each of the next four years;

(2) if he will list the Property Services Agency requirements for executive, administrative and support staff over the next four years as projected in the business plans currently being considered by the Property Services Agency chief executive.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 22 January 1990]: At 1 January 1990 there were 5,912 administrative, executive and support staff employed in the Property Services Agency, excluding the Crown Suppliers. Future staff requirements will depend on the future workload.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Haddock

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what guidance his Department intends to give fishermen as to how they will reduce effort on haddock; and whether fishermen's organisations will receive a consultation document on any such proposals.

Mr. Curry: The fisheries Departments have issued a consultation paper to the industry about possible measures to bring about a 30 per cent. reduction in fishing for North sea haddock in 1990. The proposals will be discussed at a meeting with the industry on 29 January.

Transferable Quotas

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has for the introduction of individual transferable quotas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Individual transferable quotas have been operated successfully in a number of countries and I am investigating whether they would have a useful role to play here. If I believe that they could be adapted to our conditions, the industry will be fully consulted about possible schemes. No definitive plan exists at present.

Scallop Dredging

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research has been done on the effect of scallop dredging on the sea bed.

Mr. Curry: Scallops are principally caught off the western coast of Great Britain. The research undertaken by my Department has largely been confined to studying the behaviour of this fishery and the biological factors determining abundance of stocks.

Fishing Boats

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he plans to apply to join the EEC temporary lay-up scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: As the hon. Member knows, we are considering with the industry the measures necessary to reduce fishing for North sea haddock in 1990. Our proposals do not envisage financial assistance for laying up. A laying-up scheme does nothing to reduce capacity on a permanent basis and would serve to encourage marginal fishermen, who might otherwise have left the industry, to remain in it.

Irish Sea (Pollution)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if his Department has funded any research at the university of Liverpool on radioactive and toxic waste pollution in the Irish sea.

Mr. Curry: None.

Glis Glis

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on how many occasions during each of the last five years the Forestry Commission has (a) applied for and (b) been granted licences to trap glis glis; and what were the numbers taken in respect of each licence.

Mr. Maclean: The information is as follows:

	Licences applied for	Licences granted	Numbers taken
1985	—	—	—
1986	1	1	4

Goats

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has concerning the illegal slaughter of goats; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Goats slaughtered for sale for human consumption must be slaughtered in accordance with the provisions of the Slaughterhouses Act 1974 and the Slaughter of Animals (Prevention of Cruelty) Regulations 1958. Enforcement of the legislation is the responsibility of the local authorities. I am not aware of any goats being slaughtered in contravention of this legislation.

Gumboro Virus

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate of the number of (a) laying hens and (b) other hens killed by the Gumboro virus in the current outbreak of the disease; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Gumboro disease does not normally cause death in laying hens. Estimated losses to the broiler sector from the disease since May last year are in excess of 5 million birds. It is believed that more than 500,000 replacement pullets have also been lost.

Since 30 October last year, a less attenuated live vaccine has been available, for use under state veterinary service supervision. It is hoped that this may have a beneficial effect on the situation.

Eggs

Mr. Beith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many visits have been made by the north regional marketing inspector to retail premises since 1 January in connection with the marketing of eggs which have not been through a packing station; and in which local authority areas the visits took place.

Mr. Curry: No enforcement visits have been made for this purpose by the regional egg marketing inspector for the northern region since 1 January.

As previously explained to the hon. Member (Hansard 6 November, columns 468-69), enforcement of the EC regulations on egg marketing standards at the retail level is a matter for local authorities. The Ministry's egg marketing inspectors will provide assistance to local authorities on request.

Food Irradiation

Mr. Butler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether the studies available to him on the effects of irradiation of food include long-term populational surveys for potential carcinogenic effects.

Mr. Maclean: The studies examined by the independent expert scientific committee that confirmed the safety and wholesomeness of irradiated food included a number of animal studies extending over several generations. The extensive data reviewed produced no evidence of potential carcinogenic effects.

Cash Limits

Mr. Hind: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether it is intended to change the cash and running cost limits on any departmental Vote for which he has responsibility.

Mr. Gummer: Yes. Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the cash limit for class IV vote 2 (Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce: administration) will be increased by a token £1,000 from £38,225,000 to £38,226,000. The running costs limit for the board will be increased by £540,000 from £19,881,000 to £20,421,000 which includes £89,000 in respect of take-up of the full end-year flexibility entitlement as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 20 July 1989 (Official Report, columns 258-62). Provision for payments for agency services will be decreased by £523,000 and recovery of value-added tax in respect of capital items will be increased by £16,000. These changes reflect an increase in running costs to remove the backlog of external trade claims and a reduction in appropriations-in-aid, offset by reduced expenditure by the board's agents, principally as a result of the changes to the Community support arrangements for beef.

The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food cash limit for class IV, vote 4 (other agricultural and food services and support for the fishing industry) will be reduced by £2,500,000 from £148,931,000 to £146,431,000 and that for class IV, vote 5 (departmental research, advisory services and administration) will be reduced by £2,000,000 from £256,942,000 to £254,942,000, with a consequential reduction in the running cost limit for MAFF of £2,000,000 from £262,386,000 to £260,386,000. These reductions mainly reflect the tightening of the eligibility criteria for grant on fishing vessels and difficulties in the recruitment and retention of staff.

North Sea

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if the Government will make it their policy to bring an end to the dumping of chemical waste in the North sea; what countries bordering the North sea permit the discharge of industrial waste into it; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: It is established Government policy to terminate the dumping at sea of liquid industrial waste. The search for environmentally acceptable means for disposal of the wastes on land has been pressed forward urgently since the second North sea conference. The number of licences has already been reduced since 1987 by more than half; and the remaining licences will be terminated as soon as alternative means of disposal can be put in place. Important processes including the production of medicines are involved, and the necessary investment will often be high. Nevertheless I anticipate that most sea disposal licences should be ended this year or next.

All countries which border the North sea, or which border rivers entering it, permit the discharge of waste into the North sea.

The main sources of pollutants entering the North sea are rivers. Eighty per cent. of the riverborne pollution is from the continental rivers. Fifty per cent. of total riverborne pollution originates in the Rhine and the Meuse. For comparison the United Kingdom's dumping of liquid industrial waste adds no significant levels of pollutants to the sea.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisons

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he intends to make a change to the cash limit for 1989-90 for the prisons vote, class XI vote 2.

Mr. Waddington: Yes. The cash limit on the prisons vote (class XI, vote 2) has been reduced by £2,506,000 from £1,140,131,000 to £1,137,625,000 to reflect the reduced prison population and adjustments to the building programme.

Deportation

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether there have been any changes in the panel of three advisors appointed to consider representations from persons required to leave the country on security or political grounds, who have no right of appeal under the Immigration Act 1971.

Mr. Waddington: I have re-appointed the right hon. Lord Justice Lloyd as chairman of the panel and Mr. David Neve as a member. Sir Robert Andrew KCB has been appointed as the third member and Sir Mark Russell KCMG and Mr. Gerry Gillman as reserve members. I should like to record my thanks to the retiring members, the hon. Sir Patrick Nairne GCB MC, Sir John Garlick KCB and Mr. Edward Hewlett for their services to the panel.

Metropolitan Police Forensic Science Laboratory

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many times since 1 January 1989 scientists at the Metropolitan police forensic science laboratory have been unable to visit scenes of crimes due to understaffing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: I understand that since 1 January 1989 it has not been possible for scientists at the Metropolitan police forensic science laboratory to visit scenes of crimes on an estimated 16 occasions. The provision of specialist assistance at major crime scenes remains a high priority for the laboratory.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in how many cases since 1 January 1989 has the Metropolitan police forensic science laboratory had to decline to provide the police with forensic science reports, on the grounds of understaffing or overwork; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: I will write to the hon. and learned Member.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what proposals he has to attract more trained forensic scientists to the Metropolitan police forensic science laboratory; and if he will make a statement;

(d) what assessment he has made of the effect of restrictions in staffing levels in the Metropolitan police forensic science laboratory on the quality and number of investigations carried out there; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: Forensic scientists are not trained at first degree level. The Metropolitan police forensic science laboratory therefore concentrates on recruiting and training its own scientists and a graduate recruitment exercise is currently under way.

The staffing level for the Metropolitan police forensic science laboratory is set by the Commissioner within the total of civil staff whom he is authorised to employ. The ceiling is currently 216, which I understand the Commissioner considers to be appropriate to the amount of work undertaken; on 1 January there were 203½ staff in post. The impact of this shortfall of staff on the work of the laboratory, and the need for pay flexibility and other relevant management issues, are under consideration.

Police Pay

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what grounds he refused to implement in full the recent decisions of the police arbitration tribunal regarding the pay structure for police officers in England and Wales; and if he will reconsider his decision.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I assume that the right hon. Member is referring to the tribunal's award on police rent allowance, which provided the basis for a recent police negotiating board agreement. The decision of the PNB is a recommendation which my right hon. and learned Friend can accept or reject. In considering the agreement, we had to have regard not only to the interests of the police service but to the wider public interest. After careful consideration, my right hon. and learned Friend concluded that he should set aside certain aspects of the board's agreement. Draft regulations, giving effect to my right hon. and learned Friend's decisions, have been sent to the board for comment and we shall consider carefully any representations which the board may make.

Eastern Europe

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to review the definition of subversive following the political changes in eastern Europe; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: No: it remains necessary to protect national security from actions intended to overthrow or undermine parliamentary democracy by political, industrial or violent means. This does not prevent careful assessments and responses being made to any changes in the threat.

Electoral Registration

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to introduce regulations that allow voters to opt out of or opt into the sale of their name and address from electoral registers; whether he has had discussions with the data protection registrar concerning the sale of the names and address from the electoral register; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No. I refer the hon. Member to my reply to his question on 15 January at column 27. The data protection registrar was consulted before the introduction of provisions in the Representation of the People Regulations 1986, governing the sale of the electoral register in data form.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to take steps to inform voters of the fact that their name and address are routinely sold or disclosed from the electoral register for poll tax purposes; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have no such plan.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has plans to introduce regulations in order to protect the name and address of voters who may be vulnerable to attack if their name and address appeared on an electoral register that is available for sale or inspection by the public; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have no plans to do so at present, but we shall continue to keep the position under careful review.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has provided guidance to electoral registration officers concerning the inspection or sale of the names and address from the electoral register without the knowledge of consent or the voter; whether his Department has studied the implications of linking copies of the electoral register information to that of the census or to other large databases; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No, although the Home Office does issue guidance to electoral registration officers on all relevant aspects of the electoral registration process, including the provisions governing the inspection and sale of the register. We have not carried out any research concerning the combined use of information from the electoral register and the census or other databases.

Emergency Planning

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list by location the UKWMO to wartime headquarters covering links to county standby emergency centres.

Mr. John Patten: Where no direct communications link is provided between a county standby emergency centre and the relevant UKWMO control, arrangements are being made for an indirect link via the regional government headquarters to which the standby centre is, or is planned to be, connected.

Criminal Injuries

Sir Bernard Braine: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many claims for awards from the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board made in 1988 and 1989 are still outstanding; in how many cases such claimants have died of their injuries before their claims were settled; what are the reasons for the delays in settling claims; and what steps are now being taken to speed up settlement.

Mr. John Patten: On 31 March 1988 and 31 March 1989 respectively 77,965 and 82,520 applications were outstanding. The board does not keep records of outstanding claims by year of application; nor of the number of applicants who die before their claims are settled.

Greatly increased applications over recent years, expected to exceed 50,000 this year, have led to the build-up of a heavy backlog, which is causing delays to all claims.

We have taken concerted action to enable the board to reduce delays and meet the increased demand. The board's staff have been increased from 220 in 1987 to 330 now through local recruitment to a new office in Glasgow; we have appointed more board members; the board's internal procedures have been reviewed and improved; a major computerisation programme is under way; and we have amended the compensation scheme to allow the board among other things to speed up its operations by delegating decisions to staff and reviewing disputed cases on the papers. The terms of the revised scheme, which will take effect on 1 February 1990, were set out in full in the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Westminster, North (Sir J. Wheeler) on 8 December 1989 at columns 409-17.

Magistrates Courts

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his Department's responsibilities in respect of the administration of magistrates courts.

Mr. John Patten: The Home Secretary's statutory responsibilities are set out in appendix B1 to the report of the "Scrutiny of Magistrates' Courts 1989", a copy of which is in the Library. We are still considering the proposals in the report directed to the reconstitution of the administration of the magistrates courts service as an executive agency.

Green Goddess Fleet

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what criteria were applied in considering (a) the in-house bid and (b) external bids for the contract to maintain his Department's green goddess fleet of fire appliances;

(2) what was the nature of the tendering process for the maintenance of the green goddess fire appliance fleet.

Mr. John Patten: Twenty-four contractors were invited to tender for the storage and maintenance of the emergency fire service stockpile against an operational requirement prepared by the Home Office. Following standard Government procedures, all compliant tenders were assessed on the basis of value for money, and a comparison was made with the cost and efficacy of the existing in-house undertaking.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of the green goddess fire appliance fleet housed at Bruntingthorpe aerodrome is presently capable of being brought into immediate service.

Mr. John Patten: A total of 218 green goddess fire appliances are housed at Bruntingthorpe, and of these 215 (over 98 per cent.) are capable of being brought into immediate service.

Passports

Mr. John Carlisle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many passports are currently issued to Mr. Peter Hain; and if he will withdraw any issued under aliases;

(2) what measures are available to him to prevent British citizens from being issued with new passports under an assumed name without change of name by deed poll;

(3) whether he will consider introducing checks at airports and other places of departure in the United Kingdom to ensure that British passport holders have not falsified information in their passport application;

(4) whether the issue of an additional passport bearing a name differing from that on the original application and without change by marriage or deed poll is available to British citizens.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: It would not be appropriate to disclose details of individual cases, but the passport department does require documentary evidence, such as a marriage certificate or declaration by deed poll, to be submitted in support of passport applications involving a change of name. Although checks are made, it would be impractical to scrutinise in detail the passports of all United Kingdom citizens on embarkation.

Political Refugees

Sir Donald Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Home Department, pursuant to his reply of 8 January, Official Report, column 467, in what respects the criteria under which political refugees are now admitted to the United Kingdom do not meet the potential problems faced by people in Hong Kong.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The United Kingdom has placed no geographical limits on its adherence to the 1951 UN convention.

Magistrates Courts (Wales)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the future of magistrates court service in Wales.

Mr. John Patten: We are still considering the proposals in the report of the "Scrutiny of Magistrates' Courts 1989" directed to the reconstitution of the administration of the magistrates courts service in both England and Wales as a single executive agency.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 165

SESSION 1989–90

15th January—26th January 1990

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc, between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot therefore, be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Mr. Speaker and his deputies are brought together under the heading Speaker's rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Mr. Speaker and his deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Com = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
